REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 5th January 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Numb Copies i
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Condemns the system of giving appointments in the Covenanted Civil Service to Natives by nomination.

In a paragraph headed " The Statutory Civil Service," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 31st December 1883 says:—We hear that two kinds of proposals have been made to the Government of India on the subject of improving the nomination system of the Statutory Civil Service. One of them is that half of the annual selections should be left open to a competitive examination, the remaining half being disposed of as at present. The other proposal is that the Government should hold an examination to which none but young men of good social position shall be admitted. Those who rank the highest at such examination should have the allotted places in the Civil Service given to them. The recent settlement of the Ilbert Bill controversy is likely to put into the background all that has been said of late against the present nomination system. Anglo-Indians having got the right of a jury trial, it will matter very little to them whether the Native Sessions Judge or District Magistrate before whom a European British subject may have to be tried happens to be a Covenanted or a Statutory Civilian. But the interests of the public service require that the present nomination system should be changed. It is said that Professor Monier Williams has come to India with a view to mature some plan that will enable him to turn his Oxford Institute to some account in connection with this country, and the Native gentlemen whom he has hitherto consulted seem to think that the Institute might be utilized in connection with the Statutory Civil Service.

Makes suggestions about improving the capabilities of the soil of India.

The same newspaper, in alluding to the debate in the Supreme Legislative Council on the question of making pecuniary advances to agriculturists, observes that Lord Ripon is right in considering that agriculturists should solely derive benefit from the capital which they may have expended in improving their lands. The agriculturists as a class are destitute of capital, and hence it is absurd to expect them to spend money in improving the fertility of the soil. The Indu Prakásh is of opinion that Government should construct from its own resources such works as may be necessary for improving the capabilities of the soil, and the assessment on lands which actually derive benefit from such works should only be increased to the extent required to repay the capital without charging any interest in the course of a certain number of years. When this is accomplished, the enhanced portion of the assessment should be brought down to the original figure. Again, the land revenue settlements should be fixed for a period of sixty instead of thirty years, as is the case now. By this arrangement children will derive benefit from the capital which has been expended on their lands by their parents. If these suggestions are carried out the peasantry will be much benefited.

Requests the Agricultural Department of the Government of India to introduce a certain kind of phosphoric manure into the country.

In referring to the exhibit of solid phosphoric acid at the Calcutta International Exhibition, described in the columns of a recent issue of the Times of India, the Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 30th December observes that the acid is said to readily dissolve bones or bone-meal and thus form a highly valuable fertilizer. Now there can be no question as to large quantities of bones being obtainable in most places of any consideration in India at a small charge or for the cost of collecting them. Most people must be aware that bones and bone-meal form articles of export to Europe. Those engaged in the cultivation of wheat and other crops in this country, if properly advised, will not be long in availing themselves of the advantages which the use of the fertilizer above described would secure to them. They require to be made to understand at first what the advantages are and how to profit by them. The Agricultural Department of the Government of India will therefore be forwarding the objects of its existence by undertaking to initiate the ryots in the knowledge of the use of this fertilizer.

Causes of the good position which Europeans enjoy in India.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 28th December 1883 asks the reason why Europeans are worshipped by Natives. It is simply because they occupy high posts in the country and Natives are dependent on them. If Natives do not please them, they have to taste the bitter fruits of their conduct afterwards. Native princes even do their best to entertain and please European officers, who force them to act according to their wishes. If some prince displeases his Political Agent, he has to suffer for it. Native princes flatter European officers, for they gain their object by so doing. When such is the case with Native potentates, what must be the condition of the Native public? The latter stand in awe of them. Native policemen cannot arrest European offenders. Native officers are thought unfit to decide cases in which Europeans are concerned. Europeans enjoy great comfort in India, but in their native land they are persons of little importance.

Disapproves of gubernatorial tours as at present undertaken.

The same, in referring to the contemplated tour of Sir James Fergusson in Káthiáwár, says that while the Káthiáwár princes are making preparations to welcome him, their poor subjects are groaning over their ill-luck, for the money which is screwed out of them is spent on the entertainment of European officers. While their subjects are starving, strangers are handsomely feted. What good have the visits of Governors and other persons high in office done to the people? They move about and amuse themselves at the expense of others, neither attending to the grievances of the people, nor advising the princes to look after the welfare of their subjects. The princes recover the money which is spent on the entertainment of these officers by screwing it anyhow from their people. It is a matter for surprise that the Governor should not be aware of this state of things. It is all the same whether he goes on tour or keeps at home. The chief cause of undertaking a tour in these days is enjoyment. Alas! Will not Government attend to the welfare of the people of Káthiáwár?

Says that Mr. Dosábhái Frámji should not be permitted to decide cases in which municipal officers are complainants.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 30th December, in alluding to the decision of Mr. Dosábhái Frámji in the case of the Bombay Municipality versus Sadánand Shrikrishnáji and to the reversal of this decision by the High Court, observes that Mr. Dosábhái has been for several years past a most prominent member of the Bombay Municipal Corporation and has taken an active part in municipal affairs, and consequently it is natural that in deciding cases in which the municipality is concerned he should be swayed by the interests of the municipality. It is doubtful whether he would be able to act with rigid impartiality in cases in which municipal officers are complainants and poor people defendants. Under such circumstances it is desirable that municipal cases should be transferred for disposal to the court of some other Magistrate unconnected with the administration of the municipality. In Calcutta municipal cases are not heard by the Magistrate who takes an active part in the conduct of municipal affairs. It would be well if some similar restriction were imposed in Bombay. The defendant's pleader ought to have urged this argument when he argued Mr. Sadánand Shrikrishnáji's case before the second Magistrate of police.

Recommends a full-timed coroner for Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 31st December observes that it is notorious that the Coroner in Bombay makes great delay in coming to hold inquests, and consequently Natives are put to much inconvenience. Dr. Blaney enjoys a large private practice and cannot therefore afford to devote his time to the proper performance of the Coroner's work, which is gradually increasing. It is desirable that a full-timed medical gentleman should be appointed to the important work of holding inquests. The pay of the Coroner is sufficiently large to induce any medical practitioner to accept the place. If this suggestion cannot be acted upon, an assistant to the Coroner should be appointed to each of the districts of Colába, Fort, Dhobitaláv, Malabár Hill, Byculla, Parel and Máhim. This arrangement will be beneficial and will prevent the hasty performance of the work of making inquests.

Complains of the way in which the license tax is levied in the mofussil.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 3rd January 1884, in continuation of its article on the subject of the mode of levying the license tax in the mofussil, reported at page 8 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 27th October 1883, says that as a certain fixed sum has to be collected in each Collectorate it is evident that much injustice must be done in levying it. It cannot be expected that the talátis will not through fear act unjustly when they have to realize a certain amount from the villages in their charge. Such instances have already been published by the Hitechchhu. Government should not only think of the oppression caused by the sale by auction of the utensils of hundreds of poor persons for realising the tax, but also of the extent of dissatisfaction towards the just British Ráj amongst the ignorant classes. The Hitechchhu then refers to the case of one Hathisang Gopál of Visalpur and one Tarvádi Pránjivan Kásirám, a beggar of Sarkhej, and remarks that the reply of Mr. Reid to the petition of Tarvádi Pránjivan Kásirám asking to be exempted from the payment of the license tax states that he had paid the tax in previous years, while Tarvádi Pránjivan contends in his reply that neither was the tax imposed upon him in former years, nor did he pay it. Now the reply of the Collector cannot have been written without previously consulting the Mámlatdár. If the statement of the petitioner be true, the Mámlatdár has misinformed his superior. The Collector ought to hold a strict enquiry in the matter. If the tax has been paid by this beggar of Sarkhej in previous years, the list of persons liable to pay the tax and the office records will show it. If such be not the case, then the Mámlatdár, the taláti and the mukhi, who is said to be an enemy of the appellant, have misstated facts. Though the mukhi may have misstated facts, as alleged by the appellant, the Mámlatdár cannot be absolved from blame. At any rate a strict enquiry ought to be held in the matter. At Chor Barodra in the Viramgám district, one Karsandás Hiráchand, who scarcely earns Rs. 50 a year, has been assessed at Rs. 15 to the license tax for three years. Though he preferred an appeal every time, it was rejected and his utensils were sold for the realisation of the tax. The Collector and the Mámlatdár do not enquire into the ability of persons to pay the tax, but sanction what the taláti does. Thus much oppression is caused in the country, and especially in many parts of Gujarát. More than forty appeal cases from Dhandhuka were rejected some time back, and thus the appellants, who had come to Ahmedabad for the purpose, were put to needless expense. The same cry is heard from the Kaira Zilla. It is therefore advisable that this oppressive tax should be done away with as soon as possible. But till that time the officers charged with the work should be made to personally inspect the books of the persons liable to pay the tax and then fix the amount of the liability. The door of the civil courts ought to be opened for hearing license tax appeals. The Mámlatdár, the mukhi and the taláti should not be allowed to be present at the time of hearing the appeals, for they will not allow their own work to be undone and because the witnesses of the appellants are afraid of them. Moreover the officer who decides appeal cases should go through them carefully and patiently, and not despatch 40 or 50 cases in a day. As the time for the levying of the tax for the next year is approaching, it is to be hoped that Government will attend to this matter and try to redress the grievances of the people. [The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 28th December 1883 disapproves of the continuance of the license tax, and requests Government to include Government servants and professional classes in the list of persons liable to pay it.]

Desires an examination of engines and boilers in cotton-ginning factories in the Surat and Broach districts.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 30th December observes that Mr. Moylan, the Inspector of Steam Engines and Boilers, used to visit the mofussil every second or third year for the purpose of examining engines and boilers in the factories; but for a long time past nobody appears to have examined the factory engines and boilers in Gujarát. Cotton-ginning factories are multiplying in Gujarát, and in some of them old and worn out boilers are used. If a searching examination of these boilers is made, they will be found to be in a dangerous condition and will have to be condemned as unfit. The cotton season will presently commence, and it is therefore desirable that the Factory Inspector in Bombay should be deputed to examine without delay the engines and boilers of the ginning factories in the Surat and Broach districts. In some factories no certificated engineers are appointed to work the engines, which are entrusted to either carpenters or ironsmiths. [A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 31st December expresses similar sentiments.]

Complains of the conduct of the authorities of the Surat District in the matter of ascertaining the number of buildings injured by the recent floods of the Tápti.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 30th December states on the authority of the report of the Surat Floods Relief Committee that the account published by Government of the number of houses injured by the recent floods in that district was incorrect, since that number was smaller than that ascertained by the agents of the committee. This discrepancy was owing to the authorities having performed the work of computing the number of injured houses soon after the floods, while the committee's agents did this work some time after the subsidence of the waters. The authorities should have counted the number of dilapidated buildings once more in order to arrive at the correct figure. The committee also complains that the Mámlatdár of Olpád did not render any assistance to it in the work of ascertaining the number of dilapidated buildings in his táluka. Government ought to take due notice of the conduct of this official.

Complains of the conduct of some European artillery men at Surat.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 30th December states that recently one hundred and ten European artillery men arrived at Surat and left for Deesa the next day. It is usual to allow soldiers to visit the towns or villages in the neighbourhood of their encampments, but the people of those places suffer great annoyance from these visitors. The European soldiers take away small things from shops or the loads on the heads of porters passing through the streets. The artillery men mentioned above gave cause for complaint to shopkeepers and carriers of toddy. Military officers ought to take due measures to prevent soldiers from visiting towns or villages and playing pranks calculated to annoy inoffensive people.

Local Self-government.

Comments in connection with the amended Local Boards Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 30th December 1883, in an article headed "The Amended Local Boards Bill," says:—The powers of the local fund boards and municipalities differ materially. By Section 21 of the District Municipal Act the municipalities have the power of imposing a tax, toll or impost for raising revenue to carry out the purposes of that Act, and thus they can meet the demands on their purse by levying a tax so far as the exigencies of the case require. Section 42 of the Local Boards Bill gives no such power, and the funds of the rural boards have solely to depend upon the allotments made under different Acts. We have shown how the one anna cess levied on ábkári contracts was abolished by Government and what great loss it entailed on the boards. We have sufficiently shown the hollowness of the argument that an equivalent of the cess revenue was granted as a set-off. It is therefore wholly left to the sweet will of Government as to how much the district or the táluka board will receive as its income. According to the present arrangements it appears to have been decided that the district committee will decide what money the táluka board shall have for expenditure during a particular year. The táluka board will evidently have no voice in the settlement except through the representatives it sends to the district boards. We have already shown that this privilege of sending representatives is a sham and therefore the táluka board cannot reasonably be expected to guard its interest in the settlement of the portion of the revenue. In the preliminary paragraphs of the report the Committee observes that it is strongly in favour of securing a separate fund for the táluka board and would on no account abandon the principle involved, and the only precautions taken by the Select Committee are those embodied in Sections 51 and 47. Before allotting any portion to the credit of the táluka board the district board is to make deductions for education, for establishments, for general services and institutions, and for works devolving on the district board. It will thus be seen that the boards which are to be created as units for being trained up in the art of self-government will have very little to do, and we cannot understand how far this new arrangement will meet the objections urged against the system that has so long obtained in the department. The system of interprovincial finance has been completely followed in the case of the local boards. The Bombay Government will give the district boards no voice, and they in their turn will not allow the táluka boards to say anything. Thus there will be all through a rule of thumb. The grand principle for which we have been fighting is that the wants of the táluka must be ascertained and supplied in preference to those of the district, and those of the district in preference to those of the province, and thus the units being improved, the district and the province, which are the aggregates of those units, will necessarily improve. The principle of consulting the bodies before any settlement involving increased expenditure is made is fairly admitted, as appears from the reason assigned to the important addition made to Section 40, and we urge in the same spirit of fairness the Legislative Council will see its way to make a similar concession in the case of municipal and local boards so far as the transfer of medical and educational departments is concerned. So far as we can gather from the several resolutions published on the subject and from the Bill before us, Government does not appear willing to bind itself to make an adequate transfer of funds to the local boards, for it has stated in unmistakable terms that if municipal or local funds, even when supplemented by any provincial grants which may be given for specific purposes, are unable to meet the wants of the district, the only course open is the imposition of additional taxation. Thus in making the transfers Government is not willing to transfer to us the sources of revenue on which the departments depended for support, but it will make a grant for the specific purpose so that the permanent funds shall have to be found out by fresh taxation. We all know that the introduction of the scheme is an administrative necessity, and as such we must be prepared to be honest allies of our rulers in the task of governing our country. But because we become allies we must not fail to bring to the notice of Government other means of improving our financial condition. If the Bill is really intended to correct abuses in the past, to give the people a really sound political education, to improve the condition of the masses, and thus to rear up efficient units constituting the empire, Government must distinctly provide in the Act that no department will be transferred without transferring the necessary funds, as also to provide that when any department is so transferred the local boards will have the fullest control over it. If Government thinks that the boards are not yet prepared to accept such responsibilities, it ought to wait until they are.

Approves of the Bombay Local Self-government Bills.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 30th December observes that when the Bombay Local Self-government Bills are viewed in connection with the circumstances of this Presidency, the action taken by the Bombay Government in respect of the Bills would appear to warrant the opinion that the Governor in Council has given his best attention to the subject of earnestly giving practical effect to the liberal views of the Government of India. The principles of the measures initiated by the Bombay Government are as a whole deserving of the approbation of all knowing the Presidency and the condition and requirements of its people in the various districts. Sir James Fergusson and his colleagues have evinced great anxiety to make legitimate concessions to the wishes of the people and the views of their trusted representatives, so as to give the most liberal and popular shape to the new measures commensurate with the real well-being of the Government as well as the subjects. The knowledge of this disposition on the part of the executive authorities rendered pleasant the labours of the Select Committee in the matter of revising and suggesting modifications and additions to the Bills. The result is the able reports of the Committee and the ably revised draft Bills. And after the local Council shall have given the final touch to the draft Bills, the new scheme of local self-government in Bombay will be found to be of a character deserving of the hearty approval of sensible Native gentlemen.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Approves of the compromise arrived at between the Defence Association and the Government on the subject of the Ilbert Bill.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 30th December 1883 says:—The glorious concessions the Defence Association have obtained from Government by the compromise arrived at between them and Government are that European British subjects are allowed to have the right of jury before District Magistrates and Sessions Judges. What is in them to give cause for grievance or agitation to Natives? They are no doubt concessions, but we take them to be so many barren concessions. When the present fever has worked itself out, when the reactionary effects of the recent intoxication begin to tell upon them, these inebriates will soon find out that the concessions are mere outer shells of the oyster of the controversy for which they staked their honour and loyalty. The oyster remains, and that for the benefit of the Natives. They will find that in many parts of the remote mofussil the right of demanding a jury composed of the majority of Europeans will practically be void. The jury system must prove cumbrous and unsatisfactory. The District Judge or Magistrate himself will have to complain of administrative inconvenience with this form of dispensing justice. And there is no saying how far between him on the one side and the accused on the other things may come to pass calling for reform. The concession, in our opinion, is self-destructive, and we wish the agitators joy of it. Those of our countrymen who will calmly survey in all its bearings the present aspect of the controversy will, we are sure, find fair cause for congratulation in the settlement of this needlessly prolonged discussion. They have been done justice to by a righteous ruler. The disability which the evil genius of Sir James Stephen first created in 1872, and which alone has been the cause of the present agitation, has been removed. District Magistrates and Sessions Judges, European and Native alike, are now on a par as to criminal jurisdiction. This substantial grievance has at last been redressed. It is for the removal of this disability that our noble Viceroy has most suffered. It is this that has led to all the absurd and dishonest misrepresentations and base insinuations regarding him being sedulously circulated by the unprincipled. It is this that has led party organs here and in England to attribute to him a craving for popularity among Natives. Hence it is the bounden duty of our countrymen to accept with grace and gratitude the compromise now arrived at. The inefficient or unjust working of the jury system (for who is not aware of the vagaries of European jurymen even in our High Courts?) will lead to results the most beneficial in their own interests. Again, another direct gain must not be forgotten. As stated by a writer in the Bombay Gazette of the 27th instant, Natives must remember that if the Bill had passed without the amendment now proposed, although it would have placed European and Native Judges on a footing of legal equality, there can be no doubt that Local Governments would have abstained as much and as long as possible from sending Native judicial officers to districts where non-official Europeans were numerous, and thus Natives would have been practically excluded from some of the best stations in India. Under the present amendment there will be no excuse for such proceedings, and Natives will be able to get their full share of all the advantages of the service. We agree with this opinion. We further agree with the Bombay Gazette that Natives will make a political blunder of a somewhat serious kind if they unreasonably agitate against the present compromise. Against the general tenour of it there is absolutely nothing to be said. It is as good as it could be under present circumstances. No doubt there are some details which may require modification. For we are of opinion that the jury before Magistrates is a needless and impracticable innovation, and ought to be abandoned. And even if it is not abandoned, it will do little harm. Grant that it does, as the Statesman and other journals predict, the apprehended mischief will bring its own cure. Meanwhile we must have patience. Natives should place every confidence in Lord Ripon and leave him ample scope to settle minor matters. We dare say the Select Committee that will be appointed to frame the Bill for final reading will take into consideration the reasonable objections which various Native public bodies may urge with regard to the jury concessions. But what we would strongly recommend at this juncture is the expediency of avoiding anything approaching agitation. We must do our best to strengthen the hands of the Viceroy and his colleagues in the Council who share his views by confiding in the wisdom of the course he may yet take in modifying the Bill in the final form it must assume. We have gained the battle. It is meet the new year should begin in peace and harmony for all classes of Her Majesty's subjects in the empire. Let our countrymen refer to the constitutional history of England. If they will only recall the lessons taught by it they must soon make up their minds that a compromise is the essence of all great agitations leading to constitutional victories. Where there is evidently a grain of the admission of the vital principle, small matters of detail should be left alone, even though they be obnoxious. It is not given to even the most civilised government to have perfect legislation. Look at the Irish Land Bill. No doubt the Parnellites agitated a hundred times better than the Defence Association. Still they did not succeed in getting all from the Liberal Ministry. Can we, situated as we are in India, surrounded by a close bureaucracy which keeps all power in its grasp,—can we hope for better luck in this matter of the Ilbert Bill? Is it not enough that the disability is not only recognised but effectually removed? Let us therefore rest and be thankful. In their present Governor General Natives have found an impartial English statesman, who has, with a single-mindedness almost heroic in the variety of its incidents, led them on to victory at immense personal sacrifice. Constitutional rights are not won in a day or even in a year. The blood of the noblest sons of England was shed in the cause of liberty and equality in times past, and that from age to age. Compared with the privileges which the Englishmen of the present day are able to enjoy at the cost of the blood of their glorious ancestors the constitutional skirmishes of the Indians are nothing. Let our Native political warriors remember that theirs is a bloodless victory. And as such it is to be enjoyed with moderation and without any undue exultation at the expense of the party which has suffered the defeat.

Expresses approval of the concordat arrived at between the Defence Association and the Viceroy on the subject of the Jurisdiction Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 30th December says:—In the compromise now arrived at the first condition is that no distinction should be made between European and Native District Magistrates and Sessions Judges. We do not see what it is that we have lost. Is not the race distinction abolished once for all, and that too with the free consent of those that were ready to do anything in their power but submit to such an amendment? Has not, we ask, the principle that is to guide the policy of our governors, the principle proclaimed in 1853 and 1857, been re-affirmed in 1883? The other condition that attaches to the compromise is that the powers of District Magistrates under Section 446 of the Code of Criminal Procedure should be extended to imprisonment for six months or to a fine of Rs. 2,000 or both. As the Calcutta High Court has interpreted Section 443 of the Procedure Code a privilege has been conferred, and the British subject has a right to be tried by a certain class of Magistrates only. Has not then the privilege of being tried by a Magistrate of the first class who is himself a British-born subject being taken away from the Anglo-Indians? The two conditions then that have been attached in fact give us what the Bill promised, and we have no reason to find fault with the arrangement arrived at. It is said that the Anglo-Indians have been given the right of a trial by jury. Section 268 provides that all trials before a court of session shall be either by jury or with the aid of assessors, and the next following sections give the local Government the power of directing that the trial of all or any particular class of officers before any court of sessions shall be by jury. If we wish that we should have equal privileges with British-born subjects of Her Majesty, let us move the Local Government and ask them to give us that right. The Calcutta Statesman, who has been fighting our battles for the last 20 years, gave us prudent advice but we neglected it. Let us not do so now. Let us not grudge the Anglo-Indian his privilege of being tried by a jury. But let us fight on the same grounds for such a privilege, and we have no doubt we shall succeed. A wise adage says, "he who seeks equity must do equity." The Anglo-Indians fought because they did not want accused persons of their own race to appear before a Judge who was alien in race, language and manners. Let us now say we want the same, and ask the Government to grant us the privilege of being tried by our peers on the jury, as we all know the Judge is almost nobody in cases triable by jury. If we then justly acquiesce in what the Anglo-Indian has obtained and if we take time by the forelock and begin to agitate for a trial by jury in every district where we have a trial with the assistance of assessors, we shall have gained an important political right. There is again another point. The Civil Service question has arrested our attention, and if Lord Ripon has not settled the dispute and re-affirmed the principle, our Civilians could never have been posted to districts where there was even the smallest population of British-born subjects. Now let us see what has been urged against the so-called new privilege that has been conceded to our opponents. It is said that granting this privilege is nearly tantamount to giving them a right of being tried by themselves. In saying this we are sorry the advocates of Native rights are committing the same suicidal mistake in crying down the virtues of the Natives as a nation. There may be persons who from feelings of friendship or intimacy with accused persons may be inclined to return a verdict against their conscience, but these after all are exceptions, and such exceptions will be found amongst the best of human races. Can it be borne, we ask, if the Anglo-Indians urge that because there are so many Mámlatdárs and District Deputies there has been a failure of justice in cases where the accused or the complainant happened to be on speaking terms with them? We certainly would resent such an assertion. Lastly come to the unlucky position which the Viceroy has been placed in. If he had not consented to the compromise he would have been put down as obstinate. If he had favoured Natives by trampling down underfoot the petitions and memorials of the Anglo-Indians he would have been cried down as unconscientious. If he had favoured the Anglo-Indian cause we would have at once styled him another Lytton. Under all these circumstances then the arrangements he has consented to appear to be the only right solution of the difficulty. We know it is the expression "the majority of whom shall consist of Europeans" that is misleading the Native press. But we ask our contemporaries to pause and think over Section 460, and they will find that it is the existing law that has given the Anglo-Indian the right of having a majority of Europeans or Americans. If we are informed correctly, in jury trials at the sessions more than half of the jurors are Natives, and it is only in the High Court that the Native does not possess that right. Along with the appeal for an extension of the jury system to the districts, let us fight against the High Court anomaly too by asking the same right for us but not by attacking that of the Anglo-Indians. We hope this fair view of the position will commend itself to all our contemporaries, and they will try to justly defend the action of our popular Viceroy. As we have pointed out on former occasions, this is a crisis at which we must distinguish friends from foes and we must support our well-wishers through thick and thin. The Bengal zamindárs deserted the cause from selfish motives, and if the other Native subjects should be misled by the exultations of the Defence Association and peace with dishonour articles of the organ of the Calcutta zamindárs, then surely there is an end to all hope of good from a sincere Viceroy like Lord Ripon. [The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 3rd January considers the concordat as a shameful defeat for the opponents of the Bill. Though the Europeans have acquired a very large concession by the concordat, still it is nothing when compared to the step taken by the Viceroy for the political advancement of Natives. Looking to the present circumstances, Natives ought to be satisfied with what has been done and should thank Lord Ripon. But when Europeans are to be allowed to claim trial by jury, why should not a similar right be conferred on Natives as well? If Natives are granted this privilege, there will be nothing to object to on the part of Europeans or Natives.]

Approves of the concordat and the extension of the right of being tried by a jury of their own countrymen to Europeans in the mofussil.

In an article headed "The Concordat" the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 31st December says:—It appears from the articles and communications that have appeared in the Bombay Gazette on the subject that the right to claim a trial by jury in the case of a European accused will be limited only to serious cases, some special provision being made for summary trials. To the concession of a jury itself we think it would be unreasonable to object, seeing that it does not infringe the principle or affect the object of the Ilbert Bill. There is considerable force in the contention that Englishmen, who are accustomed to claim trial by jury in their own country, do not lose their right to claim it when they come to India; and seeing that criminal legislation here proceeds with the view of ultimately introducing the jury system in the mofussil, we see no reason to complain that Lord Ripon has committed a mistake in accepting this part of the modifications. But it would be ridiculous to apply the system to one and all cases without any limit or difference. The right should be extended only to such offences as are of a serious character, and not to those which are deemed petty. These ought to be defined. Guarded by such restrictions, the particular concession in question would, we think, be accepted by the Native public as a satisfactory settlement of the question. It is the fear that the concession may extend to even minor offences which seems to have led most of our Native contemporaries to view the arrangement with dissatisfaction. That fear, we hope, will prove groundless. Lord Ripon, we all know, is not a hasty or thoughtless Viceroy. For eight months he has braved the opposition of his foes with singular equanimity and firmness, and it would be unjust to assume that he has yielded to the Calcutta Defence Association in an impulsive manner and substituted an administrative evil for an administrative anomaly. Further the sting of the concession may be taken away by providing for a jury trial for all accused, European or Native. The right to ask for a change of venue is, according to the last declaration of Lord Ripon from his chair in the Legislative Council, to be conferred on all people alike. A similar extension of the privilege of trial by jury would, we think, disarm all opposition. Europeans cannot object to the privilege being extended to Natives, for obviously it does not inflict any wrong upon them. The Natives, on the other hand, would not resent Europeans being given the privilege when they are not put upon any terms of inequality. The fear that the trial by jury will result in a great many unjust acquittals will, we think, be sufficiently provided against by such precautions as the Bombay Gazette has suggested, and by the power of the presiding Judge or Magistrate to refer a case to the High Court whenever he may differ from the verdict. At all events, however much we may regret that Government should have concluded what has been called by our Calcutta brother of the Patriot a peace with dishonour with a body of people whose proceedings have all along been characterized by a disregard and contumeliousness for established authority and personal rancour for Her Majesty's representative in this country, we must not allow ourselves to be carried away by the heat of the moment and to forget what has been done and suffered by Lord Ripon for our sake. If His Excellency has thought it necessary in the interests of good government to yield to the importunate demands of his Councillors, we must abide by his judgment and try to support him. We must rejoice that a way has been found for a reconciliation between the Government and the Anglo-Indian community, and hope that it will suffice to heal the unhappy breaches that have been caused by irresponsible agitators. In this connection we cannot help expressing a regret that Sir Evelyn Baring was so early lost to India. If our late Finance Minister had been still at his post, we doubt not that the Viceroy's hands would have been considerably strengthened. We trust his successor will not verify the prophecy made about him by the Calcutta Statesman. But to return to our subject, we trust our community will not allow itself to be betrayed into taking any steps which may at all savour of ingratitude or may distress Lord Ripon and dishearten him from proceeding with his schemes of reform for our country.

Approves of the concordat arrived at in regard to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In alluding to the concordat arrived at in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 30th December observes that the Bill in its latest modified form ought to be accepted by all sensible and moderate politicians and others as a piece of liberal and progressive legislation. It would be idle to deny that the Bill will contain a flaw that will stand partially in the way of its being smoothly worked in practice. But that is a drawback which cannot of itself be held as forming a good reason for condemning the measure itself or the Government that has consented to put up with it until the arrival of the time when the mending of it should become practicable. In the meanwhile all concerned must feel thankful that it has been found possible to pass the measure without running the risk of the consequences which a defiant disregard of the powerful and determined opposition arrayed against it both in England and India might have entailed. The Natives will get all that is as yet practically possible for them to get and for the Government to vouchsafe to them. The Europeans will obtain and secure all that the Government with due regard to their circumstances, feelings and sentiments can reasonably concede to them in the present day. The Government will have the satisfaction that its forbearance and patience have been rewarded in its being able to uphold its dignity and to satisfy all moderate parties amongst the people with regard to what seemed to many till recently as likely to continue to breed long enduring mischief, to the prejudice of the best interests of India and England. The Viceroy deserves above all the hearty congratulations and sincere thanks of all affected by the Bill. Throughout the bitter controversy in respect of the measure His Lordship has most loyally, courageously and patiently preserved the attitude of a wise, far-sighted, firm and forbearing British statesman. He has honourably kept faith with the people of England, the people of India, and the great principles of the bond which unites the two countries for the common benefit of both. The opposition made by a class of Europeans has been overcome, and the opponents have been induced at least to concede the vital principle of the Bill while trying hard to secure to the Natives the just concession of extended jurisdiction. Lord Ripon and the members of his Government could not forget the teachings of sage experience that in the matter of such important legislative measures, for the sake of the essential principle small sacrifices in respect of the details have, if not generally, often to be made. In the present case the sacrifice made, though seemingly great, is in reality trivial. The concession of trial by jury in regard to European prisoners is comparatively unimportant. It is true that this concession may possibly prove the cause of some inconvenience in practice, and at times render the course of justice unsatisfactory. But this is one of those drawbacks which are often, if not as a rule, inseparable from all laws and measures of Government passed under circumstances similar to those of the Ilbert Bill. People must therefore be content with the partial drawback, seeing that a great gain has been secured. The defect will doubtless mend itself in due course. As for the propriety of the concession the necessity of passing the Bill with the chance of the least possible future inconvenience to the Government, risk to the Natives and dissatisfaction to the Europeans pointed it out as being unimpeachable. Trial by jury is an institution dearly valued by Englishmen and intimately associated with all their traditions and history as the bulwark of their safety. When consenting to submit to the jurisdiction of the Natives in a foreign land, if the Europeans in the mofussil, who are mostly of the artizan and working classes, show a disposition to cling to the institution which they think is of essential importance for securing justice to them, it would have been, especially under present circumstances, neither gracious nor expedient to deny them the privilege, however people in India might think differently as to the utility of juries. And it would have been particularly wrong in the Government to have refused the concession in the present case, as the refusal would have led the opponents of the Bill to refuse to accept any compromise and to persist in their tactics until the Bill would have been either abandoned or repealed after being passed into law. What is then to disprove the supposition that in the event of no concession being made to the opposition the present Viceroy might have found himself in a minority in the Council when attempting to pass the Bill on the lines of his last speech, or that after his being able to pass it against all opposition on a change of the ministry the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Act might be repealed in future in the same manner as the Press Act of Lord Lytton's Government? Such a contingency is now happily precluded owing to the adhesion of the Europeans to the passing of the measure in the form given to it by the latest compromise, queerly called concordat. The Government will now be spared all the inconvenience and annoyance which the prevalence of race antagonism and class animosities incidental to the passing of the measure in defiance of the strong and persistent European opposition might have entailed. They will after passing the Bill be free to turn their attention to the performance of more important work with the aid of the united support of all classes of the community. It was the able and thoughtful Governor in Council of Bombay who may be said to have first suggested the practical plan upon which the compromise now agreed to by all parties to the Bill is mainly based.

Gives arguments in favour of the concordat in the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 30th December considers that the European opponents of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill have not gained as great a victory as they believe they have by accepting the concordat. They stoutly asserted that they would not submit to be tried by Native Magistrates and Judges and demanded that the Bill should be withdrawn. By accepting the compromise the European British subjects have consented to be tried by Native Magistrates and Judges and thus the principle of the Bill is preserved. The privilege of being tried by a jury of their own countrymen is not a new concession, since it existed under the old law. And even if it be held to be new, the advantage is not material, because whenever the trying Magistrate or Judge may differ from the verdict of the jury he will submit the case to the High Court, which will decide it without the assistance of a jury. Moreover it would be difficult to convene a jury of Europeans in the mofussil, and thus a longer time would be consumed in the disposal of the case by a jury than if it were decided by the trying Magistrate or Judge alone. And sometimes the European British subject would under such circumstances prefer to be tried by the Magistrate or Judge alone. [The Yajdán Parast (127) and the Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Strongly advises Natives to support the concordat arrived at between Government and the Defence Association in regard to the Ilbert Bill.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 30th December says:—The so-called "concordat" between the Defence Association and the Government of India is now pretty familiar to us all, and it is attracting the attention which it deserves from all sections of the Anglo-Indian press. The public have also seen in the columns of the Bombay Gazette a statement of the reasons which led the Government to accept this concordat, and if that statement may be relied on, as it seems it may, we are in a position to form a fairly correct idea of the action of the Government of India in the matter. That statement tells us that the first step towards the concordat came from, not the Government of India as was at first supposed, but from the leaders of the irreconcilables of Calcutta. One point, therefore, touching the dignity of the Government of Lord Ripon is thus satisfactorily cleared up. As to the merits of the concordat itself, we are entirely at one with the expressed opinions of our countrymen everywhere that it is not in itself a perfectly satisfactory one. But in the great adjustments of opposing forces and considerations which constitute political life it is not easy to get any particular adjustment that will satisfy all parties. And we confess that after bestowing upon the concordat that calm consideration which is due to it, and after taking into account the past history and the present condition of this great practical problem of the Ilbert Bill, we are on the whole inclined to give our very humble but very emphatic support to Lord Ripon's Government. For what is the effect of the concordat? Native Magistrates and Sessions Judges will now have jurisdiction to preside over trials of European British subjects. This was the principle of the Bill, as stated officially when it was introduced. That principle, therefore, remains untouched. And it seems to us impossible to deny that this is a point gained in this controversy. But it is said that as there is to be a jury to try the accused in such cases this supposed power is a mere shadow. Well, first, assuming it to be so, the time may come when it shall become a very substantial power. But secondly, we deny that it is a shadow. Under the Code the Magistrate or Sessions Judge would in a case of a perverse verdict be at liberty to send up the case to the High Court, and there the power of the local Magistrate at once assumes a very substantial aspect. Again it is objected that in getting rid of one anomaly, the Bill under this concordat is introducing another, inasmuch as it makes a distinction between Native and European accused persons. This is quite true. But it must not be forgotten that this is not a difference now created for the first time. This difference has been hitherto recognised by law, and our only complaint therefore can be but a negative one, that this difference between accused persons has not been abrogated. Well, we would say to those who may be inclined to make this complaint that the Bill even as originally published did not profess to abrogate all distinctions of race, though the opponents of the Bill very disingenuously asserted that it did. And a further reply to this complaint would be that the progress of law reform must remove this difference too. It does not follow because the difference is not now removed that it is not to be removed when the next step in improvement can be taken. Lastly it is objected that a jury trial by a Magistrate is unprecedented. So it is, no doubt. There is no virtue in the name Sessions Judge superior to the virtue of the name District Magistrate, and if this privilege is confined, as the statement above referred to confines it, only to "serious cases," then we venture to think there will be nothing whatever in this objection also. On these grounds, although we hold that the proposed change is not likely to prove a workable one, we think our countrymen will do well to accept it now. But above all we would ask our countrymen to remember that it is Lord Ripon's Government which is accepting this compromise. That Government has a strong claim on our gratitude. Let us then give a tangible proof of the grateful feelings we entertain towards Lord Ripon by now accepting in our persons what he may be said in a manner to have accepted on our behalf. Now that the uneasiness caused by the first impact, so to say, of the announcement of the concordat has given place to sober and cool reflection, we think there ought to be no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that on the whole, and under the circumstances which exist, we ought all to support Lord Ripon's Government. We have reason to believe that some of our fellow-citizens, and some also of our friends in Calcutta, have arrived at that conclusion and are taking measures accordingly.

Says that the privilege of trial by jury should be extended to most districts in the Bombay Presidency.

In a paragraph headed "The Ilbert Bill Concordat," the Native Opinion (10) of the 30th December says:—There is hardly any definite news regarding the alleged concordat. Looking, however, to our surrounding circumstances and to the position of Lord Ripon's Government, we should not be surprised that if perchance some of the higher authorities in India or England betake themselves to the cave of Adullam Lord Ripon may be constrained in spite of himself to make some concessions in order to save the principle of the Bill. In such an event we should still counsel all our well-wishers in Western India to rely upon His Lordship and his Government, who will try to do the best they can for the general cause. Trial by jury is not an exotic in this country, and those who like to study its history may do well to refer to the replies which Mountstuart Elphinstone obtained and circulated between 1820-1825. The object was also noticed by more than one Parliamentary Commission. It occurs to us, however, that this subject is one for the executive Government and need not go before the Legislature. For the present law gives ample power to Government to introduce trial by jury, and we hope the Bombay Government will soon use that power, at least in the advanced districts.

Strongly condemns the concordat arrived at between Government and the Defence Association regarding the Ilbert Bill.

The Arunodayă (14) of the 30th December says that it is well that some understanding has been arrived at between Government and the Defence Association regarding the Ilbert Bill. One result, however, of the tremendous controversy which has been raging for several months is worthy of notice. When the duty on the cotton goods imported into India was abolished it became evident that the real governors of India were the cotton merchants of Manchester and not the Queen, the Secretary of State or the Viceroy. Similarly from the concordat arrived at between Government and the Defence Association it is pretty clear that the real masters of India are the European indigo-planters in Bengal, and that the Secretary of State and the Viceroy are of little account and are as it were their agents. The European planters protested against being made amenable to the jurisdiction of Native District Magistrates and Judges, but they never asked that the jurisdiction at present possessed by European District Magistrates and Judges over European criminals should be taken away from them and that the guilt of the latter should be left to be judged by an ignorant European jury. It would seem as if all European culprits are to enjoy the benefit of being tried by a jury composed for the major part of their own countrymen. One serious drawback to this arrangement will be that in districts where Europeans in sufficient numbers cannot be found to form a jury, the trial of European culprits will have to be transferred to other places and thus the principal aim of giving speedy and cheap justice will be defeated. Again in the indigo-planting districts an accused European will have the advantage of being tried by his own friends and relations instead of by an impartial Judge. The Arunodayă is surprised that Lord Ripon could have acquiesced in an arrangement leading to such lamentable results. The opinions of the 250 millions of the people of India have been altogether disregarded. [The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 28th and the Surat Ákhbár (83) of the 31st December 1883 condemn the concordat. The Samsher says that the Government has committed a mistake in attaching much weight to the opposition against the Bill. Lord Ripon has shown weak-mindedness and has disappointed the Natives, who had placed confidence in him. The object of the Bill has not been carried out. It would have been better if the Bill had been dropped. Race distinctions have been increased instead of being lessened. The prospect of the fulfilment of the Queen's Proclamation has become distant. Natives ought to make a strong protest against the concordat. The Surat Ákhbár says that the right of trial by jury should also be granted to Natives.]

Gives reasons for the condemnation of the concordat in the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 30th December observes that there was no necessity for the concordat in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, which has been accepted simply to satisfy the seditious European British subjects. The Europeans did not ask for what was just and reasonable, but only supported their demand with threats, insults and sedition. The Bill was intended to do some little justice to Natives, but the concordat has made the concession merely nominal. It will depend entirely on the pleasure of the successor of Lord Ripon whether to extend the nominal concession so as to make it a real boon or to let it remain a dead letter. It is true that the concordat will put the European and the Native Judge on the same level, but this equality has been obtained by depriving the former of substantial power and by conceding to the latter a nominal authority. The Native Judge will have the power of trying an accused European, but not of judging of his guilt or innocence, because that will be done by a jury composed of his own countrymen. Frequently the European jury will commit injustice by giving a verdict of "not guilty," as has happened many times before this. Such injustice will continue to be perpetrated so long as Europeans consider Natives degraded and despise them. The Native Judge will of course possess the power of sending up the case to the High Court whenever he may happen to differ from the verdict given by a European jury, but the Native public will not for some time at least look with confidence upon the decisions of that Court, because the High Court Judges have cut a bad figure in connection with the Jurisdiction Bill. The right of trial by jury that is to be conceded to European British subjects was never asked by them. It will create between Europeans and Natives an invidious race distinction. The concordat will remove the existing unjustifiable distinction between European and Native Judges, but will at the same time create a similar distinction between the European and Native prisoners. It is preferable that this distinction should exist between the former than between the latter. It would have been better if the Bill had been withdrawn than that it should be passed in the modified form given to it by the concordat. The European British subject is to get the right of trial by jury because the Native Judge is to be clothed with the power of trying him, and this establishes that Natives are not fit to get the extended jurisdiction. [The Gujaráti (101), the Gujarát Mitră (80), and the Satyă Mitră (118) of the same date and the Ákhbáre Sodágar (86) of the 31st December express some of the above sentiments with more or less bitterness. They all attach no blame to the Viceroy, with whom they sympathise for having had to submit to adverse circumstances by accepting the concordat.]

Says that the Councillors of the Imperial Legislative Council have done wrong in bringing about the concordat in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 30th December observes that the true history of the concordat in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill was furnished by the Calcutta correspondent of the Pioneer and it has not been contradicted. This history proves that the compromise was brought about by a confederacy of the members of the Imperial Legislative Council, who were induced by the fear and annoyance of the opposition to bring about the concordat. It was objectionable to arrive at any compromise; it was not right that legislators should have come to an agreement with a handful of unruly Anglo-Indians before proceeding to give their vote on an important legislative measure which concerned the whole Indian Empire. It is to be regretted that the Councillors should have come to an agreement to withdraw at the last moment their support to a measure of vital importance, supported as it was by a majority of them. They have set a dangerous example by giving in to a fear of unruly Europeans, who spoke of creating a rebellion. The people have become sore afraid that by this conduct of the Councillors their rights and privileges as well as their security are endangered. Thus lawlessness has gained success in the end.

The result of the agitation of Europeans against the Ilbert Bill and remarks in connection therewith.

In a paragraph headed "A Lesson from the Ilbert Bill Agitation," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 31st December says:—In discussing the character of the concordat between the Government of Lord Ripon and the Calcutta Defence Association, some of our contemporaries have expressed their conviction that after all this furious agitation and unseemly exhibition of their temper by the opponents of the Ilbert Bill and the more loyal and law-abiding attitude of the Natives the gain of the former is greater than the privilege conceded to the latter as the outcome of the Ilbert Bill. The Government, it is urged, were advised not to withdraw the Bill lest such withdrawal should act as an incentive to intimidating agitations and furious opposition in future, but the very thing the Government were asked to prevent has been attained by the "concordat." The agitation of Mr. Atkins (it is further said) and the manœuvres of the Calcutta Defence Association have ended in success; and instead of suffering for their sins the agitators have profited virtually from the firmness of their tactics. It must be recollected, however, that it is easier to say that a Government should not pay any heed to combined agitations, such as we have recently witnessed, than to carry out the theory in all its strictness. The Native public, so far from drawing a lesson of despair from recent events, ought to use the experience of the last eight months to some better account. They may rest assured that if they learn to agitate in the way that their Anglo-Indian fellow-subjects have of late done, no Viceroy, however hostilely disposed towards their interests, would deem it expedient to act in spite of their voice. The organising force of political associations should as far as possible be increased. We do not mean of course that the scandalous methods of opposition employed by the Calcutta alarmists, their system of terror, and their savage and disreputable conduct towards the Viceroy are at all worthy of our imitation. It would be highly impolitic to imitate the doings of those whom the Calcutta Defence Association represents in their interest. But their spirit of union and of persistent agitation claim our very particular study. Why should we regret that that spirit of union and agitation has ended in success for those who have shown it when it is possible for us to act likewise when placed under similar circumstances?

Says that Sir Bartle Frere's letter against the Ilbert Bill has ruined his official reputation.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 30th December 1883 says:—It is painful to have to review that very injudicious letter which Sir Bartle Frere addressed to the British India Committee on the Ilbert Bill. It has been known for a long time that there is not much to choose between Sir Bartle Frere and Sir Richard Temple. Both bade for popularity while in India. Both flattered the vanity of the people and coquetted with their nobler feelings in order that incense might be burnt ad libitum at the shrine of the burra sáhibs. In their game both succeeded beyond their most sanguine expectations. Each has had raised to him a statue by a coterie of admirers. But for the intelligent public if ever two Anglo-Indian Civilians have done wrong to India and England alike, they are Sir Bartle Frere and Sir Richard Temple. Deeply imbued with the spirit of "spread-eaglism," inordinately ambitious of extending the boundaries of the Indian Empire, strongly infatuated with a belief in their own wisdom and fond of pomp and power, each strove during his official career to rise to the pinnacle of Anglo-Indian fame, often by the practice of such consummate hypocrisy, such refined dissimulation, such transparent inconsistency, as to make every genuine Englishman and Native blush. Of the series of grave political blunders committed by these two Anglo-Indian administrators abler pens than ours have in years gone by given a graphic account, which we dare say will be handed down to posterity. We will not speak of the past here. But to find Sir Bartle Frere denouncing the Ilbert Bill is indeed too much. It only goes to drive the last nail into the coffin of his official reputation. We are sorry we cannot now lay our hands on the speech or minute which Sir Bartle Frere prepared in 1860, when a member of the Supreme Legislative Council under the Viceroyalty of Lord Canning. But we remember that when the Criminal Procedure Code was then discussed, Sir Bartle Frere strongly advocated the absolute equality of the law in India in criminal jurisdiction. We are therefore surprised to find how in the teeth of that public declaration even he could now say that the principle of the Ilbert Bill is mischievous. And what is the chief ground on which be raises his objection to the Bill? It is no other than the one on which Sir James Stephen has based his. Sir Bartle is for maintaining British ascendancy. Says he, "I could see in the Bill only the removal of very salutary provisions which all Indian experience tells us are necessary to insure a fair trial to a large and most important class of Her Majesty's subjects in India,—I mean British-born Europeans,—a class on which depends the preservation of peace and political cohesion of all the varied races throughout India." But who demands an unfair trial for this class? That is not the point at issue. What are the "salutary provisions" Sir Bartle writes of? Did not Sir James, when enacting his Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill of 1872, and more recently in his letters, say that this class has generally escaped "with impunity"? Where are those "salutary provisions" then? If at all, the "salutary provisions" are needed in order that the European accused may not escape the consequences of his crime when convicted. There is another very subtle fallacy which needs to be exposed. Sir Bartle speaks of "British-born Europeans" just as Sir James talks in his letters of "Englishmen." But the controversy regarding the jurisdiction is not limited to "British-born Europeans." It rages fiercely round the non-descript class of "European British subjects" brought into existence by Sir James Stephen. These are two wide and distinct classes. But the entire reasoning of this part of Sir Bartle's letter has been vigorously traversed by Mr. Foggo, and very logically; so that we have little to add to it. Sir Bartle says that the Bill is retrograde and calculated to raise dangerous race hatred and discord and altogether opposed to the spirit of the Queen's Proclamation. The first fear is simply hysterical. But it is really fatuous to say that the Bill is opposed to the spirit of the Queen's Proclamation when every impartial authority from Mr. Gladstone downwards has unhesitatingly asserted the contrary. Sir Bartle's whole letter appears to be the weakest of weak echo of Sir James's arguments. The palpable absurdity of it has been very well pointed out by Mr. Foggo, who as an old associate of Sir Bartle in the local Legislative Council has damned him with faint praise in response to the appeal made as to his sympathy towards Natives. Sir Bartle talks of his earnest solicitude for Indians, and yet in the same breath he blushes not to speak disparagingly of the Native judiciary, and that too after his experience of years! Had he been honest he would not have said that qualified Natives are incompetent to try Europeans whether in a civil or a criminal case. Surely his Indian experience, which he obtrudes so disingenuously on the British public, ought to have taught him better. Had such been his conviction, why did he appoint Mr. Dosábhái Frámji as a Presidency Magistrate and the late Mr. Janárdan Wásudev as a Judge on the appellate side? The fact is Sir Bartle is not true to himself and to others. Even the great authority from whom he has taken his cue has had the manliness to admit the competency of Native Judges and Magistrates in both branches of the law. There is absolutely nothing else in his letter which has not been previously urged for the thousandth time by the Bengal agitators. We sincerely wish he had not used his rusty pen against the Bill. It has ruined his reputation as an Indian administrator.

Says that Sir Bartle Frere's opinion against the Ilbert Bill is not of much value.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 30th December says:—Sir Bartle Frere's letter against the Ilbert Bill is not very remarkable for its reasoning. He accuses the advocates of the measure for misrepresenting the argument of its opponents, and denounces it as a piece of ill-advised legislation. But throughout all his indignant remarks we fail to see any attempt to deal with the merits of the question in an argumentative spirit. Sir Bartle Frere is one of those who think they have suffered wrong from the Gladstone ministry; and the Ilbert Bill being a measure having the support of that ministry, Sir Bartle's opinions against it are not of much consequence.

Education.

Attributes the poor figure cut by the students of the Sholápur High School to the shortcomings of the head master of that institution.

A correspondent of the Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 30th December, writing from Sholápur, says that this year only two students from the Sholápur High School passed the Matriculation out of eleven who actually sat for the examination. This result is most unsatisfactory and must be attributed to the shortcomings of the head master. The Director of Public Instruction has repeatedly extended the term of service of the head master of the Sholápur High School, who is therefore perfectly justified in availing himself of the indulgence granted to him. But the manner in which he undertakes the performance of a variety of work prevents him from devoting his whole energies to school-work. The head master is a superintendent of the public garden. He is also a municipal commissioner and a very active member of the managing committee. These multifarious duties must necessarily interfere with the thorough performance of his tutorial functions, and hence the poor figure which his pupils cut in the University examination. The correspondent regrets that the shortcomings of the head master should remain unnoticed by the Director of Public Instruction.

Railways.

Makes some suggestions about guards and telegraph signallers on the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

In alluding to the collision that occurred between two trains between the stations of Kánkrákhádi and Sachin on the B. B. & C. I. Railway, the Gujarát Mitră (81) of the 30th December observes that Mr. Mathews, the late Agent of the railway, had expressed a desire that two guards should accompany every railway train, but his wishes were not carried out. Of the two trains that collided the guard of the train that left Kánkrákhádi tried to show the danger signal to the engine-driver by his lantern, but there being considerable distance between the engine and the guard's break the driver could not see the signal. Had there been another guard in the brake next to the engine he would have seen the head guard's signal and by drawing the driver's attention to it stopped the progress of the train at once. If it be thought expensive to keep two guards on each train, there ought to be a brake-man and a porter in the brake next to the engine. Very often three or four guards are to be seen on a goods train on the G. I. P. Railway. A goods train takes twelve hours to go from Bulsár to Baroda, and sometimes the guard of the train is sent on to Ahmedabad though he may have been on duty all night. Sometimes a guard accompanying a goods train from Ahmedabad has to take the same train to Bombay. The telegraph signallers are made to work for 12 or 15 hours and sometimes 24 hours at one stretch. On account of the paucity of signallers one signaller has to perform sometimes the work of two when his comrade goes away on sick or other leave. The signallers get small salaries and most of them are fined four or five rupees every month for petty delinquencies. Some sort of connection ought to be devised between the engine and the guard's brake. Since the construction of the Rájputána and the Bhávnagar-Gondal lines and their junction with the Baroda Railway the work on the last-named line has considerably increased, and consequently it is desirable that the number of employés on it should be proportionately increased. [A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 4th January expresses similar sentiments.]

Municipalities.

Takes exception to the manner in which the Bombay Municipality is managed and the members of the Corporation do their duty.

In a paragraph headed "Our City's Budget," the Native Opinion (10) of the 30th December says:—Our Town Councillors have been busy for some time with their budget for the next year, and, as usual, talking by the yard is the order of the day. According to Dr. Blanc and those who follow him we have only to create new and well-paid appointments and the municipal millennium will be accelerated. Perhaps Dr. Blanc has forgotten the thousands of hovels called human habitations which exist in Paris and which have yet defied the municipal reformers of that great city. If his carriage and pair do ever plunge into our lanes and alleys, he will see the amount of real work which is before the people and for which the multiplication of establishment charges is not the remedy. Our municipal government sometimes reminds us of the story of the north wind and the sun in Æsop. Like a tornado they sometimes blow so hard that the poor of the city in sheer dread wrap themselves the more firmly in their old habits and appliances. For the municipality there seems to be no kindness and no sunshine. Where is the statutory notice, the summons, the hauling up before the Magistrate, the possible or the probable conviction, and the lodgement in jail at the public expense. Is this, we ask, the aim and end of municipal government? Most of the departments have grown so big that a common petitioner and his case have to travel through many hands before a single reply can be received. We are aware that a large department cannot be managed by one individual, but we maintain that beyond one executive officer a petitioner ought not ordinarily to be required to go. The Municipal Commissioner himself should have his four doors open and should devote certain hours of the day to inquire into people's complaints. From what we have seen of the municipality we cannot compliment the members of the Corporation on any solid improvements in the organization within the last few years. We are spending the revenue of two large Collectorates, and people who talk so grand are often found sleeping on their vital concerns for months and months together. Some of its members are anxious for new works. This seems to us like the work of those short-sighted individuals who begin projects without any plan or account of what they are doing. It is a very cheap ambition to spend the rate-payers' money, but the members of the Corporation must remember that they must work with a method and an aim. Three years is their term of office, but they must not consider that after them will be the deluge. Whatever is actually wanted or the Commissioner thinks is actually required, that he is sure to place before them sooner or later, and when he has placed all his projects before the Corporation, it will be their duty to select those which in their opinion ought to claim precedence.

Native States.

Comments in connection with the death of the Máhárája of Kolhápur.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 30th December 1883, in noticing the death of the Mahárája of Kolhápur, describes the chief incidents of his life and remarks:—People said at the time of the Mahárája's removal to Nagar that he was taken there to die just as Malhár Ráo was to Madras, and their ill-omened prophecy has most unfortunately for us all turned out to be true. In all his sad career an impartial observer could easily perceive that there was throughout wanting that sympathy which alone could have guided his sensitive nature into peaceful waters. From the beginning his treatment was harsh and severe, (though, we must now say, through nobody's fault,) and therefore utterly unsuited to his nature. This harsh treatment produced its evil effects on his sensitive mind by making it brood over the slightest insults and gradually draw within itself. The Government was made aware of the morbid state of his mind when it was too late and the mischief was done. The best course would then have been to adopt a treatment the reverse of that by which, as many Natives suppose, the prince's mind was brought into a state verging on madness. The Government from good motives undoubtedly was led to adopt the very course that was not calculated to produce the desired result. The Mahárája's natural mother, the only relation to whom he could have taken kindly, was said to disturb his mind and therefore was kept away from him. The doctors, whenever he was in one of his fits of madness, had recourse, as if by preference, to that mode of treatment which could not but excite his sensitive nature the more. By putting 2 and 2 together with respect to the evidence of the doctors and others we can easily see for ourselves that the harsh treatment of the Mahárája did not produce the desired result. On the contrary he got more and more excited. Sometimes the treatment was not actively harsh but passively so. To keep him under the charge of unsympathetic foreigners was as harsh as the severe flogging administered to him by Dr. Murphy, though different in their degree of harshness. All sensible people had hoped that when once it was seen that this unsympathetic treatment did not produce the expected result, the other mode of treatment—giving the prince into the charge of his natural mother—would be given a trial. But no; not only was this not tried, but he died without being able to see his mother or his dear wife before his death. He must have longed to see them after his long separation from them. Moreover, while the prince was at Ahmednagar Government was bound to let the public know from time to time how he was going on. We hear that weekly reports were sent to the Kolhápur authorities about his health. These could conveniently have been published in the Government Gazette. But the Government thought otherwise, and we could not but rest contented with its decision. We now come to the last scene of the tragedy, the particulars of which, as they have reached us, are thoroughly unsatisfactory. We cannot find from the meagre telegram of Mr. Birch whether the prince or Private Green was the aggressor, as also how far the latter's conduct was instrumental in the unfortunate event. How was it that rupture of the spleen occurred so instantaneously? Was his spleen disordered before, and if so how long? Was it reported to the Kolhápur authorities? All these are important questions and we hope they will be fully inquired into. The minds of all the people are painfully agitated; wild rumours are already afloat, and Government will be acting unwisely if it disregarded the voice of the people calling for further information. We therefore implore Government to be more explicit than it has hitherto thought fit to be in this unfortunate matter. We trust to the good sense of Sir James Fergusson for a complete and satisfactory solution of whatever is unintelligible now. It would not argue sound policy if the people were not to be taken thus once into its confidence by Government. [Almost all the papers of this week, and especially the Maráthi papers, express deep regret at the death of the Mahárája of Kolhápur.]

Says that sound discretion should be exercised in selecting a boy for the throne of Kolhápur.

Referring to the death of the Rája of Kolhápur, the Subodh Patrika (12) of the 30th December says:—His life was one of misery, and, sorry as we are to hear of his unfortunate end, we are glad that death has relieved him from an existence which was as wretched as it was useless. The Government have it now in their power to make a change in the administration of Kolhápur. The Regency will of course have to be kept up, but it is more than likely that a new adoption will be made. In the event of that being done, sound discretion will, we hope, be shown by those who may be asked to make the choice of a new boy for the throne of Kolhápur. The Sátára house is the nearest of kin to the reigning family of Kolhápur, but we should not be surprised if it were passed over in favour of one of the sons of the Chief of Kágal, the head of the Regency, who is the nearest relation on the maternal side.

Makes suggestions about the selection of a successor to the gádi of Kolhápur.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 31st December, in alluding to the death of the Rája of Kolhápur, observes that since it is not the intention of the British Government to annex the Kolhápur territory, it behoves that Government not to take upon itself the entire responsibility of selecting a successor to the gádi. Care should be taken that the opinion of the interested parties should not be allowed to have too much weight. The old Mánkaris should be consulted with reference to the new adoption. The opinions of princes like Scindia and Holkar should be asked before determining upon the new arrangements, and in adopting a lad precautions should be taken that the present unsatisfactory way of carrying on the Government by a Regency should not be permitted to continue for any lengthened period. The Indu Prakásh suggests that a grown up lad from the Bhoslé family of Kolhápur should be placed on the masnud. In order to prepare him for his arduous task his education should be superintended under the control of the Political Agent by an English gentleman like Mr. Elliot and a Native gentleman like Mr. Mahádev Govind Ránade. When the lad has grown up to man's estate and is able to manage the affairs of his kingdom it should be handed over to him, as was done in the case of Sayájiráo Gáikwád. The present arrangements for the administration of the Kolhápur territory are good enough in themselves, but it is stated that there is not complete concord amongst the highest officials. Measures should be taken to remove the discordant elements and to restore unanimity.

Suggests certain points for enquiry by the commission that is enquiring into the alleged oppression practised by the Rája of Nándod on his subjects.

In alluding to the commission sitting to enquire into the complaints made by his subjects against the Rája of Nándod, the Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 30th December observes that Major Hancock, the president of the commission, has been making minute enquiries, but the people of the State desire that since it would be inconvenient for all the complainants to appear before him while sitting at one place, he should visit the different parts of the district and collect information on the following points:—Whether the revenues of the State have been improperly increased since the present Chief came on the gádi? Is the Rája guilty of any improper acts? Did he bring false charges against certain parties? Has he oppressed his subjects? Did he employ servants on the payment of a nazrána to him by them? Did the talátis misappropriate some land revenue and falsely show that arrears were not recovered? Are provisions, fuel and other articles of consumption obtained from the people for the use of the Rája without paying for them? Is the land assessment exorbitant? Do the servants of the State receive bribes?

Disapproves of the demolition of the fort of Bidásar in the Native State of Bikáneer by British soldiers.

In alluding to the settlement of the dispute between the Rája of Bikáneer and his Thákors by an armed interference of the British Government, the Bombay Sámáchár (91) of the 1st January observes that in this matter the British authorities thought it desirable to demolish the fort of Bidásar, apparently for the purpose either of punishing the rebellious Thákors or of lowering them in the eyes of the surrounding populations or of spreading terror of the British arms. But this occurrence is to be much regretted, as there was no necessity for such a measure. The fact of the Thákors having at once surrendered themselves was sufficient to create awe of the British arms. It is said that at a darbár held by the Rája of Bikáneer on the spot it was resolved to demolish the fort. But it cannot be forgotten that Native Chiefs hold very little power before British authorities, and hence much weight cannot be attached to the resolution of the darbár. The Bikáneer Darbár made the mistake of not acting according to the agreement made by it with the Thákors, and ought not therefore to have insisted upon taking revenge upon them for disobedience. In disputes between Native princes and their subjects the British Government ought to ascertain in the first instance with which party lies the blame, and try to remove the misunderstanding by peaceable means so far as it may be possible to do so.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
12th January 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Agriculture:

Request to the Department of — of the Government of India to introduce into the country a certain kind of phosphoric manure. 3
Suggestions about improving the capabilities of the soil of India ... 3
Civil Service: Condemnation of the system of giving appointments in the Covenanted — to Natives by nomination 3
Conduct of some European artillery men at Surat: Complaint against the — 6
Coroner for Bombay: Recommendation for a full-timed 4
Examination of engines and boilers: Expression of a desire for an — in cotton-ginning factories in the Surat and Broach districts 5
Floods in the Tápti: Complaint against the conduct of the authorities of the Surat District in the matter of ascertaining the number of buildings injured by the recent— 6
Good position which Europeans enjoy in India: Causes of the — ... 4
Gubernatorial tours: Disapproval of — as at present undertaken ... 4
Judicial matters: Expression of opinion that Mr. Dosábhái Frámji should not be permitted to decide cases in which municipal officers are complainants 4
License tax: Complaint against the way in which the — is levied in the mofussil 5

Part II.—Local Self-government—

Amended Local Boards Bill: Comments in connection with the — ... 6
Bombay Local Self-government Bills: Approval of the — 7

Part III.—Legislation—

Concordat arrived at between the Government and the European Defence Association in regard to the final settlement of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:

Approval of the —

The Bombay Chronicle 11
The Indian Spectator 8
The Indu Prakásh 10
The Mahrátta 9
Arguments in favour of the — 13
Expression of opinion that the privilege of trial by jury should be extended to most districts in the Bombay Presidency ... 14
Expression of opinion that the Councillors of the Imperial Legislative Council have done wrong in bringing about the — ... 16
Reasons for the condemnation of the — 15
Strong advice to Natives to support the —... 13
Strong condemnation of the —... 14

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:

Expression of opinion that Sir Bartle Frere's letter against the — has ruined his official reputation 16
Expression of opinion that Sir Bartle Frere's opinion against the — is not of much value 18
Remarks in connection with the result of the agitation of Europeans against the — 16

Part IV.—Education—

Sholápur High School: Expression of opinion that the poor figure cut by the students of the — is attributable to the shortcomings of the head master of that institution 18

Part V.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway: Suggestions about guards and telegraph signallers on the — 18

Page.

PART VI.—Municipalities—

Bombay: Objection to the manner in which the municipality of — is managed and the members of the Municipal Corporation do their duty 19

PART VII.—Native States—

Bikáneer: Disapproval of the demolition of the fort of Bidásar in the Native State of — by British soldiers 21
Kolhápur:
  Comments in connection with the death of the Mahárája of — ... 19
  Expression of opinion that sound discretion should be exercised in selecting a boy for the throne of — 20
  Suggestions about the selection of a successor to the gádi of — ... 20
Nándod: Suggestion of certain points for enquiry by the commission that is enquiring into the alleged oppression practised by the Rája of — on his subjects 21

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 12th January 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
63	„ Shivájí[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 1050

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	,, Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	,, Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	,, Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	,, Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	,, Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	,, Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	,, Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	,, Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	,, Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	,, Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	,, Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	,, Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	,, Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	,, Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	,, Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	,, Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	,, A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	,, A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	,, A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	,, Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	,, Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	,, Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	,, Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	,, Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	,, Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	,, Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	,, Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	,, Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	,, Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	,, Fursád	Do.	Do.	100
101	,, Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	,, Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	,, Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	,, Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	,, Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	,, Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	,, Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	,, Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	,, Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	,, Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	,, Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	,, Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	,, Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	,, Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	,, Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	,, Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	,, Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	,, Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	,, Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	,, Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	,, Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	,, Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	,, Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	,, Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	,, Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	,, Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	,, Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	,, Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	,, Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	,, Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	,, Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	,, Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	,, Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berar papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Advises the Bombay Government to send to the Calcutta International Exhibition a few Native artizans at the cost of the State.

The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 9th January is much pleased with the arrangement made by the Government of Bengal for sending a few artizans from each district of that province to Calcutta for the purpose of visiting the International Exhibition, because the sight will afford them much useful instruction. The Bengal Government will pay the expenses of the visit. It deserves great praise for taking the step. The Governments of other provinces ought also to send artizans from their respective jurisdictions, and it is to be hoped the Government of Bombay will not fail to follow the example set by the Bengal Government.

Condemns the grant of a plot of land and a donation of Rs. 7,000 from the State treasury for the erection of a Christian church at Parel.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 12th January condemns the grant of a plot of Government land and the sum of Rs. 7,000 from the State treasury for the erection of a Christian church at Parel, and observes that most of the Christian inhabitants of that quarter of the city for whom the church has been built are employés on the G. I. P. and B. B. & C. I. Railways, the owners of which ought to have paid the cost of the church for the purpose of providing religious instruction to their subordinates. The Jáme hopes that the Governor of Bombay will not in future make any such objectionable grants. The State ought never to be partial to any particular religion.

Does not approve of gubernatorial tours as at present undertaken.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 10th January, in referring to the tour of the Governor in Káthiáwár, says that as gubernatorial tours very seldom prove beneficial to the people, they appear to be undertaken either for pleasure or for showing off greatness. Up to this day it has not been known that any person or body of persons has ever received justice from any Governor during any of his tours. Though during such tours the Governors are welcomed, and though sometimes private houses along the line of march are decorated, it is a mistake and a delusion to suppose that these demonstrations proceed from the eagerness of the people or without pressure from officials. It is unlikely that people will entertain any respect for their Governors so long as they do nothing to deserve the gratitude of their subjects by noble schemes meant for their welfare, as in the case of Lord Ripon. When in addition the burden of forced labour falls on the poor and that of expense on Native princes, and when no corresponding return is made to them either by word or deed, these tours cannot but be looked upon as a curse. The Káthiáwár princes in their present circumstances find it difficult to pay their tribute and to keep their expenditure within their income. If the reports be true that these princes have to supply provisions for the party from the Governor downwards to the peons and sometimes to make nazránás (presents), it would be better that such useless tours should be abandoned and the time utilized in attending to things submitted in writing to the Governors. If these statements be not true—if Governors go on tour at their own expense and no burden whatever falls on Native States and their subjects, it is to be hoped that His Excellency the Governor will publish an account of his travels, stating the work performed and the expense of each individual composing the party and the total cost. As long as this is not done, there is nothing wrong in saying that they are undertaken for enjoyment and feasting at the expense of others. It can truly be said that gubernatorial tours have up to this time proved injurious, and not beneficial, to the people. The public did not in any way benefit by the first tour of Sir James Fergusson in Káthiáwár; on the contrary, the people had to put up with forced labour and the Native princes with the trouble of entertaining him. It is therefore much to be wished that during the present tour His Excellency should take care to see that it proves of some benefit to the people.

Says that the dirty condition of the quarters of Bombay inhabited by the poor is a cause of the reappearance of cholera.

In alluding to the reappearance of cholera in Bombay and the attribution of the outbreak to the use of well water while the supply from Vehár was cut off for a few days, the Yajdán Parast (127) of the 6th January observes that the use of foul water is certainly one of the reasons for the reappearance of the epidemic, but there is another equally strong cause. The collection of sweepings and other nuisances in the parts of the city inhabited by poor people is the chief cause of the reappearance of cholera. The dirty condition of certain parts of Bombay is a great stain on the municipal administration, and as long as it continues the epidemic is likely to put in its appearance frequently. [The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 8th January expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Says that the class of jo-hukum men are not really loyal, and gives reasons for the assertion.

With reference to the recent creation of the Companions of the Indian Empire, the Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th January says:—Glancing over the whole list we are glad to find none of the Native names belonging to the jo-hukum class. In a country like this it is a great mistake to commend individuals as loyal, that is, more loyal than their neighbours. Besides being a highly impolitic course, it leads to jobbery. The Collector recommends his loyal friend, not because the creature is faithful to Government, but because he truckles to his master. When such a sneak and sycophant has no merits worth mentioning, no example of public spirit to be credited to him, his patron puts him forward as loyal. This is the secret of three-fourths of loyal recommendations, and Government would do well to inquire what has made a particular man more loyal than others before throwing away public honours on him. We have said above that such nominations are impolitic. By making a person Khán Báhádur or something of that kind the Collector fancies he has set an example to the public. Nothing like it. People know the Collector's spy and emissary, and they detest him. His elevation may secure what fidelity the creature is capable of. But at the same time that the Collector has secured one personal friend he has also created a hundred enemies against the State. It is from this point of view that we always condemn "loyal" nominations as leading to widespread discontent. How many honest workers there are in the mofussil spending their strength and substance on the good of the people and thus helping the Government in a variety of ways without being able to "please the sáhib"? But such men are generally neglected, and instead we see men of straw put forward,—men not only defying the code of honour but destitute of the common decencies of life. These fellows manage to hoodwink the district autocrat and terrorise over the people, obtruding their vulgar loyalty whenever called to account. Let public spirit be recognised by all means. But it is the service rendered to the State and to society, not to one or two official patrons, that makes a man loyal.

Praises Government for acknowledging the public services of Mr. Nowroji Fardunji by creating him a Companion of the Indian Empire.

With reference to the new C. I. E.s the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 7th January says:—Government have at last recognised the public services of our eminent townsman, Mr. Nowroji Fardunji, by conferring on him the title of C. I. E. The news when it reached Bombay took many by agreeable surprise, for it was little expected that Mr. Nowroji, who has all along fought against powerful interests and on the side of the people, would be marked out in official quarters for one meriting such distinction. We presume it was Sir James Fergusson who recommended him for the honour. If so, His Excellency is entitled to the thanks of the rate-payers, whose rights and interests Mr. Nowroji has for more than a decade defended with admirable perseverance and against many difficulties. Opinions may differ as to some of his views, and there are people who do not like his cheeseparing propensities in the Municipal Corporation and Town Council. But on one point all are agreed, that Bombay owes a good deal to him and that if he errs at all he errs rightly on the virtuous side of economy, acting as a check against municipal expenditure growing into municipal extravagance. It is such public men that preserve to a people their just rights and privileges, and Bombay has every reason to be proud of the honour which Government have conferred on one whom it would not be inappropriate to call "the people's Nowroz."

Recommends Mr. Dádábhái Nowroji and Mr. Dinsháh Mánekji Petit for the bestowal of deserving honours upon them by Government.

The Yajdán Parast (127) of the 6th January like the rest of the vernacular newspapers of the Presidency town is extremely glad that Government have at last acknowledged the useful services rendered by Mr. Nowroji Fardunji to the public for a long number of years by conferring upon that gentleman the honour of C. I. E. The Parast is however sorry that among Natives Mr. Nowroji alone has been considered deserving of this honour at this year's distribution of the titles. There are numerous other Native gentlemen in Bombay who deserve the honour, and at the head of them stand Messrs. Dádábhái Nowroji and Dinsháh Mánekji Petit. The former has spent his life in making constitutionl endeavours to secure political rights to Natives, while the latter is well known for his numerous liberal charities. It is to be regretted that Government did not think of bestowing deserving honours upon them.

Local Self-government.

Comments in connection with the Amended Local Boards Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 6th January, in an article headed "The Amended Local Boards Bill," says:—The first thing that strikes a reader is the determination of the Select Committee to publish the Bill as it is without incorporating the whole law on the subject. We have the assurance of the honourable member in charge of the Bill that the new Act will be published by Government in such a form as to exhibit the law at one glance, and Mr. Badrudin recommends it to be the best compromise under the circumstances. But whatever course Government may adopt after the passing of the Bill we think it necessary that such a course should be adopted before its passing so as to exhibit what changes are proposed in the old law and how far the new one is an improvement upon it. We hope our suggestion will be adopted when the Bills are published again. As regards the constitution of the boards we have already pointed out the fallacy in the distinction which the Committee has attempted to draw between the Bills of this Presidency and those for the North-West Provinces with reference to higher elective proportion in the local boards. The very arguments used by the Committee lead us directly to the conclusion that the district boards at least ought to have a higher elective proportion than the Committee has been pleased to grant to them. We have been maintaining that the district committee will not be workable, as the elected members will have to come from a long distance to attend it, and we are sorry to find that the Select Committee thinks the matter to be a light one. We see no reason why the táluka boards should not be authorized to select representatives from outside their own body as the Inámdárs are. We do not see the propriety in the change proposed in the proviso to Section 7 of the Bill. It would have been far better, or we may even say that it was necessary for adequate representation, to exclude nominated members from being elected to the district board. But instead of that the Committee has thought it fit to give a chance to the Inámdárs of having two representatives in the district board. With regard to the proviso to Section 9 we do not see any sufficient reasons why the terms should not be extended to 7 years as in the case of the Municipal Bill. We next come to Section 10, by the fourth clause of which persons getting more than Rs. 50 as pension per month are qualified to be members of the board. We think this to be rather anomalous, for by the preceding clause a person getting Rs. 50 per month when in service is qualified to be a member, but if he takes pension (which will of course not exceed Rs. 25 per month) he is debarred by clause 4 at a time when he can devote his leisure to the business. The determination of the Committee to exclude professional and educational tests also strikes us as something more than obstinate. In Section 11, while the Subordinate Judge is disqualified from becoming a member of the board, he has not been authorized to hear election cases, the only purpose for which the public wished him to be excluded. We have noticed the inconvenience which it will cause to the táluka voters to take their cases to the District Court under Section 25. As regards the duties of the president and the vice-president we have the assurance of the honourable member in charge of the Bill that the official presidents will be directed to leave as far as possible their work to the vice-president. But if such is to be the case really, we do not understand what objection there is to make this declaration in the Bill. If local boards are to have full liberty independent of the sweet will of the executive, we think such a proviso ought to be inserted in the Bill. We take exception to the last proviso to Section 24, and think that instead of the Collector or the Commissioner the elected members may be entrusted with the duty. The division of the duties of the boards into obligatory and optional is a sound one, but we are only sorry that while the duties of the boards are increased on the one hand, no adequate provision is made to supply them with funds for the purpose. The arrangements ought to have been somewhat on the model of the financial decentralization scheme. All funds, provincial or other, which are now spent on works to be hereafter transferred to the boards should be entirely under their control. If they save, the savings should be theirs, and if the expense exceeds the income, the boards should bear the debt. Such an arrangement will give complete financial powers to the boards and will create in them some interest in the work. The administrative powers given to the boards should also be more extensive than the committee has deemed it proper to give. We now come to the third head, viz. officers and servants of Government, and herein we think more discretionary powers should be given to the táluka and district boards. Just as it is unwise to force Government machinery on district boards, so is it very inconvenient to ask táluka boards to indent for servants on the district boards. For the sake of uniformity there should be one set of rules for the several tálukas in the district, but each táluka board should have greater control over its servants if it is to be held responsible for works entrusted to it. As for the funds to be credited to the account of the boards and the budget estimate and accounts, we are of opinion that if the powers of the boards in this respect be not extended and if more funds be not placed at their disposal they will soon prove to be a big sham. We may mention that Section 58 A., which the Committee has thought fit to introduce, is a departure from the current practice and makes the position of the boards worse than it now is without the new Bills, as will be seen from Section 5 of the budget rules passed under the old Act. When so much care is taken to keep real power out of the hands of the boards it is difficult to understand the meaning of the control section. In order to give the control sections some meaning it is necessary to give greater powers and responsibilities to the boards. As the section stands at present, it is simply mischievous. We think Government ought to bind itself to publish the rules in the first instance with the Bills as desired by the press and the public, but if that cannot be done, let not Government be afraid to call in objections by publishing them before they are passed. This is but fair justice. We do not think that the Bills or the amendments have been made in an ungrudging spirit. We are sorry that Ráo Sáheb Mandlik could not attend the meetings of the Select Committee, which held its sittings out of Bombay. His presence would have given support to the suggestions of Mr. Badrudin, and the Committee might have been made to yield on some points at least. As however he was unavoidably detained, our only hope now is on what may turn up at the next meeting of the Legislative Council. In the meanwhile we hope that the Poona and Bombay associations are not idle. Let not the determination of the Select Committee daunt them. It is our right to ask for rights and we must be on our guard never to abuse it or allow it to be abused.

Is of opinion that local boards in the Bombay Presidency ought to have the power of electing their own presidents.

In alluding to the second reading of the Bombay Local Boards Bill, the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 12th January observes that the Government of Bombay seems still to adhere to the opinion that unless the management of local boards is entrusted to District Collectors it will not be possible to conduct local self-government satisfactorily, because the Collectors possess the best experience of all and are the real well-wishers of the people. If this is the case, why need local self-government be introduced at all? asks the Samáchár. It will then be better to allow the continuance of the existing state of things, and to inform Lord Ripon that it is beneficial to do so. The Governor of Bombay has however promised to introduce gradually the scheme of local self-government to the full extent desired by the Viceroy. Sir James stated that the people are still ignorant, but that when they become more intelligent they will be allowed popular representation on a larger scale and permitted to elect their own presidents. But nothing is said in the Bill as to the nature of the satisfaction required by Government to induce it to make the promised concession, and thus the extension of the privilege is left to the good will of Government. This is not a satisfactory disposal of this important question. Properly speaking Government ought to make the concession at once, but if it be not willing to do so, the circumstances under which it would grant it should be plainly stated in the Bill for the local boards. The Bombay Government appears to believe from the representations of its officials that Natives will not be able to conduct local self-government satisfactorily without the aid of the District Collectors and other Government officials, but this belief is not well founded. All the representatives of the people may not be found efficient and able to conduct their duties in a proper manner; but certainly one or two individuals quite able to discharge the duties of a president will be found in each district, and when such is the case no anxiety need be entertained on account of the inefficiency of a few popular representatives. Government may nominate a few officials to sit on the boards for a few years, but the boards ought to possess the power of electing their own presidents.

Comments in connection with the Amended Municipal Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 5th January says:—By the provisions of clause 7, Section 26 of the Amended Municipal Bill, the president (and be it remembered we have the Collector our president) can introduce and bring for discussion any subject before the meeting and at any time, and clause 17, Section 26 of the same Bill, declares that no act of a municipality can be invalid because formal notice of an intention to hold a meeting was not given. Thus the Collector-president may write a demi-official note to some of the commissioners and dispose of any business at any time and leave the other commissioners and the rate-payers to silently look on how their money is spent, and yet all this is done to give the new bodies extended powers! We are sorry we are no blind admirers, and we certainly therefore can give no credit to any of the members on the Select Committee. Clause 4 of the same section has been modified by clause 14, and the amendment has made matters worse, and we ask our readers to compare the two together so that they may see the truth of our remark. Reading Section 10 with clause 16 of Section 26 it will be at once evident that municipal work can be transacted in a permanent municipal district with a majority of nominated commissioners as long as the official controller likes. Section 25 makes provision for the filling up of casual vacancies, but does not make it compulsory that the vacancies should be filled up within a particular time, nor is there any obligation on the executive officers of Government to see that a particular proportion of the elected, nominated and ex-officio commissioners shall be kept up. The principal Act made it necessary that the proportion of two-thirds non-official to one-third official commissioners should be kept up. In pointing out these loopholes in the Bill we know that our arguments will be dismissed with the remark from the facile official pen that these are remarks of well-meaning over-enthusiastic and irresponsible writers. We have no reply to make to such arguments, and therefore we leave them to our readers for examination. Section 11, clause (c), empowers Government to make rules for regulating the elections, and Government does not bind itself to publish the rules before they are finally adopted,—the only two alterations which Government has made in the sections relating to the conduct of business. Those suggested by the Poona Municipality are given in Sections 29 and 31 and we have no doubt that these will be generally approved. We then come to the control section. The justification offered for Government control is that without such control there will be no uniformity in the policy which will be followed by the local bodies. We clearly see the necessity for preserving uniformity of action between the government of the country by its alien rulers and the government of a town or city by its own subjects; but we do not see how a system of government forced upon the people by a bureaucratic government can produce good results. It is essentially necessary, therefore, to make the policy of Government harmonize with that of the city fathers, the duly elected representatives of the people and real guardians of their interests. It is the representatives of the people that ought to control the actions of Government and not the Government officers those of the representatives. The district officers under these circumstances ought only to be channels of communication; as friendly advisers and silent protectors of the interests of the people the government of a country cannot claim to have any interests of its own. The interests of the subjects must be those of the government. In this matter then we cannot admit the truth of the justification offered. Lord Ripon and Her Majesty's Ministers at home, who have heartily approved of the policy, have full faith in the principle of the Government above alluded to, and they have therefore decided that the control shall only be from without. The honourable member in charge of the Bill admits the truth of this argument, and says that the reservations made in the case of local boards and municipal boards of smaller towns are not equally necessary in the case of larger municipalities. We have no doubt in the sincerity of these declarations, and we therefore ask the honourable member to request the Legislature to provide in the Act that the larger municipalities which he refers to and of which a schedule should be annexed to the Act should have non-official elected presidents. If this change were thought to be too sweeping, we would even consent in this season of compromises and concordats to be content with having full-fledged vice-presidents, and as a condition of the compromise we would suggest that the duty of presiding at meetings and such other powers should be delegated by the Act to the vice-president. Let the Collector continue to be called the president of the boards. We will not grudge him his privilege; for we know that the Englishman is very bigoted and will not consent to yield in a matter in which he thinks he has earned a privilege. The district rájás, as the Collectors are generally called, will not be willing to cease to be presidents, and Government is probably afraid, or at least unwilling, to go against the wishes of the Civilians. We know what value His Excellency attaches to the services rendered by these Civilians to this country, and knowing this we cannot reasonably expect that the President or his official colleagues will ever vote in favour of a clause depriving the Civilians of their dignified title. What we would then urge in the interest of the scheme is that the Act should provide that in larger municipalities the Collector should not ordinarily preside, leaving the duty to the vice-president. We have already suggested that the control clauses should be applicable to larger municipalities only, and we would ask the Legislature to so graduate the control as to leave no ground for complaint. We cannot conclude our remarks without prominently bringing to the notice of the Legislature the urgent necessity of modifying paragraph 3 of Section 39. This paragraph should be modified on the lines of Section 91, clause 1, of the principal Act. The power of making an order directing the person who has custody of the municipal funds to pay the expenses is certainly too large in the hands of the executive; and there is danger that it may be used and thus involve municipalities very much and often drive them to ruinous loans, especially as the ideas about sanitation entertained by Government authorities are such as are ill suited to the necessities, requirements and tendencies of the half-civilized population of municipal towns in this Presidency. We must also point out that the words "out of any public funds" inserted in Section 23 of the principal Act will greatly injure the financial position of municipal bodies, and the Legislature, if it should allow the words to stand as they are, will only be supplying a sharp-edged tool to district officers, who are always inclined to utilize municipal funds for purposes other than municipal, only because the municipalities have funds ready at hand. In conclusion we hope that the Council of His Excellency will not pass the Bills with indecent haste and lay itself open to the charge which has been brought against the Madras Government.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Is much gratified with the Viceroy's speech at the last meeting of the Supreme Legislative Council in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 9th January is highly pleased with the Viceroy's speech in the Legislative Council meeting of Monday last in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. The Viceregal utterances, observes the Samáchár, fully upheld the principle of the Bill and proved that it was duly preserved. His Excellency further remarked that the greatness and strength of the British rule in India depended upon the impartial dispensation of justice, and that the Indian empire should be administered on that principle without any race distinction. These sentiments and the moral strength evinced by Lord Ripon will console and encourage the Native public, who now desire that His Excellency should not forget to extend the right of trial by jury to Natives also. It is gratifying that the Native press is demanding the concession with one voice and due humility, and that some members of the Viceregal Council itself are advocating the same. [The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the same date expresses similar sentiments, and with reference to the remark made by the Honourable Mr. Thomas that Natives are not fit to try Europeans because a Native judge sentenced a prisoner to three months' simple imprisonment for an offence for which the High Court on appeal inflicted the extreme punishment allowed by law observes that numerous instances will be found on the records of criminal courts in which European magistrates and juries have shamelessly allowed accused Europeans to escape the punishment they deserved. The honourable gentleman ought to have been reminded about this when he made the remark about the Native judge.]

Approves of the principle of the Amended Ilbert Bill.

In a communicated article headed "The Ilbert Bill judicially examined," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th January says:—When people's prejudices, pride and susceptibility are likely to be touched, every movement should be guarded and no old association of ideas and sentiments rudely dislocated. It should be replaced by a new association, in the presence of which it will gradually lose its power and fade into nothingness. If history teaches any lesson by its examples it is this. The legislator, raised far above the level of the vulgar crowd, should keep his distant goal constantly in view; but in approaching it he should avoid hurry and the foolish ostentation of progress. As he has to make his way amongst the crowd, he should tread on their toes as little as possible. By a little flattery here and conciliation there he should get the path opened, which might otherwise be blocked, and make the mob feel that in pushing him onward they were doing credit to themselves. These are trite and homely precepts, it may be, but they are worth repeating so long as genius and ambition are capable of forgetting them. The experimental course of proceeding patiently step by step was the one which the learned Law Member of the Viceroy's Council ought to have taken. People in his position ought to be content to leave something for their successors to do, and to see in great opportunities an invitation to lay deep and solid foundations rather than to construct great monuments to their own fame. Had it been proposed by the Ilbert Bill only to open the way to authority for a few selected officers in the first instance, as by enacting that magistrates who had exercised a particular jurisdiction in one place over Europeans should retain that jurisdiction on their removal elsewhere, the experiment could have been made without bitterness or friction, and the Europeans finding the Native magisterial rule really lighter on the whole than that of the European would by-and-bye have accepted an extension of it without resistance. The Government should have chosen its instruments carefully and watched them carefully. The slumbering demon of race animosity should have been soothed, not awakened and irritated. The more foolish men are the less do they relish a defiance or a demonstration of their littleness. They should have been taught by skilful management to see that the Native magistrate by his superior knowledge of Native character and habits was exactly the man to protect the Europeans from Native chicanery. In selected instances this would have been quite possible; much should have been made of them, and the brute force of European energy might thus have been enlisted from time to time in the very course to which it is now opposed. What is wanted more and more in our Government is a Roman fixity of principle and continuity of purpose—turning obstructions, watchful of opportunities, intent upon its ends, considerate to susceptibilities that it cannot share or commend as forces never to be despised by those who have to deal with human beings as they are, but yet moulding these very sensibilities at the right moments so as to be instruments of a nobler enlightenment, of a more consistent and persistent will. It is the common error of clever men to underrate the strength of the forces of stupidity opposed to them; a far-reaching wisdom makes them work in its own service and earn blessing from the blind turbulent masses almost against their will. The observations we have made on what might have been and ought to have been the policy of the Government of India have a direct bearing on the problem now presented to the people of India and especially its Native population. The factors of that problem are a Government enlightened and benevolent but of feeble moral purpose and unversed in the rudiments of State craft; a European class full of confidence and of rude unreasoning energy; lastly, a huge Native population but slightly imbued as yet with the ideas and aspirations that the educated few endeavour to diffuse amongst them. How great a force the European class can exercise has been made evident enough by the events of the past year. The lofty superiority of the Government has in a measure been abased before the clamorous crowd, which knew its own mind and was determined to have its own way. The support, universal as it has been, given to the Government by Native opinion has not been enough to keep it steady to its purpose. As therefore the block of obstruction bulks hugely before us and the power we can possibly bring to bear on it is so poor and uncertain in its operation, the part of wisdom and prudence is to accept the compromise if it contains any germ of principle which in the future may be fruitful of good. Now such a germ the "amended" Bill will contain. It preserves the equality of jurisdiction of Native and European judges and magistrates. It seems impossible that this principle, once embodied in actual legislation, should ever again be given up. The efficiency of the magisterial jurisdiction all round will no doubt be impaired by privileges to be newly accorded to European prisoners; but when the general perception of this by-and-bye makes a change necessary, that change must extend the powers of Native magistrates along with those of their European equals. The sagacity of the Defence Association indeed has been considerably at fault if it has thought that the concordat contains any element of permanence except the very one which it regards with most detestation. How a District Magistrate is to work with a jury is not yet explained. It will certainly be attended with inconveniences, which will ere long make all parties, including the accused, probably desire a change of system. But lest anyone should suppose that a trial by a jury with a majority of European members implies a denial of justice, we may point out that in the mofussil a jury's verdict is by no means conclusive. The judge may disapprove it and send the proceedings up for the decision of the High Court. If the District Magistrate is to have the same power it is hard to see how the jury can screen the culprit by an unrighteous verdict. In case of doubt it will always be recognised that the verdict ought to prevail. It is not impossible this marked difference between the jury system of the mofussil and of the presidency towns may have been overlooked by the Association and that finality may be claimed for the verdict. As any such demand would be a complete breach of the agreement, it must of course be rejected as outside the pale of discussion. If the jurisdiction over British-born subjects is to be strictly confined to District Magistrates to the exclusion of all others, equal difficulties will arise at some of the military stations and other places where low Europeans are collected in numbers. The present jurisdiction of the first class local magistrate will no longer avail for dealing with the many petty cases that spring up amongst such a population. Although a European military officer may be on the spot as a Cantonment Magistrate, his hands will be tied in the very cases in which he could be most useful. It is not likely or possible that an Act attended with such results should long remain unaltered. The practical inconveniences will be intolerable. But the principle of equal jurisdiction for all of equal rank having been secured, all further changes will have to be made in subordination to it, and must in consequence tend to equality before the law in all directions. With this we should for the present be content, or at least be resigned. Events are governed by an inevitable logic, and we must have patience to await their development.

Says that Natives have no reason to find fault with the concordat in the matter of the Ilbert Bill, and disapproves of the conduct of those who cry down the Bill in its modified form.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 6th January, in an article headed "The Government of India cannot afford to be hectored by any noisy section of its subjects," says:—The tone of moderation, the attitude of sensible advisers, and finally the good sense which were observable in the writings and speeches of the leaders of Native society throughout the controversy on the Jurisdiction Bill, which has lasted over nine long months, augured well and we hoped to win the race commenced in such bad grace by the opposition. We were led to suppose that by this prudent conduct we were determined to practically prove to the civilized world that under the influence of the benign British rule we had really made wonderful progress in political education. But alas! when the race had almost drawn to a close a few of our contemporaries finding the embers under their feet too hot to stand upon gave a plunge and inflicted wounds on the national body which it will take years to heal. However we have yet one satisfaction. The wounds are not on the vital parts and therefore there is no danger of their proving fatal. The head of the nation has received none, inasmuch as the educated community has not been found wanting in foresight. The Bráhmans of Poona, the brain power of the nation as Dr. Hunter calls them, have interpreted the terms of the agreement arrived at in the only sensible way in which it can be interpreted; and we are proud to say that the honourable mover of the Bill takes exactly the same view of the situation as we did and do. We said last week that the two conditions that have been attached give us in fact what the Bill promised, and we have no reason to find fault with the arrangement arrived at. From the able speech of the Honourable Mr. Ilbert it is most clear that not only no race distinction will after the passing of the Bill be made between Native and European Covenanted Civil Servants, but that there will also be none between Covenanted and Statutory Civilians. Is not this, we ask, the greatest gain? The opposition had raised such a storm against nominated Civilians, and their arguments, supported as they were by our own denunciations of the Lytton institution, appeared to be so conclusive that we left the Statutory Civilians to the winds and contended for the claims of the Covenanted Civilians only. But the statesmanly Viceroy did not like that the favourite child of his predecessor should be thus neglected because its father and guardian was no longer in power. This in Lord Ripon is most deserving of praise. As we once said he would not condemn but would improve the past. It was not the Statutory Civil Service that was denounced, but it was the manner in which the selection was made. The recent nominations have proved that this manner has been improved and there is an end to the difference of opinion. The declaration then that Government has been scared by a public outcry from its determination is as false as it is disgraceful. Mr. Ilbert gives a complete history as to how the original Bill has come to assume its present form. The first great measure of administrative reform introduced by Lord Ripon was that of giving greater publicity to legislative measures with the object of ascertaining public opinion thereon, and a sincere man like our popular Viceroy could never have turned a deaf ear to what the people said about the measure, nor could he without taking leave of his conscience consign to the waste-paper basket the hundreds of memorials and opinions received. The Viceroy had most solemnly promised that the representations of the opposition would be duly weighed and considered, and the modified form in which the Bill is now intended to appear fully shows that it is the result of mature thought and deliberation. The opinions that have been published at once show that the Viceroy could not have insisted upon giving powers to the local Governments which they themselves were unwilling to accept. Thus Section 1 had therefore to be omitted, and rightly too. The rest of the Bill, the essence of which was the extinction of all race distinction, remains; and what does Mr. Ilbert say about it? He says that the Bill as thus modified will enable the authorities to give effect to the suggestion out of which these legislative proposals originated, namely, that when Native officials have risen to high responsible posts in the public service they ought to be given equal power with their English colleagues of the same rank, and it would maintain the principle that where personal fitness had been established race ought not to operate as a disqualification. We all know that this Bill owes its origin to Mr. B. L. Gupta's letter. The Mahrátta here quotes from Mr. Gupta's letter that the extension of jurisdiction over European British subjects be limited to Natives of the country holding the office of a Magistrate of the District or of a Sessions Judge, and remarks :—Anybody can thus see that the Government of Lord Ripon gives us exactly what Mr. Gupta wanted. Now the only point that remains to be noticed is that about additions. Mr. Ilbert says that the suggestion which Government has thought it proper to accept is that a European British subject, when brought for trial before a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge, should have the right, if he thinks fit to claim it, to be tried by such a jury as was provided for by Section 451 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This amounts to an extension of the provision of Section 451 to the courts of District Magistrates. In another part of the Bill Mr. Ilbert says that the provisions suggested for that purpose will be available for all persons European and Native alike. It required no brains of a politician or skill of a barrister to know that the arrangement could be otherwise. Everybody by this time knows that Lord Ripon has come to India not to create new but to abolish old anomalies, and unless by circumstances over which we mortals have no control he was changed into a Lytton he could never have consented to give one more privilege to Europeans and deny the same to Natives. Section 269, which gives the local Government the power to declare that trials before Courts of Sessions shall be by jury, empowers them to say that a particular class of offences and not of persons shall be tried by jury. Without creating therefore a new anomaly Lord Ripon could not have consented to increase the facilities for obtaining justice. The howl that has been raised against Lord Ripon is therefore certainly out of place. The conduct of certain Native papers that have sinned against Lord Ripon by crying down the Bill in its modified form deserves to be as severely censured as the conduct of the Anglo-Indians at the time of the Viceroy's return to Calcutta. We extremely regret to find the name of Mr. Kristo Das Pal among the traducers of a Viceroy who has vindicated England's bright fame and saved Natives from the ignominy of a defeat.

Justifies and approves of the Viceroy's conduct in the matter of the concordat.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 7th January says :—We hope our Calcutta contemporaries will find their way to accept the concordat coupled with the concession of the right of jury trial to Natives also as a satisfactory settlement of the controversy for the present. The idea which some people seem to entertain that Lord Ripon ought to have resigned if he could not pass the Bill in its original form is based upon an erroneous conception of the position which His Excellency has from the first taken in this controversy. At the last meeting of his Council held on the 8th of March last he reserved to himself the right of forming his own view on the subject. He did not then say that the Bill as then drawn up embodied views to which he had committed himself. He promised to the Anglo-Indians that he would do nothing hastily but would modify the Bill if he should think modifications desirable after hearing all parties. He has acted according to his word, and so far his action betrays not the slightest inconsistency. The only mistake that we discover in his action is that he entered into a compact with the Defence Association instead of giving effect to his views independently of that body by consulting it of course but by not appearing to settle terms with it. But this mistake, however unfortunate, does not affect his policy with regard to the measure itself. And it is unfair to say that he has changed his views or given way or brought what some have been tempted to call "peace with dishonour." Now, as to his having conceded the right to be tried by their own countrymen to British-born subjects, it seems to us that the Bombay Gazette's observation that like most Englishmen who have received their practical training in England he has great respect for jury trials and thinks that they may be introduced into India like many other English systems is entitled to particular weight at our hands while judging of His Excellency's attitude in this controversy. His Excellency has given a fresh impetus to the local self-government question; and one who is enthusiastic about local self-government may well be expected to be as enthusiastic about the jury-trial system also.

Says that the Native press is unanimous about the value of Lord Ripon's services and accounts for the desponding tone of a portion of it by the sudden announcement of the concordat and the exulting tone of the bulletins of the Defence Association.

The same newspaper elsewhere says:—It is unfortunately true that since the announcement of the concordat the unanimity which had before prevailed among the Native papers on the subject of the Ilbert Bill has given way, and while in Bombay there has been a decided tendency to approve of the concordat elsewhere there has been a disposition to reject it. But we are not prepared to admit that the Native press differs equally about the value of Lord Ripon's services to India or the sincerity of His Lordship's motives. Barring an exception or two, which does not count for anything, the feelings of the people towards His Lordship are still the feelings of gratitude. The contemporary from whom we have quoted the above bases it upon this indignant apostrophe of a Native journalist: "Frailty, thy name is Ripon." It would be a mistake, however, to judge of Native public opinion from such stray effusions. Nor is there anything to surprise one in the fact that the first effect of the concordat was to unsettle Native opinion on the Ilbert Bill. Its terms might have been naturally expected to cause some difference of opinion, as they are different from the modifications which had been announced by Lord Northbrook first and Lord Ripon afterwards. No one expects the Native press to be a blind worshipper of the Viceroy, and if the praise bestowed on His Excellency now is not so warm as it was previous to the concordat, that fact, instead of detracting from the character of the Native press, shows on the contrary that in discussing public questions that press concerns itself with measures first and men afterwards. The sudden announcement of the concordat and the exulting bulletins of the Defence Association are more responsible for the desponding tone of a section of the Native press. Had Lord Ripon announced the terms of the concordat from his place in his Council instead of letting the Defence Association make a parade of it, the whole of the Native press would have, we think, accepted them. In spite of it all we are confident that the present difference between the Native press on this side of India and elsewhere will not continue long. The present is a transition stage through which any other press would have passed if placed under exactly similar circumstances.

Says that the proposal to extend the jury system to Natives does not affect the Europeans.

In alluding to the debate on the motion of the Honourable Mr. Ilbert to refer the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill to a Select Committee, the Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 6th January observes that it is to be hoped that after the most liberal concession made to the opposition by Government the Defence Association will take care not to disturb the arrangement arrived at in concert with its leaders after the most mature deliberation on their part. If the jury system is to be extended to Natives, as proposed in the Legislative Council, that should scarcely be a matter of concern to Europeans, since the proposed extension could affect neither the safety nor the privileges of Europeans. It will be purely a question between Government and Natives, and its solution will rest on the constitutional rights and status of the latter and the views of the authorities as suggested by the wisdom of those charged with the conduct of the affairs of the State in India. All that Mr. Evans and his friends need mind is to see that the concordat is adhered to as respects the Europeans. This the Government means to do most loyally. All concerned ought now honestly to do their best to put an end to the unpleasant controversy that has already done immense mischief to some of the important concerns of this country. At all events Government would now be considered as wanting in self-respect if it allowed itself to be intimidated by any faction and delayed doing what it ought to do in the interests of England and India alike. As for Mr. Ilbert's explanation of the course pursued by Government and intended to be followed hereafter, all honourable men in the country must accord to it their unqualified approbation. Government has been only endeavouring to do its duty to the best of its power in the interest of all classes of Her Majesty's subjects in India with patience and tact, which do it great credit. [The Yajdán Parast (127), the Kaiser-i-Hind (108) and the Gujaráti (101) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Is glad that the system of trial by jury is to be extended to Natives.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th January says:—Thanks to the moderate tone of the Native press and the generous efforts of its friends, the system of trial by jury in connection with the Ilbert Bill is extended to Natives and Europeans alike. The chief ground of opposition from the Native community has thus been cut off. The Europeans of Bengal after a year's noisy and expensive agitation have got only a small concession, in which Natives will fully participate. But at the same time that this concession is made to European clamour, the principle of equality has been secured for all times, the powers of the magistrate, Native and European, have been doubled, and something more done to abolish race disqualification. This is what the European agitator has got after eleven months of hard fighting. And in all that he has got the Native has managed to secure a share by his silence. The only right he claimed has been granted him after less than a week's consideration. These are simple facts—now let them cry who lose a cause and let them laugh who win!

Is glad that Government have resolved to concede to Natives the right of trial by jury in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Yajdán Parast (127) of the 6th January observes that the Honourable Mr. Ilbert, in his speech in the Legislative Council on the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill delivered on the 4th instant, proclaimed that Government were resolved to concede to Natives the right of trial by jury in connection with the Act to the same extent as is proposed by the concordat to grant to Europeans. This resolution has proved beyond doubt that as heretofore the Government of Lord Ripon will never do injustice, but on the contrary do good to Natives, who owe to His Lordship deep gratitude for his anxious solicitude for their welfare. [The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 7th January and the Akhbáre Sodágar (86) of the 9th express similar sentiments.]

Justifies the extension of the system of trial by jury to Natives.

In an article headed "The Viceroy's Council and the Concordat," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 7th January says:—This question of extending the right of a trial by jury to Natives proceeds, we should think, as a necessary and natural consequence of the concession of the same right to European British subjects. We say this apart from the fact that the concession of the same right to both races will free the arrangement arrived at under the concordat from the inequality which would otherwise exist under it between Europeans and Natives. Under the concordat it will be open to a European British accused, when on trial before a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge, to demand his trial by a jury, and to further demand that a majority of the jury empannelled shall consist of men of his own race. This means that a proportion of the jury may consist of Natives, though that proportion may form the minority. Since Natives are to be associated with Europeans in trying a European British subject, it follows that their fitness to be associated at such trials with Europeans equally—nay, even more—renders them fit to try the accused of their own race. Moreover, cases against Europeans are fewer in number than cases against Natives; and since Europeans attach great importance to the trial of one of their own race before an Indian tribunal, it is desirable that Natives, who may have to sit on the jury empannelled in the former class of cases, should be educated as it were in the responsibilities of a juror. Such education they could receive only by being frequently called upon to serve as jurors; and it would be impossible to give such frequent opportunities to them unless they were made to serve as jurors in the class of cases that are frequent, i.e., cases in which men of their own race happen to be accused. It is therefore necessary that Natives should be familiarised with the jury system that they may be able to perform the duties of jurors with efficiency in cases affecting European British subjects. The fact that in such cases they will form a minority of the jury that may be empannelled does not render it the less desirable that they should be efficient for the performance of the duties of jurors. Their responsibilities remain the same whether they form the minority or the majority, and viewed in this very practical light the determination of Lord Ripon to extend the system of jury trial to Natives also seems to be perfectly in harmony with the concordat between the Government and the Defence Association. The latter cannot object to the extension, because, if under the concordat which it has accepted a minority of Natives may be associated with a majority of Europeans as jurors to try a European British accused, it is the duty of Government to see that Natives, who may have to be so associated with Europeans, receive proper training in the responsibilities of a juror. We hope the privilege which Lord Ripon proposes to confer on Natives will be welcomed by the Anglo-Indians as a satisfactory appendage to the terms of the concordat—satisfactory not only because it takes the sting of inequality between Europeans and Natives from the concordat, but is calculated to make Natives everyway fit to be associated as jurors with Europeans in the trial of a European British accused. Whether the experiment of the jury system in the mofussil will lead to a failure of justice or facilitate the proper administration of it no one is now called upon to decide. The Government has committed itself to the experiment and it cannot recede from it. The Honourable Kristo Das Pal is reported to have observed at the meeting of the Viceroy's Council on Friday last that it was desirable to consult the judiciary and the executive before legalising the system. But supposing these are consulted and they disapprove of the system, will it be open for the Government to say that it will not carry out the concordat? If it says so, there will be no other alternative left for it than to withdraw the Bill, which would be certainly disastrous to the cause of legislation in future. Moreover the experiment of the jury system is not likely to prove dangerous to the cause of sound administration of justice, since the position of an Indian jury is not so irresponsible as that of an English jury. This was very lucidly pointed out by Mr. Justice West in a judgment reported at pages 13 and 14 of the First Volume of the Bombay Series of the Indian Law Reports. The fear then to which the Honourable Mr. Kristo Das Pal gave expression in Friday's Council that the experiment of the jury system in India may land the country into difficulties such as those which lately occurred in Ireland is groundless, as the verdict of a jury under the Indian law is open to be rectified by the High Courts. In a country which is pronounced fit for local self-government such an experiment cannot be pronounced as premature.

Says that Natives also ought to get the right of trial by jury.

In alluding to the debate on the motion of the Honourable Mr. Ilbert to refer the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill to a select committee, the Rást Goftár (115) of the 6th January observes that it seems that Government entertain an intention to concede to Natives also the right of trial by jury. The concordat proposes to grant to European British subjects the right of trial by jury, and thereby to create a new race distinction between Europeans and Natives; and in order to remove this whimsical difference between the two, Natives also ought to get the same concession and both should be put on the same level, and when this is done the despicable concordat will be bearable. The alleged compromise deserves to be despised, the more so because the members of the Supreme Legislative Council entered into a league with the Europeans who openly insulted the Viceroy and fomented sedition against the State and brought about the concordat. It is to be hoped that since the Viceroy has shown extreme courtesy to the rebellious Europeans, which they did not deserve, they will not oppose the proposed concession to Natives of the trial by jury. The Europeans preferred to give up the opposition to the Ilbert Bill by accepting the trial by jury, and they cannot recede from this position without ignominy. [The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the same date and the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 7th January express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Refutes the statement that Natives have approved of the concordat regarding the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 6th January observes that after lending a great deal of support to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill the Honourable Mr. Hunter has changed sides, bringing forward the excuse that according to the Indian Spectator (1) the Natives themselves have approved of the concordat. Dr. Hunter was at liberty to join the opposition, but the excuse he has given for doing this is worthless. If the Spectator has stated that the despicable compromise has been approved by Natives it is a misstatement. The Spectator does not properly represent public opinion, which is faithfully reflected in the columns of the Hindu Patriot and the Indian Mirror, which have condemned the concordat as "peace with dishonour."

Condemns the concordat in the matter of the Ilbert Bill and asks for the extension of the right of trial by jury to Natives.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 4th January says that selfish Europeans, who had become disaffected towards Government, are now getting pacified. They appear to have become elated at having got from the Viceroy a privilege which they did not ask for, which they had no hopes of gaining, and which keeps up their race distinction. They have thereby acquired new strength and fresh blood. They want to pacify Natives by saying sweet words and advise Government to pass the Bill in its modified form as soon as possible. They must have some object in view in thus advising Government to hasten the Bill. Perhaps they are afraid of losing the newly acquired right by something unforeseen coming in the way. The Pioneer, which is the organ of the rebellious Europeans, recommends this course. But by this change in the Bill Government has increased race distinctions and disappointed Natives. The object of trying a European before a Native judge with the help of a European jury must be that Europeans have no confidence in Native judges. What a novelty—what a mistake—that Government even should support this view! While on the one hand endeavours are being made to invest Native magistrates with power to try European offenders with a view to remove race distinctions, on the other hand Europeans are to be granted the privilege of trial by jury composed for the most part of their countrymen. This is very surprising, as the two are opposed to each other. Natives will be sorry at this untoward event. Natives should also demand their rights. They should hold meetings and ask Government to confer on them a privilege similar to the one granted to Europeans. Natives should be allowed the privilege of claiming a jury composed for the most part of their countrymen. Why should Europeans be granted more rights and why should such rights be withheld from Natives? It was never supposed that this would be the result of the confidence placed in the wisdom of the Viceroy by Natives, who have not swerved from loyalty. The Natives should boldly ask for their rights. [The Káside Mumbai (109) of the 9th January says that though the change that will be made in the Ilbert Bill by the concordat will be great and such as will thwart the noble aim of the Bill, it may be accepted if it is thought necessary for pacifying the haughty Anglo-Indians and if the Supreme Government has changed its views. But Natives ought also to be allowed to claim trial by jury mainly composed of their countrymen.]

Considers the political utterances of Sir Bartle Frere as of little value.

The Kesari (36) of 8th January says that Sir Bartle Frere has lately come forward as one of the assailants of the Ilbert Bill. This gentleman's practice has been to say one thing and do another. That he was the author of the annexation of Sátára may not be proved from the records in the possession of the English Government, but it is notorious that in Sátára his name is intimately associated with that event. Sir Bartle Frere suddenly took the side of the indigo-planters in Bengal and sent no less than forty thousand Natives to prison. During the share mania crisis in Bombay he was foremost in stimulating the gambling propensities of the people, which ultimately led to the ruin of thousands. He was instrumental in initiating the policy which led to the last Afghán war, and in South Africa he provoked an unnecessary conflict with the Zulus and the Boers by writing false despatches, which on one occasion led to the complete destruction of a British force through his own negligence and shortcomings. From these facts it may be easily seen of what little value are the opinions of Sir Bartle Frere on public affairs and how little they are in unison with truth. The natives of this country have as little respect for him as the Europeans themselves.

Education.

Is of opinion that Directors of Public Instruction should not have the power of regulating the fees in private educational institutions and of fixing the number of free-studentships in them.

The Kesari (36) of the 8th January states that the Education Commission has recommended that the fees in private schools and the number of free studentships in them should be regulated according to the wishes of the provincial Directors of Public Instruction, and that if the managers of private institutions are unwilling to abide by the advice of the head of the Educational Department the grants-in-aid should be withheld from them. Mr. Telang most forcibly argued against the absurdity of this recommendation, but unfortunately he was overruled. It is of course proper to charge some fee for the instruction imparted to students, but no one will contend that it is right to refuse to give free education to pupils who are too poor to pay for it. The fees levied in educational institutions should be as low as possible in order to afford to all classes of students the inestimable advantages of education. Next to the protection of life and property it is the duty of Government to take measures for the utmost diffusion of education, but this view does not seem to have commended itself to the members of the Education Commission. Government may charge as high fees as possible in Government institutions, but it is not right to force private institutions to agree to all kinds of hard conditions for the sake of a paltry sum of two thousand rupees. In places where private schools are flourishing Government should abolish the institutions which are under its own management and should gradually reduce the grants to such schools in proportion to the increase of fees in them. It will be many years before private schools in this country are able to pay their way with the aid of fees alone. With the funds at the disposal of the Educational Department four or five times the number of students who at present receive their education in Government schools could be educated in private institutions. The Kesari is strongly of opinion that the Directors of Public Instruction should not have the power to regulate the fees in private schools and to fix the number of free studentships in them. The grants to private educational institutions should be awarded according to the efficiency of the instruction imparted in them.

Complains that the grants awarded to educational institutions in the Bombay Presidency are not as liberal as those in Madras.

The Dnyánodayá (7) of the 10th January says:—See what the difference is in the grants-in-aid to schools in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies. Two weeks ago four mission schools for Hindu girls in the city of Madura were examined by the deputy inspectress. 101 girls were presented, of whom 37 were for the 1st standard, 32 for the 2nd, 23 for the 3rd, and 9 for the 4th standard grant. How many passed we do not know, but it is morally certain that some, probably a good many, failed to do so. The grant secured was Rs. 987-4-0. A short time ago in a mission school in Ahmednagar 100 girls were presented for examination, of whom 17 were for the 1st standard, 36 for the 2nd standard, 23 for the 3rd standard, and 24 for the 4th standard. Here there were 24 for the 4th and higher standard instead of 9 as in Madura. Yet had every girl in Ahmednagar passed in every head, the school could have received only Rs. 720-8-0.

Does not approve of the policy of engaging men as teachers in the vernacular schools in the city of Poona

The Shiváji (63) of the 4th January says that it has heard from a reliable source that the educational authorities have determined that in future the masters in the vernacular schools in the city of Poona will be appointed on condition of their allowing their wives to be trained as teachers on condition of their allowing their wives to be trained as teachers in the Female Training College.

in the Female Training College. A more ill-considered and tyrannical measure can hardly be conceived. No man of ability and respectability will care to accept the post of a teacher in a vernacular school on such a condition. It will be only men who have no character to lose who will be willing to undertake the duty of teaching in the Government vernacular schools in Poona. In Native society people are not desirous of giving education to their young wives by sending them to a public school. In a country where the chastity of women is not considered of much importance persons may be found willing to get their wives educated in public institutions, but such is not the case here. When husbands and wives have public duties to perform, the household work will have to be done by servants. This will increase the expense of families. On account of these difficulties disreputable persons alone will come forward to undertake the duties of teachers in the vernacular schools in Poona, and the danger of entrusting the teaching of the young to such men is obvious. In the matter of the education of women the authorities appear to be going mad. If people wish to have their wives and daughters highly educated, let them do so at their own expense. It is not right to spend funds raised by general taxation in the interests of a few individuals only. The present condition of the inhabitants of India is adverse to the high education of women. Girls' schools as they are at present answer all needs. The authorities should not recklessly spend public money on objects for which there is no demand. [The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 6th and the Maháráshtră Mitră (41) of the 10th January in writing on the same subject express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Says that the multitude of duties undertaken by Dr. Peterson prevents him from doing his College work thoroughly, and expresses surprise that Government should allow him to neglect his duties as Professor of Sanskrit at the Elphinstone College.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 6th January says:—In a late issue we passingly noticed the re-election of Dr. Peterson to the Registrarship of our University, and we were led to remark that the annual examinations require better management and supervision than were shown this year. But with the numerous duties that the Doctor has imposed upon himself better work can hardly be expected from him. He is Professor of Oriental Languages in Elphinstone College, a member of the Municipal Corporation as well as of the Town Council, and he is Registrar of our University. Dame Rumour also places him in the list of regular contributors to one of the local English dailies. He has the editing of the Bombay Sanskrit series and also of Trübner & Co.'s new series. Each of these offices involves regular work, several of them physical attendance, and it is impossible to do all to satisfaction. We are accustomed to see the Registrarship added to professional duties, and the editing of a Sanskrit series is fitting work for a Professor of Oriental Languages; but here surely all further additions should cease. A keener sense of duty would have suggested a little more self-denial than it is evidently given to Dr. Peterson to exercise. But the great surprise to us is that Government, which frowns with indignation upon poor schoolmasters taking up private tuitions and thus utilizing what time is undoubtedly theirs to rightly eke out scanty miserable earnings, complacently allows Dr. Peterson to go on adding incomes to a fairly handsome salary as Professor even at the risk of reducing his usefulness in the sphere in which he has been brought out to work. It would be no wonder if with so many paying things distracting his attention neither the quality nor the quantity of Dr. Peterson's work should be such as to satisfy his pupils at College and if his attendance there was not always as regular as it might be. The Town Council has fixed days and fixed hours for its meetings—missing them is losing money; the University business must be gone through at stated times;—therefore these receive first and prompt attention, and hence what ought in fairness to claim his foremost if not undivided care really stands at the best but third in the programme of his duties as they are at present. His having a Dakshina Fellow and two Shástris to assist him in his College work helps him to throw on the shoulders of subordinates work for which he was engaged, for which he is paid, and for which he is certainly responsible. When there was an Assistant Professor of Sanskrit at Elphinstone College, the students' wants were most conscientiously looked after and they did not grudge Dr. Peterson his extra earnings. But now that the students have to look to the learned Doctor alone for superior instruction, they have a right to expect, what they always had a right to claim, his first and most anxious attention. Dr. Peterson we believe to be a man of parts, and he should have a more lasting interest in the important duties he has undertaken as Professor than his German predecessors. But by undertaking too much he is doing as much harm to his own reputation as injustice to his pupils, and he will exercise a wise abstinence by giving up what he must know interferes with the efficient discharge of his duties at College. May some such understanding have come to between Dr. Peterson and the Honourable Ráo Sáheb who proposed him for re-election to the Registrarship? We have a better opinion of the Ráo Sáheb than to think that he will allow principles and public interests to be sacrificed to considerations of friendship. Dr. Peterson might yet take a hint, but if he does not, Professor Wordsworth will, we hope, now that the matter has been brought to his notice, take steps to awaken him to a sense of duty.

Railways.

Complains against the reduction made in the hours of delivery of goods on the G. I. P. Railway.

With reference to the notice recently issued by the Traffic Manager of the G. I. P. Railway that on week days excepting Saturday goods will be received or delivered at the Wádi Bandar and other railway stations from 7 in the morning till 4½ in the afternoon (Madras time), that goods will be received or delivered on Saturdays till 3 in the afternoon, and that no goods will be either received or delivered on Sundays, a correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 8th January observes that these arrangements have caused great inconvenience and loss to merchants. The old servants of the Company who were employed at the Wádi Bandar station have left the Company's service and new men have been employed in their places. The number of these servants is small compared to the amount of work they are required to go through, and consequently much confusion is caused in carrying on the work. The consignee of the goods is required to remove them within twenty-four hours after their arrival, and when this is not done wharfage fees are charged upon them. It was generally found impracticable to remove all goods before 5 in the evening and the merchants had to pay wharfage fees. Now the time of delivery is curtailed to 4 in the afternoon, and consequently the merchants will have to pay more fees on account of wharfage charges. The closing of delivery work at 3 in the afternoon on Saturdays will also inflict losses on merchants. In the Prince's Dock goods are delivered from sunrise to sunset, and a similar practice was observed on the G. I. P. Railway formerly. It is therefore to be hoped that the old practice will be reverted to and the inconvenience caused to the merchants removed.

Municipalities.

Requests Government to publish the Collector's report and the remarks of the Revenue Commissioner thereon on the enquiry into the charges of alleged misapplication of municipal funds brought against Mr. Fernandez.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th January says:—The Government of Bombay deserve credit for having inquired into the charges of alleged misapplication of municipal funds brought against the permanent chairman of the Ahmedabad Municipality. It may be remembered that for months past we have requested the authorities to disprove the charges preferred against Mr. Fernandez by the public opinion of Ahmedabad. Government seem to have ordered an official inquiry into the matter, the result of which is a seeming exoneration of the officer concerned. For shorn of the delicate phraseology in which the communication appearing under Mr. Nugent's signature is couched, the resolution appears to our rude intellect to mean no more than that Mr. Fernandez was guilty of irregularity in some instances (be the cause what it may), and that in future Mr. Fernandez, in whom the Government have confidence, will not have the power of spending public funds without the consent of his colleagues. This then seems to be the outcome of the investigation, and we wish Mr. Fernandez joy of it. But who conducted the inquiry and submitted the report? Why, the Collector of Ahmedabad,—no other than Mr. Fernandez's immediate superior, under whose advice or instruction Mr. Fernandez may have spent the municipal funds! What is the value to the public of such inquiry? We know that under the existing system of administration an official inquiry cannot conveniently be held otherwise. But all the same, the result must be more or less unsatisfactory. Perhaps Government will be good enough to publish the Collector's report with the Revenue Commissioner's remarks thereon—showing how the inquiry was conducted, who were consulted and examined, how the charges were refuted, and so on. We have no wish to be hard on individuals; but at the same time we submit that the people of Ahmedabad have had no opportunity of proving their case, nor have their allegations been publicly disproved.

Remarks in connection with the Government resolution regarding the official conduct of Mr. Fernandez.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 10th January, in an article headed "Failure of Justice to the Rate-payers of Ahmedabad," says:—In a recent resolution the Government of Bombay acknowledges that Mr. Fernandez took action in some instances without consulting the municipal committee. This is a direct or indirect blame, as Mr. Fernandez and his friends may choose to interpret. It means that he acted illegally and is therefore, we think, personally liable to make good all losses incurred by the municipality in consequence of his illegal acts if the corporation or any of the rate-payers sue him in a civil court. For instance, in the notorious case of Rádhan Miá's Haveli he should have to pay all the money drawn by him from the municipal treasury without consulting the municipal committee, should the present negotiations with Rádhan Miá's daughter fail and the civil court uphold her claim. The distinct declaration in the resolution as founded upon the reports of Messrs. Reid and Sheppard separates Mr. Fernandez from Government, and the responsibility of his acts now solely rests upon him in all cases in which he did not consult the corporation according to the municipal law in force. Let this be a warning to all future chairmen and presidents. In the first part of the resolution the Governor in Council declares his confidence in the zeal and integrity of Mr. Fernandez unshaken. This is good consolation for the latter and his satellites, but it must be remembered that the zeal and integrity of the late chairman were not questioned by the Indian Spectator, at whose instance a partial enquiry was made by Government. It was the overzeal of Mr. Fernandez, his hastiness in taking action and his anxiety to proceed with railway speed that caused all the mischief. Mr. Reid does not seem to have ascertained the amount of harm done to the municipal coffers by the unwise zeal and unnecessary energy of his protége. It was the ambition of Mr. Fernandez to do what Messrs. Hope and Borradaile have failed to perform, and his wish not to divide the credit of the work with the municipal commissioners and his mistake in supposing that he could keep down the prices of houses if he proceeded without consulting the corporation and bought the houses through his assistant Mr. Tribhowandás Bápálál, that led to his being obliged to pay such unusually high prices. Had he obtained a resolution of the general meeting and applied the Land Acquisition Act and appointed a committee of some of the more intelligent and influential commissioners to help him in buying the houses, thousands of rupees would have been saved and there would not have been two prices, the bazár price and the municipal price, as observed by the late lamented Judge of Ahmedabad. We believe that about half the amount of money already spent would have done the work. Neither the Executive Engineer nor the municipal secretary, who is a well-trained engineer, was called to assess the value of houses bought. The public wanted Government to declare whether Mr. Fernandez was right or wrong in the course he pursued in this matter. As there was no allusion to Mr. Fernandez's zeal and integrity in the Indian Spectator, the Government expression on the subject is uncalled for. The Spectator asked for an independent enquiry into the mal-administration and extravagance of Mr. Fernandez as official chairman of the Ahmedabad Munici-will not have the power of spending public funds without the consent of his colleagues. This then seems to be the outcome of the investigation, and we wish Mr. Fernandez joy of it. But who conducted the inquiry and submitted the report? Why, the Collector of Ahmedabad,—no other than Mr. Fernandez's immediate superior, under whose advice or instruction Mr. Fernandez may have spent the municipal funds! What is the value to the public of such inquiry? We know that under the existing system of administration an official inquiry cannot conveniently be held otherwise. But all the same, the result must be more or less unsatisfactory. Perhaps Government will be good enough to publish the Collector's report with the Revenue Commissioner's remarks thereon—showing how the inquiry was conducted, who were consulted and examined, how the charges were refuted, and so on. We have no wish to be hard on individuals; but at the same time we submit that the people of Ahmedabad have had no opportunity of proving their case, nor have their allegations been publicly disproved.

Remarks in connection with the Government resolution regarding the official conduct of Mr. Fernandez.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 10th January, in an article headed "Failure of Justice to the Rate-payers of Ahmedabad," says:—In a recent resolution the Government of Bombay acknowledges that Mr. Fernandez took action in some instances without consulting the municipal committee. This is a direct or indirect blame, as Mr. Fernandez and his friends may choose to interpret. It means that he acted illegally and is therefore, we think, personally liable to make good all losses incurred by the municipality in consequence of his illegal acts if the corporation or any of the rate-payers sue him in a civil court. For instance, in the notorious case of Rádhan Miá's Haveli he should have to pay all the money drawn by him from the municipal treasury without consulting the municipal committee, should the present negotiations with Rádhan Miá's daughter fail and the civil court uphold her claim. The distinct declaration in the resolution as founded upon the reports of Messrs. Reid and Sheppard separates Mr. Fernandez from Government, and the responsibility of his acts now solely rests upon him in all cases in which he did not consult the corporation according to the municipal law in force. Let this be a warning to all future chairmen and presidents. In the first part of the resolution the Governor in Council declares his confidence in the zeal and integrity of Mr. Fernandez unshaken. This is good consolation for the latter and his satellites, but it must be remembered that the zeal and integrity of the late chairman were not questioned by the Indian Spectator, at whose instance a partial enquiry was made by Government. It was the overzeal of Mr. Fernandez, his hastiness in taking action and his anxiety to proceed with railway speed that caused all the mischief. Mr. Reid does not seem to have ascertained the amount of harm done to the municipal coffers by the unwise zeal and unnecessary energy of his protége. It was the ambition of Mr. Fernandez to do what Messrs. Hope and Borradaile have failed to perform, and his wish not to divide the credit of the work with the municipal commissioners and his mistake in supposing that he could keep down the prices of houses if he proceeded without consulting the corporation and bought the houses through his assistant Mr. Tribhowandás Bápálál, that led to his being obliged to pay such unusually high prices. Had he obtained a resolution of the general meeting and applied the Land Acquisition Act and appointed a committee of some of the more intelligent and influential commissioners to help him in buying the houses, thousands of rupees would have been saved and there would not have been two prices, the bazár price and the municipal price, as observed by the late lamented Judge of Ahmedabad. We believe that about half the amount of money already spent would have done the work. Neither the Executive Engineer nor the municipal secretary, who is a well-trained engineer, was called to assess the value of houses bought. The public wanted Government to declare whether Mr. Fernandez was right or wrong in the course he pursued in this matter. As there was no allusion to Mr. Fernandez's zeal and integrity in the Indian Spectator, the Government expression on the subject is uncalled for. The Spectator asked for an independent enquiry into the mal-administration and extravagance of Mr. Fernandez as official chairman of the Ahmedabad Municipality, and Government, we are sorry to say, has disappointed the public in that respect and failed in its duty. The Collector's report is not published and we are therefore unable to say what explanation it contains. But from the nature of the thing it cannot be otherwise than a one-sided and imperfect view. He has made no public enquiries, and as far as we can guess has not submitted to Government the finding of the late Judge, Mr. Phillpotts, and his reference to the High Court regarding the valuation of houses. There are many mysteries concerning this—a subject which cannot be cleared up without a public enquiry by independent men unconnected both with the Collector and Mr. Fernandez. One of the cases talked about, for instance, is that a piece of land was sold to Mr. Saváibhái, the editor of the Samsher Báhádur (116), a steadfast defender of all the acts of Messrs. Fernandez and Tribhowandás, at the rate of Rs. 4 per yard, while a piece of land adjacent to it was sold to a person named Sankla Javer by the municipality at the rate of Rs. 33 per yard, the circumstances being the same! A piece of land with a house standing on it was sold to the same Saváibhái at the rate of Rs. 15 per yard notwithstanding that a neighbour named Mulchand came forward to compete for it and demanded that the ground and the house on it should be sold by public auction. It can be proved that this neighbour, according to the old custom of the city and country, had a superior claim to buy it, his house being situated next to the place. Possibly there may be some satisfactory explanation for this great apparent difference of prices and of many other facts which now go against the management of Mr. Fernandez, but in the absence of proper explanation they sustain the charge of mal-administration and extravagance. For the sake of his own reputation and for the benefit of Mr. Fernandez and the rate-payers of Ahmedabad Mr. Reid ought to have enquired publicly through the present managing committee of the municipality, the majority of which would never go against official inclination, and hence there was no fear of injustice being done to Mr. Fernandez. We want justice for all. Has Mr. Reid included in his report the misappropriation of Rs. 21,000 belonging to the Ranchhodlál Dispensary, and if so, why is no mention made of it in the Government resolution? We are obliged therefore to say that Government has not done full justice to the case. [The Ahmedabad Samáchár (85) of the 9th January says that Mr. Fernandez has done well in constructing the new Champol Road, but this much is certain that unusually high prices have been paid for some houses bought for the purpose by his placing too much confidence in some persons. The sale of land also was not free from favouritism. The work of buying and selling land ought to have been done through a committee of the commissioners.]

Criticises the resolution of the Government of Bombay exculpating Mr. Fernandez, the late chairman of the Ahmedabad Municipality, from certain charges of mismanagement preferred against him by the Indian Spectator.

In noticing the Government resolution in the matter of certain charges preferred by the Indian Spectator (1) against the administration of Mr. Fernandez, the chairman of the managing committee of the Ahmedabad Municipality, the Yajdán Parast (127) of the 6th January observes that the resolution absolves the accused from the first charge of wasting municipal funds, but considers him guilty of the other accusation that he prosecuted certain works without previously obtaining the consent of the committee. Government, however, observe that such occurrences as have been laid to the account of Mr. Fernandez were not unusual in the early days of municipal government. But it must be remarked that the infancy of local government is no excuse for breaking through the principles and objects of the new system. The question is, did Mr. Fernandez break the law by spending the municipal funds without the consent of the committee? And if he was guilty of doing so, he deserved censure. Government convict him of the offence, but do not warn him against the wrong course he had taken. The observations made in the resolution on this head are tantamount to an encouragement to the official chairman of a managing committee to do as Mr. Fernandez did. This proceeding of Government is certainly objectionable. In praising Mr. Fernandez for his municipal administration the resolution observes that the popular members of the corporation take part in the administration of the municipality, but they cannot be expected to show in the performance of their duty the same zeal as was evinced by the late official chairman. This is a gratuitous insult to the popular members. It was not expected that the Bombay Government would still persist in their opposition to the scheme of local self-government after the public criticisms and the censure dealt out by the Government of India and the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Peile to the Executive Council in place of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner, who was opposed to almost every work that was intended to benefit Natives. It is to be regretted that the resolution exposes the determination of the Bombay Government to concede to this Presidency nominal local self-government. [The Gujaráti (101) of the same date expresses dissatisfaction with the resolution and requests Government to publish the report made by Mr. Reid, the Collector of Ahmedabad, on the subject, in order to enable the public to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.]

Remarks in connection with certain charges against the secretary of the Sholápur Municipality.

The Kalpataru (33) of 6th January says that if any Government servant had been found guilty of the offences and blunders which have been committed by the secretary of the municipality of Sholápur, Government would not have overlooked his faults or hesitated to bring him to justice. But of course in matters affecting a municipality Government is not immediately interested. The principal Government officials in Sholápur have not paid that attention to this matter which the importance of the subject deserves. There is room for doubting the municipal secretary's honesty and therefore it is not right to entrust to him the administration of funds amounting to lákhs of rupees. The Kalpataru is surprised that hitherto no attention has been given by the municipal commissioners to the serious shortcomings of their secretary.

Native States.

Says that the enormous power which is wielded by political officers over Native princes and their kárbháris is not justified by the present circumstances.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 7th January in a Maráthi article observes that the intention of the present Government of India seems to be to give Natives as many rights and privileges as possible so as to enable them to manage their own affairs. The Ilbert Bill and the schemes of local self-government are the outcome of this policy. But it is strange that Government should be indifferent regarding the affairs of Native States. It is now many years since Native States have been under the complete subjection of the British power, but there has been no corresponding change in the manner and mode in which Native princes are treated and their relations with the paramount power are carried on. In 1860 Lord Canning, in writing to Sir Mark Cubbon on the subject of the relations of Native States with the paramount power, observed that it was all very well formerly to prevent different Native princes from corresponding with each other, but that there was then no need for such precautions. Fifty years back Native princes kept infantry and artillery, and their military resources were rather formidable. They could then have increased their military establishments without the knowledge of the British Government. In this respect the state of things had completely altered. Native princes now hardly possessed any armies. They were not allowed to keep any artillery, and had no means of manufacturing guns. It was also impossible for them to increase their military establishments without that fact coming to the knowledge of the British Government. Again since the events of 1857 Native princes had come thoroughly to realise their position and their entire dependence on the British power. These opinions of Lord Canning were delivered nearly twenty-three years ago, and yet very little advance has been made in improving the relations of the paramount power with the Native States. The Indu Prakásh thinks that Native princes should be perfectly free to manage the internal affairs of their States and that the British officials should not exercise pressure of any kind upon them. Those who are at the helm of affairs can hardly realise to themselves the dread which is entertained by Native princes of their Political Agents. When political officers in Káthiáwár are on tour the Native princes in whose expected to show in the performance of their duty the same zeal as was evinced by the late official chairman. This is a gratuitous insult to the popular members. It was not expected that the Bombay Government would still persist in their opposition to the scheme of local self-government after the public criticisms and the censure dealt out by the Government of India and the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Peile to the Executive Council in place of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner, who was opposed to almost every work that was intended to benefit Natives. It is to be regretted that the resolution exposes the determination of the Bombay Government to concede to this Presidency nominal local self-government. [The Gujaráti (101) of the same date expresses dissatisfaction with the resolution and requests Government to publish the report made by Mr. Reid, the Collector of Ahmedabad, on the subject, in order to enable the public to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion.]

Remarks in connection with certain charges against the secretary of the Sholápur Municipality.

The Kalpataru (33) of 6th January says that if any Government servant had been found guilty of the offences and blunders which have been committed by the secretary of the municipality of Sholápur, Government would not have overlooked his faults or hesitated to bring him to justice. But of course in matters affecting a municipality Government is not immediately interested. The principal Government officials in Sholápur have not paid that attention to this matter which the importance of the subject deserves. There is room for doubting the municipal secretary's honesty and therefore it is not right to entrust to him the administration of funds amounting to lákhs of rupees. The Kalpataru is surprised that hitherto no attention has been given by the municipal commissioners to the serious shortcomings of their secretary.

Native States.

Says that the enormous power which is wielded by political officers over Native princes and their kárbháris is not justified by the present circumstances.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 7th January in a Maráthi article observes that the intention of the present Government of India seems to be to give Natives as many rights and privileges as possible so as to enable them to manage their own affairs. The Ilbert Bill and the schemes of local self-government are the outcome of this policy. But it is strange that Government should be indifferent regarding the affairs of Native States. It is now many years since Native States have been under the complete subjection of the British power, but there has been no corresponding change in the manner and mode in which Native princes are treated and their relations with the paramount power are carried on. In 1860 Lord Canning, in writing to Sir Mark Cubbon on the subject of the relations of Native States with the paramount power, observed that it was all very well formerly to prevent different Native princes from corresponding with each other, but that there was then no need for such precautions. Fifty years back Native princes kept infantry and artillery, and their military resources were rather formidable. They could then have increased their military establishments without the knowledge of the British Government. In this respect the state of things had completely altered. Native princes now hardly possessed any armies. They were not allowed to keep any artillery, and had no means of manufacturing guns. It was also impossible for them to increase their military establishments without that fact coming to the knowledge of the British Government. Again since the events of 1857 Native princes had come thoroughly to realise their position and their entire dependence on the British power. These opinions of Lord Canning were delivered nearly twenty-three years ago, and yet very little advance has been made in improving the relations of the paramount power with the Native States. The Indu Prakásh thinks that Native princes should be perfectly free to manage the internal affairs of their States and that the British officials should not exercise pressure of any kind upon them. Those who are at the helm of affairs can hardly realise to themselves the dread which is entertained by Native princes of their Political Agents. When political officers in Káthiáwár are on tour the Native princes in whose territories they are moving can alone tell what expense and trouble they are put to in keeping these officers satisfied. Native princes are frequently fined for the most trifling reasons if they fail to please the political officers. Many persons have had to leave the territories of Native princes because they happened to incur the displeasure of the kárbháris who possessed the confidence of the Political Agent. The immense importance which political officers at present enjoy is out of all proportion to the necessities of the situation. The enormous power which they wield over Native princes is not beneficial in any way. In order to keep Political Agents satisfied, these princes and their kárbháris are obliged to make large donations for purposes of which they know very little. The Indu Prakásh considers that Native princes should be allowed perfect freedom of action. In important matters they should be permitted to correspond directly with the head of the Government. It is to be hoped that Lord Ripon will take measures to curtail the powers of political officers in Native States. The Native princes themselves should also represent their grievances to Lord Ripon. At present those princes who are visiting Calcutta to see the International Exhibition will have a capital opportunity for making a representation collectively to Lord Ripon in the matter of the superintending powers enjoyed by political officers over Native States.

Remarks in connection with the death of the Rája of Kolhápur.

The Chháva (21) of the 6th January, in alluding to the death of the Rája of Kolhápur, refers to old occurrences, makes remarks which were made during the press prosecutions two years ago, and severely censures the Bombay Government for its alleged harsh treatment of that prince. The Chháva is of opinion that Mr. Green should receive the punishment he deserves for his harsh treatment of the Rája, and the Bombay Government should also be punished for its neglect of duty.

Does not approve of the rumoured transfer of the control of the administration of Kolhápur to the jurisdiction of the Commissioner, Southern Division.

The Shiváji (63) of the 4th January alludes to the death of the Mahárája of Kolhápur and says that it is given out that since the establishment of the Council of Regency Ráo Báhádur Barve has not been pulling well with the other members of that body. There must be some ground for this rumour, inasmuch as the Ráo Báhádur has been repeatedly obtaining extensions of leave. It is said that the party in the minority is endeavouring to get the upper hand by all means in its power. It is to be hoped, however, that it will not succeed. It is alleged that the Council of Regency is unnecessarily expensive, and consequently it is suggested that it should be done away with and that the administration be conducted by a kárbhári under the supervision of a Political Superintendent under the general control of the Commissioner of the Southern Division. The Shiváji has heard that the above is the outline of a scheme which is under discussion in the Bombay Government and which is likely to be adopted. If the Council of Regency is expensive there will be no difficulty in reducing its cost. The Regent cannot be doing his work for the mere love of money, as he has an independent income. His salary can be very well curtailed. There is no necessity whatever for transferring the control of the administration of Kolhápur to the Commissioner of the Southern Division. The Shiváji altogether disapproves of this suggestion. In the matter of adoption care should be taken to select an intelligent boy.

Says that Government should exercise the greatest care in adopting a boy for the Kolhápur gádi and in selecting a guardian for him.

In a paragraph headed "Succession to the Kolhápur Gádi" the Native Opinion (10) of the 6th January says:—Khatpat must be plying hard to place its favourites before Government as the most eligible candidates for succession to the gádi. We hope in making the selection Government will make the minutest scrutiny as to the fitness of the boy's mental and physical constitution so as to leave no room for backing out of the selection. Government will have to take another precaution in selecting a suitable guardian for the young Maháráj. The Native public have lost all faith in some of the old and highly placed officials of that State, and if Government really mean well of that principality they ought to respect public opinion.

Makes suggestions for the selection of a boy for the throne of Kolhápur.

The Bodh Sudhákar (19) of 9th January suggests that one of the two sons of Aba Sáheb Maháráj of the Bhosle family of Sátára should be selected to fill the throne of Kolhápur. The name of the elder boy is Anna Sáheb and of the younger Bháu Sáheb. They are both well educated and of the proper age. They are without any bodily infirmities and are also good-looking. Either of them would do very well for the Kolhápur gádi. The selection of one of them would be highly gratifying to the entire community of Mahárásbtra and would reflect credit on the judgment of the Government of Bombay and the Viceroy of India. [The Pratod (54) of the 7th January in writing on the same subject makes the same suggestions.]

Comments in connection with the alleged prevalence of frauds at Hyderabad.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 7th January, in noticing the article that appeared in the Statesman newspaper of Calcutta alleging prevalence of frauds at Hyderabad, remarks :—We believed that Paul Benfieldism had already its death-knell sounded. The Statesman rouses us from our security and springs upon us a mine of frauds for which we were altogether unprepared. So, according to the Statesman, we have the Nawáb of Arcot's parallel in the young Nizám. Messrs. Trevor and Abdul Huq are introduced much in the same position as the Benfield brotherhood, and very likely the Statesman would not dislike a comparison with Edmund Burke. The alleged revelations which the Statesman requests its readers to believe in are, if true, simply outrageous. Bribery, jobbery and roguery are laid at the doors of the Hyderabad First Assistant Political Resident, Major Trevor, Mr. Palmers, Mr. Trevor the Major's brother, Abdul Huq and the Peshkár. The accusations may or may not be true for aught we know. But an experienced journalist should surely have avoided the very indiscreet epithets he has deliberately used. The intelligent public cannot have a tittle of sympathy with them as long as only one side of the question is laid before them. The extremely grave nature of the charges made and the utterly reckless manner in which the writer throws out choice descriptions of supposed plots and swindles demand that the whole transaction should be very narrowly searched into by the responsible persons. The editor of the Statesman being known for his uprightness and good judgment, our apprehensions are greatly intensified. We often hear very damaging reports about political officers in the Native States. But the present allegation looks completely fabulous. We are told that the Nizám has been systematically plundered by the Residency officials. A sham formal application for the services of the relations of the Residency officials is made, and it is alleged this gang of Residency officials has been robbing the Nizám wholesale. Mr. Trevor, the Resident's brother, who was it is said a briefless barrister in London and who had unsuccessfully applied for the tutorship to the Nizám, was given a sinecure appointment of Rs. 2,000 per month by the late Sir Sálar Jung. After 8 years, of which nearly 18 months were spent in England, this gentleman, it is represented, procured a discharge from Sir Sálar on being paid two years' full pay in advance. Sir Sálar Jung looks in the Statesman's hands quite a foolishly liberal rája of the old times. Mr. Trevor left this sinecure office for joining the 'ring' of rogues in London under the leadership of Abdul Huq, the gentleman who was instrumental in arresting Wásudev Balwant Phadke. Abdul Huq is shown as being both the tool and the terror of the Residency. He is supposed to know all their alleged scandals and devices. He has his two brothers appointed as Superintendent General of the Nizám's police and as Assistant Cantonment Magistrate of Secunderabad. One of these brothers is appointed by the Resident to transact business between him and the Peshkár. Both of the brothers are now in Calcutta, accused of doing the detestable duty of spies with felonious purposes. The Peshkár, who is described as old, ignorant, with mind and body gone, is clear-headed enough to insist on himself having reports from the spies, independently of Mr. Abdul Huq in London. The latter gentleman's antecedents are given by way of preface to his character. He is supposed to have blindfolded Dr. Wilson and at the price of a few sweet words about wishing to be baptized got his foot into the Hyderabad State. Messrs. Huq and Trevor are in friendly alliance and are depicted to be deeply engaged in defrauding both the Nizám and the British capitalist. Two 'sluices' are mentioned through which the spoilers mean to make money, 1st, the Berár movement, and 2ndly, the railway scheme. According to the Statesman's information even the shares of those gentlemen seem to have been already determined in the projected robbery. In the Berár movement Mr. Palmers figures as a first class cheat. He seems, as the story is told, to have utterly hoodwinked the shrewd Sir Sálar Jung. Everybody knows how sincerely and earnestly Sir Sálar wished to recover the Berárs. This Mr. Palmers, it is expressly said, buoyed him up with various plausible hopes, and in company with an accomplice, a valet at court, wrote various letters to Sir Sálar. This valet was a schoolfellow of Mr. Palmers and had described himself to the Premier as the German Secretary to the Queen. As soon as Sir Sálar discovered the trick, the salary of Rs. 5,000 which Mr. Palmers used punctually to get for two years and more was discontinued. We don't wish to give further details. We hope the gentlemen villified will promptly bring the offenders to justice. We certainly don't see any crime in furthering the prospects of our brothers and relations, but for the foul ends and with the foul means so flagrantly alleged it would be abominable. [The Suryă Prakásh (84) of the 5th January says that if the allegations made by the Statesman be true, the Government of India ought to take immediate measures. The young Nizám should after his coronation in February next institute due enquiries in the matter and take steps to improve the state of things. When he does so he will be able to put his dominions on a good footing.]

Says that Native princes should be compelled by Government to send their sons to the Rájkumár College.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 4th January says that it is a matter for regret that some Thákors and jamindárs should not send their sons to the Rájkumár College for education though Government has made it obligatory on them to do so. Native princes do not see the importance of educating their sons and commit the greatest of errors in spoiling them by over-indulgence. Why does not Government compel such defaulting potentates to send their sons to the Rájkumár College? What is the reason of the Pálitána and other princes not joining the College? The Political Agent ought to attend to this matter.

Berár Affairs.

Says that serious inconvenience and losses are caused to traders for want of a Judge to decide suits in the Civil Court of Jalgaon.

A correspondent of the Varhád Samáchár (70) of 7th January says that the Civil Court at Jalgaon in the Akola District in the Berárs has been closed since 10th August 1883 and no Judge has since been appointed to do the work, which has accumulated. The inconvenience felt by traders and shopkeepers is very great and they are suffering severe losses. The work of executing decrees which have been already passed cannot be proceeded with until a Judge is appointed. Goods and valuables attached under the decrees of the Court of Jalgaon have been deposited in the precincts of the Court-house, but of course no further action can be taken with respect to them without orders from the Judge of the Court. The Shirastedár of the Court is empowered to receive plaints in suits to prevent them from being barred by limitation. A couple of hundred suits of this nature have already accumulated on the files of the Court. The correspondent is unable to understand why the authorities should delay to appoint a Judge to the Civil Court of Jalgaon and should unnecessarily inflict losses on merchants and traders and cause them serious inconvenience.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
19th January 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Calcutta International Exhibition: Advice to the Bombay Government to send to the — a few Native artizans at the cost of the State ... 3
Church at Parel: Condemnation of the grant of a plot of land and a donation of Rs. 7,000 from the State treasury for the erection of a Christian— 3
Gubernatorial tours: Disapproval of — as at present undertaken ... 3
Public honours:
  Praises Government for acknowledging the public services of Mr. Nowroji Fardunji by creating him a Companion of the Indian Empire 4
  Reasons for stating that the class of jo-hukum men are not really loyal 4
  Recommendation for the bestowal of deserving honours upon Mr. Dadábhái Nowroji and Mr. Dinsháh Mánekji Petit by Government 5
Reappearance of cholera in Bombay: Expression of opinion that the dirty condition of the quarters of Bombay inhabited by poor people is a cause of the— 4

Part II.—Local Self-government—

Amended Local Boards Bill: Comments in connection with the— ... 5
Amended Municipal Bill: Comments in connection with the— ... 7
Local Boards in the Bombay Presidency: Expression of opinion that the — ought to have the power of electing their own presidents ... 6

Part III.—Legislation—

Concordat arrived at between the Government and the European Defence Association in regard to the final settlement of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
  Condemnation of the — and a prayer for the extension of the right of trial by jury to Natives 16
  Expression of opinion that Natives have no reason to find fault with the — and disapproval of the conduct of those who cry down the Bill in its modified form 11
  Expression of opinion that the Native press is unanimous about the value of Lord Ripon's services, and statement of reasons for the desponding tone of a portion of it by the sudden announcement of the — and the exulting tone of the bulletins of the Defence Association 13
  Expression of opinion that the Natives have not approved of the—... 16
  Justification and approval of the Viceroy's conduct in the matter of the— 12
Extension of the system of trial by jury to Natives:
  Advisability of the— 15
  Expression of opinion that the proposal for the — does not affect Europeans 13
  Justification for the— 14
  Satisfaction at the contemplated—
    The Indian Spectator 14
    The Yajdán Parast 14
Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
  Approval of the principle of the Amended— 9
  Expression of opinion that Sir Bartle Frere's political utterances are of little value 16
  Great satisfaction with the Viceroy's speech at the last meeting of the Supreme Legislative Council in connection with the— ... 9

Part IV.—Education—

Grants awarded to educational institutions in the Bombay Presidency: Complaint against the — being not as liberal as those in Madras ... 17
Policy of engaging men as teachers in the vernacular schools in the city of Poona on condition of their allowing their wives to be trained as teachers in the Female Training College: Disapproval of the— ... 17

Page.

PART IV.—Education—continued.

Private educational institutions: Expression of opinion that Directors of Public Instruction should not have the power of regulating the fees in — and of fixing the number of free-studentships in them ... 17
Professor of Sanskrit at the Elphinstone College: Expression of opinion that the multitude of duties undertaken by Dr. Peterson prevents him from doing his College work thoroughly and of surprise at Government allowing him to neglect his duties as— 18

PART V.—Railways—

G. I. P. Railway: Complaint against the reduction made in the hours of delivery of goods on the— 19

PART VI.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad:
  Criticism on the resolution of the Government of Bombay exculpating Mr. Fernandez, the late chairman of the — Municipality, from certain charges of mismanagement preferred against him by the Indian Spectator 21
  Remarks in connection with ditto ditto 20
  Request to Government to publish the Collector's report and the remarks of the Revenue Commissioner thereon on the enquiry into the charges of alleged misapplication of municipal funds brought against Mr. Fernandez 19
Sholápur: Remarks in connection with certain charges against the secretary of the — Municipality 22

PART VII.—Native States—

Hyderabad: Comments in connection with the alleged prevalence of frauds at— 24
Kolhápur:
  Disapproval of the rumoured transfer of the control of the administration of — to the jurisdiction of the Commissioner, S. D. ... 23
  Expression of opinion that Government should exercise the greatest care in adopting a boy for the — gádi and in selecting a guardian for him 23
  Remarks in connection with the death of the Rája of—... ... 23
  Suggestion for the selection of a boy for the throne of— ... 24
Native Princes: Expression of opinion that — should be compelled by Government to send their sons to the Rájkumár College ... 25
Native Princes and their Kárbháris: Expression of opinion that the enormous power which is wielded by political officers over — is not justified by the present circumstances 22

PART VIII.—Berár Affairs—

Want of a Judge to decide suits in the Civil Court of Jalgaon: Serious inconvenience and losses caused to traders for— 25

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 19th January 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long á (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Suggests that the State should fix its share of the produce of land in kind and convert it into money value which should remain unalterable during the currency of the revenue settlement.

The Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha (4) for January 1884, in an article headed "Proposed Reforms in the Re-settlement of Land Assessments," discusses the minute of Sir Louis Malet relating to the above subject, and, after giving a summary of the official correspondence between the Government of India and the Bombay Government relating to the same matter, says: The views which we have in this journal and elsewhere published from time to time have been too often misunderstood. We have never asked for a subversion of the rayatwári tenure, or the substitution in its place of a zamindári settlement, either on the Bengal plan of individual zamindárs, or on the North-West Provinces system of collective zamindár village holdings. The rayatwári system has obtained in this Presidency from time immemorial, and it is the only one suited to the democratic constitution of our rural society. The old mirási tenure was one of permanent rayatwári holding, and we have always sought for the re-establishment of this mirási tenure and the re-assertion of its permanent condition. We have agitated, and shall continue to do so, till the agitation succeeds in persuading Government to alter its suspicious attitude—we have agitated for the permanent settlement of the assessment on the rayat's holding in this Presidency. There is no possible reason why small proprietors, dealing direct with Government, should not enjoy the benefit of a permanent settlement. The old mirásdárs were full proprietors of their lands in every sense, and they have been declared to be so by the highest courts in the land. The right of the State to levy a share of the produce as a tax for public purposes has never been questioned; we only seek that this right should be regulated by the old traditions of our law and pre-Mahomedan practice. The theory that the State is the owner of all cultivated land, and that private persons can at least be only tenants or occupants, is entirely of Mahomedan origin, and has no application in this Presidency because the Mahomedan law did not prevail here under the Native Marátha rule. The despotic maxim of Mahomedan conquerors has in recent years found support from Anglo-Indian writers and the radical teachers of English political economy, but neither the old Hindu Governments, nor the English Government up to a recent date, ever asserted such pretensions. The right of the State extends only to a fixed share of the produce of cultivated lands, and we have always striven to confine the authority of the State to a distinct recognititon of this limitation. We are aware that the Government hesitates to accept this view, because it apprehends that it might effect its revenues by making it impossible to raise the land-tax according to the exigencies of the times. We are not disposed to ignore the weight due to this consideration, especially in a poor country like India, where the land-tax is the principal resource and sheet-anchor of Indian Finance. We should never have pressed our own views in this connection with any persistency if their adoption had involved any unnecessary sacrifice of public revenue. There is, however, not the slightest ground for any such misapprehension. Our proposal has always been that the permanent settlement should be made, not of the money payments or revenue but of the payment in kind, which should be fixed in proportion to the natural productive capacities of different lands, and this kind payment should be, at every recurring interval of 30 years or more, turned into money values, which should remain fixed for the currency of the settlement. In this way Government would receive in money the value of the kind payment which is its proper share. The Settlement Department should fix the proportions of this payment in kind once for all, and the Revenue authorities should thereafter commute it into money values according to the permanent changes in prices. Such an arrangement will involve no sacrifice of public revenue. If prices rise with the prosperity of the country, the Government share of the fixed payment in kind turned into money values will also rise, and thus compensate the revenue for increased demands of expenditure. People who invest their savings in land will always know the extreme limit of their liability, and will regulate their mutual dealings accordingly. The land does not produce money, and money rates must always be fixed in reference to the produce in kind. The right of the State under the Hindu law also extends to a share of the produce. Both the natural and political conditions thus obviously require that the permanent settlement should be made with reference not to money rates but to the staple produce of land. We are sure that the conservatism of the Indian authorities is so deep-rooted that it will take a long time before these views find acceptance with the Government. Meanwhile it is satisfactory to note that the Government of India has substantially affirmed the correctness of these views in the suggestions for reform made by it to the local authorities. Though the points of view are so different, there is substantial record in the final conclusions. We trust that the local authorities will heartily co-operate with Lord Ripon's Government in giving effect to this noble policy, than which no more important work was ever undertaken by the British Government in India. In this, as in other respects, the Government must retrace its steps, forget its Mahomedan antecedents of absolutism, and return to the old Hindu traditions, where the king's power was restrained in all directions by the rights of the people, among whom the king was more of a father and a manager than a conqueror or a sovereign lord, and cultivated land belonged in absolute right to private owners, who paid as tax a fixed share of the produce as to the king like any of his other subjects for the expense of protection.

Says that Government should amend the law on the subject of taxing agricultural improvements and should not deal with this subject in Government Resolutions which are liable to be changed.

In an article headed "Assessment on Agricultural Improvements" the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th January says: In their resolution of November 10th, 1881, Government declare that clause (b) of section 107 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code shall not apply 'to wells dug at the expense of the owner or occupier of the soil,' but in the same breath they reserve the right of interpreting that clause to themselves and of notifying that it will not be held to apply to any particular class of improvements. Now what was there to prevent Government from at once notifying what sort of improvements they intended to exempt? Such a declaration would have settled all doubts and saved ignorant cultivators from sinking money in improvements which they are afterwards told they cannot enjoy the benefit of. But even supposing these resolutions on the subject had been more explicit than they are, the assurances conveyed by them would be far feebler than by an amendment of the law. We agree with the Bombay Gazette in thinking that it would tend to greater security if the enactment in the Land Revenue Code, section 107, had been modified in the spirit of these resolutions. Whatever the force of the resolutions as departmental orders, it is certain that the provisions of the Code are, until modified, fully calculated to cause alarm. It is those provisions that declare the law, and to the outside public as to the rayat they are a standing menace. Even the Famine Commission, though they had the assistance of such an able revenue officer as the Honourable Mr. Peile, thought that the provisions were prohibitory of such improvements as wells. Further, the Honourable Mr. Hope also declared, during the debate on the Agricultural Loans' Bill, that in Bombay wells had long been assessed. Such a view of the law, taken by such distinguished men, may well justify the typical Rámji bin Ráoji in believing that improvements in the shape of wells and so forth are liable to be taxed. If Government are sincere in their assurances, we trust it will behove Government to emphasize their assurances by a statutory declaration. Government would confer a great blessing on the people if they amended the law so as to make their policy plain beyond the shadow of a doubt. People may be excused if they distrust Government resolutions, seeing that they are so unstable, and short-lived. The resolutions of one Government are liable to be set aside by another, or even by the same Government, as was painfully illustrated by the fate of Sir Philip Wodehouse's resolutions as regards the maximum of enhancements on revision, and the application of local funds at the hands of Sir Richard Temple. Apart from the insecurity in the life of Government resolutions, it is unquestionable that they cannot have as strong a force of law as a legislative enactment. It is, therefore, we think, that Government should mend the law, and it is extremely undesirable that section 107 of the Land Revenue Code should remain as it is when they do not wish to enforce it rigorously. An amendment of the law will immediately restore confidence, and will give far more real relief than any number of resolutions or circulars.

Provision should be made for imparting agricultural education to the children of Indian farmers.

The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 15th January observes that the arrangement for sending a certain number of the University graduates in Bengal at certain intervals to England for obtaining instruction in scientific agriculture has proved a failure as predicted by the Bombay Samáchár four years ago when it was first brought into force. This failure ought to cause no surprise since the number of graduates was very small compared to the large extent of the country for whose benefit they were to be educated, and such highly educated persons naturally devoted their attention to more lucrative callings than the pursuit of agriculture. The only effectual way of supplying the agricultural wants of the country is to open agricultural classes in all parts of the country for the benefit of the children of farmers, and the instruction given to them should be of such a nature as would enable them to improve the cultivation of their ancestral farms. In order to obtain efficient teachers for these classes a few Indians should be sent to England for acquiring a knowledge of scientific agriculture, and on their return they should be employed to train teachers for the agricultural classes.

Condemns the policy of Government about the conservation of forests and advises the settlement of the land-tax in perpetuity.

The Arunodayă (14) of the 13th January says that when the Thána Collectorate was first surveyed for fixing the land revenue demand, the amount of the tax was settled on the understanding that the agriculturists would be allowed to collect without any additional payment the loppings of trees and the wood required for making ploughs and other produce of the forest required to prepare the land for cultivation. But while the land-tax has been retained at the figure at which it was settled on the first survey operations, the agriculturists have been gradually deprived of the rights and privileges which were then promised to them, and thus the Government has become liable to the charge of having broken faith. The Government ought to consider the needs of the agricultural population when making its forest regulations. Government had no right to make any changes affecting the cultivation of the land during the pendency of the thirty years' settlement. Any court of law would decide this point against Government if a suit was actually brought to claim damages from it for the non-fulfilment of the conditions on which the land revenue demand was fixed at the original settlement. Under the pretence of conserving forests Government has deprived agriculturists of rights which they formerly enjoyed. It is of course an undeniable fact that the conservation of forests is beneficial to the country, but there is no reason why the people should be made to suffer for the neglect of Government in allowing the denudation of forests. The destruction of forests has been brought about by the action of the Forest Department. Forests have been cut down, the wood has been sold by public auction, and the proceeds have been swept into the public treasury. The operation of cutting trees has been carried on systematically for years. Government is not justified in charging agriculturists with stopping the growth of trees. If the rules promulgated by Dr. Gibbons are acted upon for the conservation of forests. the growth of trees will keep pace with the demand for them. By settling the land-tax in perpetuity and by making agriculturists the sole proprietors of their lands, and by offering special inducements to plant trees and attend to their growth, the demand for wood would be fully met. Cultivation will not improve as long as Government retains the proprietary rights in land.

Does not approve of maintaining Christian religious establishments from the taxation raised from Hindus and Mahomedans.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 14th January says that several English journals contend that since the British Government has continued grants, both in land and money, to Hindu temples and Mahomedan mosques which were granted by previous rulers, it is not fair to reduce or abolish the small amount of money which is devoted to the support of the Christian churches in India. This argument seems plausible at first sight, but a little consideration will show that it is very weak. Those who know the history of the gradual subjugation of India by Britain will easily understand the reasons which led the British Government to continue money payments and inám lands granted for religious purposes by previous sovereigns. If the British Government had not continued the grants in land and money made by past Governments, it would never have obtained a firm footing in the country. The British Government was particularly careful not to offend the religious susceptibities of the inhabitants of India on account of the strong religious proclivities of the latter. The policy in other respects was different. The moment it was found that British authority had been firmly established, the British Government pursued a systematic policy of annexation and of depriving the owners of inám lands of their rights in them. Again, if it is right for the British Government to maintain chaplains from the taxes raised from Hindus and Mahomedans for the purpose of performing religious services for the English soldiers and civilians, then it is equally incumbent upon Government to support priests of Hindu and Mahomedan persuation for the performance of religious services for Hindu and Mahomedan soldiers and civilians. The Dnyán Prakásh considers that there is no justification for throwing on the Indian revenues the cost of supporting Christian religious establishments in India. In the present times religion is looked upon as each man's own private concern, and therefore it is not right to spend money from the public treasury to keep ministers of any particular religion.

Complains that next to benefiting Government, the officials try to give a helping hand to European traders.

The Shiváji (63) of the 11th January says that the abolition of the Central Book Depôt was determined upon with the object of affording encouragement to local trade and industry, but the result promises to be otherwise. The Director of Public Instruction has ordered that all Government Educational establishments in the Bombay Presidency should hereafter purchase books published in England from Messrs. Thacker & Co. This order indicates pretty well the intentions of the authorities. They do not evidently care much to afford encouragement to local traders in books. Next to benefiting Government they endeavour to give a helping hand to European traders. It is painful to have to notice this tendency in the ruling people. In Bombay there are many shops owned by Natives where books published in England are exposed for sale. It would have been better if any one of them had been asked to supply books required by the Educational Department. It is to be hoped that the authorities will attend to this suggestion.

Manufacture of liquor in Sálsette.

A correspondent of the Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th January calls the attention of the Abkári officers to the practice of manufacturing liquor in the Island of Sálsette, as well as to the undesirability of selling mhowra liquors. In distillation the chief point which is very often disregarded is the cleanliness of the vessels used for the purpose. The stills, being made of copper, have been considered objectionable, as verdigris is apt to form on their surface, which is dangerous to health. As to mhowra drink the people of Sálsette have a strong aversion, for they believe it to be deleterious in effect. Such being the case, there is no reason why their feeling should not be respected and why they should, in a certain manner, be compelled to use a drink they so much object to. The contractor refuses them toddy spirits, stating that the mhowra and other liquors (of toddy of course but of bad quality) lying in stock must be first disposed of; whilst in Bandora and other places, where there is a vigilant supervision over the distilleries and taverns, this practice is not carried on. The Abkári Inspectors ought to keep a strict eye on the contractors, more so in out-of-the-way rural villages, where the people are too weak to enforce on the contractors the necessity of adhering to Abkári laws and regulations. The correspondent strongly recommends the introduction of hand distilleries made of clay.

A request to the Bombay Government for the non-abolition of the Assistant Judge's Court at Surat.

The Suryă Prakásh (84) of the 12th January says: It is not wise policy to abolish the Assistant Judge's Court at Surat. The Sessions Court at Surat is always overwhelmed with so many cases that Mr. Macpherson, the Judge, finds it very difficult to prevent the accumulation of arrears. This is particularly the case with civil suits. Our able Judge, some time ago, communicated with the higher authorities on the subject, and strongly protested against such a step being taken, but it is doubtful whether Government paid any heed to his well-meant suggestion. Even the transfer of Mr. Crawford to Surat for a period of some five or six weeks will not be materially serviceable towards the disposal of the numerous suits that have accumulated. Civil suits, while they entail upon the people heavy expenses, stand the chance of often being left undecided. We, therefore, recommend the Bombay Government not to make this abolition a permanent one.

Duplicate and other copies of receipts for sums of money above 20 rupees should be exempted from the stamp duty.

With reference to the notification in the Bombay Government Gazette that one-anna stamp should be put to each of the duplicate, triplicate and other copies of a receipt for money payment above 20 rupees, the Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 13th January observes that the Stamp Act is not explicit enough upon this point, and hence it has not been the practice to affix hitherto stamps to duplicate or triplicate copies. The notification is given on the decision of the Advocate General on the question; but, considering the various taxes levied on the people, they should be exempted from the unjust burden of having to affix one anna stamps on copies of receipts. It is not usual among the people to ask for copies of receipts which are required by Government officials alone, and hence an exemption of the copies from the stamp duty will not inflict a serious loss on the revenues from that source. It is to be hoped that Government will get the necessary alteration made in the Stamp Act.

Receipt stamps on duplicate copies of bills.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 17th January, in referring to the notice published in the Bombay Government Gazette requiring duplicate copies of receipts over Rs. 20 to be stamped with one anna receipt stamp, says that this is a burden on the people. It is openly wrong to have duplicates of receipts stamped with an anna receipt stamp. Government will not derive any large income from this rule. It is only Government offices which demand duplicate and triplicate copies of receipts. The new rule should be rescinded. It is to be hoped that Government will speedily attend to this matter.

The weekly reports on the vernacular press prepared and submitted to Government by the official reporters should be made accessible to the public.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 15th January heartily approves of the recommendation made by the Englishman that the weekly reports on the vernacular press prepared and submitted to Government by the official reporters should be published for the benefit of the people. The Jáme observes that there ought be no objection to the publication of these reports, and, when they are made accessible to the public, the proprietors of newspapers will be able to know whether their writings are misrepresented, or whether any important matter has been omitted by the official reporter from being laid before Government. The Government officials against whom complaints may have appeared in the newspapers, will be in a position to render an explanation of the charges preferred against them, while all Government servants will be induced to perform their respective duties with due caution. These reports ought to be sold to the public at a small price.

Complains of want of repairs to the new road at Bharoli and points out the necessity of widening it.

A correspondent of the Native Opinion (10) of the 13th January calls the attention of the Collector of Thána to the necessity of widening the recently laid down line of road that branches off in the westerly direction from the principal road at Bharoli, that runs towards the south and north, in communication with Bombay and other places of importance, before the intended extension of that branch is taken in hand. Its breadth is too narrow to allow two vehicles to pass at a time without inconvenience. Along with this improvement the road itself ought to be repaired, or at least those frightful depressions should be filled in with earth, which is to be found there in abundance and which can be utilized for the purpose by merely incurring labour-cost, and that, too, at a very favourable rate. The present condition of the road is disgraceful in the extreme; and if allowed to stand the next rains without being metalled, it will become more so. It is now a source of discomfort and hardship to pedestrians, who have to find their way over it gropingly, lest want of caution on their part should result in serious injury to their person. For broughams and other vehicles the road is simply impassable. The repairs ought to be taken in hand at once, otherwise serious accidents will happen.

Says that Government should confer still higher honours on Mr. Nowroji Fardunji for his public services.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 13th January says: We are glad our Pársi brethren have thought of regaling Mr. Nowroji Fardunji on his new title of C. I. E. The distinction is well deserved, as of the very few leading members of the Native community he has done the Native public an amount of disinterested service, particularly in respect of our municipal affairs, which our townspeople cannot afford easily to forget. One of the reasons why Mr. Nowroji has not been one of the favoured few seems to be that he is not, like most others, supple-limbed, and will not take in the official bait when it clashes with the interests of the people. Shrievalty, membership of our legislative council and the municipal chairmanship have in several instances been conferred on individuals whose services to the people could hardly be compared to those of Mr. Nowroji; but a people's man is rarely the Government man in India, and no wonder that he should have remained so long unrewarded. However, though late, the honour comes with a grace, and we hope Sir James will not forget him when occasions of doing further honour to him by giving him an opportunity of representing the people present themselves.

Local Self-government.

Makes remarks upon the strange way in which the business of the Bombay Legislative Council is conducted.

In an article headed "The Bombay Legislature and the Local Boards Bill," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th January says: Those who were able to witness the proceedings of last Wednesday's meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council were also able to see how strangely the business of that body was conducted. The first striking feature of the meeting was the anxiety—by all means laudable—from time to time shown by His Excellency the President, that a certain member should be able to understand what was being said and done. This anxiety arose in His Excellency's mind, probably because the honourable gentlemen is reported to be not quite up to the mark in his knowledge of the niceties of the English language, in which the business of the Legislature is conducted. The honourable gentleman, however, betrayed an equal anxiety to show that he was able to understand everything by nodding his head throughout in response to His Excellency the Governor's speech. However, the silent hint of the honourable gentleman appears to have not been taken by the Governor, because when, after the speeches were made, the Council set to consider the provisions of the Bill one by one, His Excellency was particular enough to ask the said honourable member whether he understood a particular amendment that had been proposed. The second feature of the meeting was the earnest desire of the official members to hurry the Bill through the Council without further waiting for discussion. On this point, the public has not perhaps much reason to complain. The Bills have been for a sufficiently long time before them. But we are certainly unable to account for the sorry figure which the Honourable Ráo Sáheb Mandlik cut at the meeting. He seemed to have attended it without being sufficiently prepared to uphold much of what he had said at the previous meetings of the Legislature held in Poona in August last. The result was that Mr. Peile did not fail to score an easy victory over the Ráo Sáheb by politely telling the Council that he had not understood the question properly.

Comments in connection with the debate on the Local Self-government Bills in the Bombay Legislative Council.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 13th January, in alluding to the Local Boards Bill, says: Though the principle of the Bill is to be commended, it has not been made wide enough and will not command that popularity and evoke that amount of zeal and aspirations from the public which such measures are intended to do. No doubt the success or failure of this and similar experiments will always depend upon the frame of mind with which the Government regards them, and now we have nothing else to do but to rely on the assurances of the Governor and the honourable member in charge that what elasticity the Bill admits of will always be brought into play commensurately to the exigencies and fitness of particular local areas. We should certainly have liked to see, among other things, the creation of an educational franchise. But as matters are at present situated we cannot now hope for any more changes. The debate may be said to have been almost a repetition of what had been said the first time this Bill was introduced with the exception of a suggestion which the Honourable Mr. Macaulay made, that of establishing a central board similar to the Local Government Board in England to superintend and guide the affairs of Local Self-government in the Presidency. This suggestion deserves a good deal of consideration, and we think was too summarily dismissed by the Council. The reasons the honourable member gives for such an establishment are cogent enough. In our opinion the arrangements with which the President met that suggestion are not so mighty as to be unanswerable. The proposal was not of a definite character as the President thinks it to be; and if the Local Government Board in England does not fulfil what the Honourable Mr. Macaulay proposes his board to do, an organization can easily be formed which would relieve materially the Executive Council from much of the work that would devolve upon it under this Bill. We should have been glad to see this suggestion taken up more seriously, and more time should have been given for its examination. Similarly another suggestion of the same honourable member, which, though supported by a strong body of public opinion outside, has met with no justice at the hands of the Council. This Bill is greatly marred by not being a consolidation of the law on the subject, and people will have yet to wade through more than two legislative enactments to ascertain the law regarding administration of Local Funds in this Presidency. As regards the sister Bill No. 4-A to amend the Bombay District Municipal Act, it is conceded on all hands that the municipalities can be safely entrusted with a large measure of independence than the Local Boards. It has been repeatedly intimated by the honourable member in charge of the Bill that the larger municipalities at least, if not all of them, have shown, and are expected to show, greater intelligence and capacity than the rural boards; and with regard to this we have to make a few suggestions. We think the city municipalities should have a larger number of elected members than the Bill guarantees, and that in them at least the President should be a non-official. Now it may be said that the provisions with regard to these matters are wide enough and admit of extension according to local propriety. But yet with regard to these municipalities we should like a special provision ensuring to them this much of independence. We are sure that in this case the arguments against popular unfitness do not apply, and that the intelligence and wealth centred in cities can justify their being allowed to elect their own presidents. But the sense of a majority of the Council seems to be against elected presidents, and if they are not to be expressly granted, then we suggest that some modifications should be introduced in the provisions relating to the conduct of business. The section, as it stands, gives much absolute power to the President, and he can, when he likes, carry any proposal through the meeting without giving notice of it to all the members beforehand: and thus the measure to which half the Commissioners are opposed may be carried without their being put on their guard and called to oppose it. The present provisions were, we think, suggested by the recent case of the Dákor municipality decided by the High Court, under which no measure which was passed without notice to all the Commissioners was legal. This difficulty could have been got over without giving to the President such exceptional powers by the insertion of a clause to the effect that a mere technical informality would not vitiate any Act of a municipality. This is the more necessary if official presidents are to be retained in order to protect the people from their overzeal. We also suggest that these bodies at least should not have a larger minimum of elective Commissioners and that minimum should be fixed at two-thirds of the whole. This proposal, we are sure, is universally supported by the whole body of unofficial public opinion, not excepting even the Sárvajanik Sabha, and we see no ground why Government should run counter to the sense of the whole Presidency when there is no danger in meeting with proper wishes. We trust that the case of city municipalities will be distinguished from that of other municipalities, and the Council will grant them express guarantees instead of Governmental discretion for their enjoyment of larger privileges which they surely deserve.

Regrets that the proposal to confer the franchise on the educated classes was rejected in the Bombay Legislative Council.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th January says: What we particularly regret is that the proposal to confer the franchise on the classes most able of all others to take part in the Boards and Municipal Committees, by reason of their education and intelligence, was sulkily thrown out by the official majority in the Council. The Honourable Mr. Peile adhered very closely to the principle that none but those who contribute to the Local Funds and Municipal taxes should have the franchise conferred upon them. And in support of this view, he cited the authority of the Municipal Corporation, which, he said, had recently rejected a proposition to confer the franchise on pleaders, barristers, graduates and others. Mr. Peile was wrong in citing the authority of the Corporation, because, instead of doing what he said it had done, it has in fact passed a Resolution recognizing and laying down an intelligence test among the voters. Surely Mr. Mandlik might have pointed out this error of Mr. Peile! It is, we think, rather too late in the day to contend that Mr. Peile's principle, however correct as a matter of theory, should be literally carried out in practice, when our legislators know, and have declared, that in conferring the franchise on those entitled to it, their first desire is to educate them in the art of local self-government. It is difficult to see how classes comparatively uneducated will receive their training in local self-government unless they are associated with men better educated than themselves and better able to understand the object of the present legislation. The Legislature has dealt with the Municipal constitution of Bombay on a principle different from that to which Mr. Peile is anxious to bind it with regard to the Local Boards and Municipalities in the Mofussil. The inconsistency is inexplicable except on the ground that Government are afraid to secure independence to the action of the Local Boards and wish to preserve all power in the hands of the officials by enabling none but ignorant men and intelligent servants of Government to obtain seats in the Local Boards and Municipalities. And having constituted those Boards and Municipalities on this imperfect basis, the Government will not hesitate to say a few years hence that local self-government has been a farce in the mofussil, and that it is necessary to return to the old state of things.

Approves of the Bombay Local Boards Bill.

In noticing the debate at the second reading of the Bombay Local Boards Bill in the local Legislative Council, the Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 13th January gives the substance of the Honourable Mr. Peile's speech on the occasion, and observes that his arguments and reasoning, which were all to the point, were directed to show forcibly the validity of the course adopted by the Bombay Government in initiating the measure, and the liberality of its scope as favouring popular aspirations with due regard to the efficient conduct of municipal affairs, as warranted by the circumstances of the different districts. A careful perusal of the speech will convince the reader that Mr. Peile has succeeded remarkably well in his aims. The Honourable Ráo Sáheb Mandlik and the Honourable Mr. Macaulay took exception to certain portions of the Bill even as modified by the Select Committee, but their objections were met by Mr. Peile in a manner that ought to satisfy the public. Mr. Peile's answer shows that the Bill as amended is quite as liberal a local self-government measure as the people of the Presidency in their actual circumstances could well expect the Government to concede consistently with its knowledge of the condition of the country and the actual requirements of its populations. The Bill, remarks the Chronicle, is a liberal measure, and though of a tentative character it is so elastic as to answer the progressive condition of those for whose benefit it is intended. It is a scheme for cautious, progressive and beneficial move onward in the path of local self-government such as Lord Ripon wishes to see put in force for giving the Natives of India a share in the administration of their local affairs and a political education that may render them fit for being entrusted with the conduct of higher and more important State affairs than those of mere Municipal Government.

Approves of the Local Boards Bill with certain reservations.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 13th January observes that though the Bombay Local Boards Bill does not grant all that the people desired, yet the Honourable Mr. Peile and the Select Committee deserve the great praise bestowed upon them by the Governor for ably framing the Bill and for carrying on the discussions on it. The Bill contains several defects, but if its provisions are worked in the spirit in which they have been framed it will not fail to teach the people to take part in the management of their local affairs with due independence. But there is much doubt whether future administrations will give effect to its provisions with the liberality which has been evinced in its preparation by Sir James Fergusson and the Honourable Mr. Peile. There is no guarantee for removing the fear caused by past experience that the provisions of the Bill will not meet with an illiberal construction. The Honourable Mr. Macaulay has convincingly put this point before the public, and he was right in remarking that instead of leaving it to future Government officers to make the necessary improvements in the Bill, the same should be incorporated in it at once. Though the original Bill has been considerably modified for the better, yet it is to be regretted that several important improvements remain to be introduced into it. The Goftár severely censures the Honourable Mr. Khanderáw Ráste for the attack made by him upon educated Natives in his speech on the Bill, and observes that Mr. Ráste has simply taken revenge upon them for their questioning his abilities and condemning his appointment to the Council.

Disapproves of the Bombay Local Boards Bill.

In alluding to the second reading of the Bombay Local Boards Bill, the Yajdán Parast (127) of the 13th January observes that the object of the Local Self-government scheme is to make the people capable of managing their local affairs without the intervention of Government officials; but the Bill is not likely to accomplish this noble aim. The Bill provides that the District Collector should be the President of the Board; this is perpetuating the old state of things, and nullifies the object of the scheme. To make matters worse, the Bill lays down that there should be the same number of Government nominees as the representatives of the people. Thus the number of Government nominees will be larger by one than that of the popular representatives, and would whenever they liked, carry out measures that might prove distasteful to the latter. This kind of local self-government is a sham. [The Gujaráti (101) of the 13th and the Dáturdun (95) of the 17th January express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Heartily approves of the Viceroy's proceedings in the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In alluding to Mr. Ilbert's account of the history of the Criminal Procedure Code Amendment Bill from its first initiation to the settlement of the terms of the compromise given at the meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council on Monday, the 7th instant, the Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 13th idem, observes that the Law member's speech was a straightforward, courageous and satisfactory exposition of the whole affair. The Viceroy and the other supporters of the Bill would appear all through the proceedings to have honestly adhered to its essential principle. The members of the Government rightly decided what they should concede and what they should refuse to the menacing demands of the opposition. They firmly resolved not to budge one inch from their determination to stand fast in order to uphold the rights and privileges accorded to the Natives of India by Acts of Parliament and Royal Charters. Mr. Ilbert's address proves how true English statesmen under good and evil reports and under the most trying circumstances do their duty in befriending the weak and unrepresented millions of India, and try to protect the just claims of those millions against all odds, regardless of their own convenience and even interests. With reference to the Viceroy's speech on the same occasion, the Chronicle remarks that His bordship has fully vindicated the conduct of his Government in respect of the Bill. This he did by pointing out the necessity of confirming and adhering to the distinctly defined and repeatedly confirmed stipulations and conditions of the political relations of England with India, especially when that necessity became imperative by the conduct of the opposition. His Lordship very properly referred for the justification of the proceedings of his Government to, amongst other things, the Royal Proclamation which the people of India emphatically regard as their Magna Charta. After noticing other important features of the Viceregal address in the same approving tone, the Chronicle concludes by observing that His Lordship may rest assured that he has thoroughly satisfied all sensible persons and moderate and practical politicians in India. His Lordship's Government deserves the hearty congratulations of the people for the honourable success that has attended its patient, laborious and trying work in respect of the Bill. [The Kaisar-i-Hind (108) and the Gujaráti (101) of the same date express similar sentiments. The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 18th January considers the speeches of the Viceroy and the Honourable Mr. Ilbert to be very valuable. The arguments advanced by the Viceroy are so very weighty that they are sufficient to convince the opposition and are a blow to those of Sir James Stephen.]

Says that the Supreme Government have gained a easy victory by the concordat in the matter of the Ilbert Bill and wishes for the extension of the system of trial by jury to the Natives.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 13th January, in an article headed "Upshot of the Ilbert Bill Compromise," says: All is well that ends well, and we congratulate all the parties concerned in this bitter controversy upon the well-patched-up peace they have come to. The masterly exposition by the Honourable Mr. Ilbert at the last debate in the Supreme Legislative Council must have cleared away any fallacies the opponents of the Bill may have hitherto clung to. As now arranged the scope of the original draft Bill is a little narrowed. Thus an easy victory has been secured to the Supreme Government, while the oppositionists, who threatened them with utter ruin, are sent about their business in peace. The difference between the original and the present draft Bill is not of a radical character. Under the former, in addition to the District Magistrates and Sessions Judges the Local Governments were to be empowered to confer the power of trying European British subjects upon those Native officers—not District Magistrates and Sessions Judges—whom their fitness and ability would entitle to the said powers. But under the new draft, for this latter clause the jury clause will be substituted, thus minimizing the scope of the change to the smallest extent possible. We are not prepared to say that the result of the concordat has been so far unfavourable, when it is accompanied by the privilege of a jury trial in the case of Natives. We make bold to say that we are not losers in the fight. The moral influence of the equality of our judicial officers, both Native and Europeans, will tend to minimize the evil effects of race superiority, while it will encourage the educated Native to strive the harder to gain the entrance into the sacred pale of the covenanted services. Surmises are still going round as to the fate of the statutory civilians, and though no special provision seems about to be made in the legislation in hand either in favour of or against them, the chances of their being invested, in the absence of a special provision to that effect, with these powers seem very distant. The Honourable Mr. Ilbert does not seem to draw any such distinction, possibly on the understanding that when a Native officer, whether convenanted or statutory, reaches the position of a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge he must as a matter of necessity possess those powers. Such a view of the status of the Statutory Civil Service may be correct, but it is likely to work mischievously in another direction. The statutory civilian will rarely attain to the position of a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge, and, if he does at all, every effort will be made to transfer him to districts where there are no resident non-official Europeans, thus neutralising the practical effects of his investment with these powers. We do not mean that when a Native civilian becomes eligible to them, he must always be given the chance of exercising them, but we merely indicate the manner in which the Act may be brought to a nullity at least in the case of the Statutory Civil Service. To guard against this difficulty a saving clause in the Bill may not be deemed unnecessary. Some seem to be of opinion that people in the mofussil are yet unprepared for the reception of the jury system, and the objection, we must admit, is partially true. We cannot say that all parts of the country are fully developed so as to deserve the introduction of that system of trial, nevertheless it cannot be gainsaid that at least some parts are; and it is in these latter districts at least the system ought to be introduced. The granting of this right to European British subjects is by itself an argument which, if well considered, proves that the greater part of the country is prepared for a boon which has hitherto been denied to it. Under the new Act the European British subject is to enjoy the privilege of a jury consisting of Natives and Europeans, and if Natives are fit to serve as jurors in the trial of a European British subject in whatever district he may commit an offence, it follows all the more forcibly that the Native community is quite fit to receive the boon. The very character of the concordat shows that by the acquisition of a jury trial, the Anglo-Indian community has endeavoured to secure for its countrymen all immunity, if possible, in their trials and a majority of its countrymen on the jury may secure it to them. If the grant of a jury trial to Anglo-Indians were to end in this way, the Bill, when an Act, will only be an instrument of torture in the case of Natives; and as a set off or counterpoise in this case, the Native community ought also to have the right of a jury-trial to protect their own interests. We hope the Select Committee who are now considering the Bill will in justice to the Native community provide in the Bill for this right on their behalf.

Says that it is unwise to oppose the concordat since its terms do not violate the principle of the Ilbert Bill.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th January says: The Times of India and the Rást Goftár (115) have, it seems, settled between themselves that Lord Ripon has committed a huge blunder in modifying the Ilbert Bill according to the terms of the concordat. The former prefers the withdrawal of the Bill; the latter, if we understand it rightly, advocates the passage of it in its original form, or if that cannot be done, its absolute rejection. The Rást gets a compliment for this from the Times, which is all in proper order. But how does it follow that the other Native papers are in the wrong and have been acting the part of blind leaders of the blind because they have still managed to retain their mental equilibrium instead of imitating the ways of a certain class and denouncing the Viceroy? The other papers have been able to see through the dodge, to which the Rast has easily fallen a victim. They have confidence in the Viceroy, because they are aware that His Lordship's motives cannot be questioned; they have read the terms of the concordat in their proper light, and think that so long as those terms do not violate the principle of the Bill it is unwise to oppose them. Even the Native papers on the other side of India, which had opposed the concordat soon after its announcement, have now come round. Who are the blind leaders of the blind then—the papers that wish for the impossible or the papers that loyally accept the satisfactory settlement which has been arrived at by Lord Ripon?

Condemns the concordat in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill as a serious political blunder.

In briefly alluding to the proceedings of the Viceregal Legislative Council meeting of Monday last in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Rást Goftár (115) of the 13th January sarcastically observes that it is a great gain to the country that peace has been made between the Government of India and the opponents of the Bill, who did not scruple to offer personal insult to the Viceroy, and the long raging contest between the two has ended. It was stated that further proceedings at the Council meeting were postponed, because the Honourable Mr. Evans asked for the postponement in order to consult the Defence Association in connection with the question about the proposed concession of trial by jury to Natives also. But no such question had arisen. As stated in a telegram received by the Times of India, the Defence Association discovered a hitch about the trial by jury of European British subjects before District Magistrates, and it was suggested to Government that if a District Magistrate should find it impossible to convene a jury, he should transfer the case to a Sessions Judge, who should try it, exercising the powers of a District Magistrate. This suggestion has been adopted by Government, and the European British subjects in India have received another new right. Those who wished that Natives should not take exception to the concordat remarked that it would be difficult to convene a jury for the trial of European British subjects in the interior of the mofussil, and hence accused persons would prefer to be tried by a Native District Magistrate in order to save themselves from the annoyance of a long delay for their trial. Even this excuse to induce the Natives to take kindly to the concordat has disappeared. All this shows that India is governed by the dual Government of the Viceroy and the Defence Association. Treaties are made and compromises are arrived at between the two by means of correspondence and delegates. The compromise made in regard to the Bill may be just, but the way by which it has been arrived at is despicable. This double Government and the compromises made by them with each other show that the real Government of the country does not exist, and threaten a bad future to Government as well as the people. It seems that Natives are not to get the right of trial by jury under the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. The concordat is a serious political blunder.

Is glad that the European British subjects of Calcutta did not oppose the proposal to concede to the Natives also the right of trial by jury under the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Yajdán Parast (127) of the 13th January observes that it was feared that the European British subjects of Calcutta would bring forward new objections to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill at the meeting of the Imperial Legislative Council on Monday last, because at the immediately preceding meeting of the Council it was stated that the Legislature intended to concede to the Natives also a similar right of trial by jury. Properly speaking the European British subjects had no concern with the proposed concession to the Natives, and had they discarded the concordat, and created a fresh commotion in order to oppose the proposal, they would have placed themselves in a false position. It is gratifying that they did nothing of the kind and allowed the Bill to be made over to the Select Committee.

The Natives ought to get the concession of the trial by jury under the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Yajdán Parast (127) of the 13th January is highly grateful to the Honourable Mr. Amir Ali for giving an intimation in the Viceregal Legislative Council that he would move in the Select Committee upon the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill that the same right of trial by jury as has been conceded by the concordat to the European British subjects should be granted to Natives, and hopes that the Supreme Government will lend him due assistance to obtain the concession. The Natives were much disturbed by the terms of the concordat, as it created a new invidious distinction between accused European British subjects and accused Natives; but since the report that the latter are also to get the right of trial by jury, and both are to be placed on the same level as regards the dispensation of justice in the mofussil, every Native desires that the Jurisdiction Bill should be passed, preserving its important principle. The Honourable Mr. Ilbert has assured the public that if the European British subjects make a wrong use of the concession of trial by jury it will be taken away from them. This is good enough; but if the suggestion made by Mr. Pirozshá Merwánji Mehetá, that the prosecutor in the case should be allowed to appeal to the High Court if he is dissatisfied with the jury's verdict, be adopted, the precaution will be more assuring inasmuch as it will provide against the trying Magistrate being also partial to the accused and failing to submit the case to the High Court. [The Gujaráti (101) of the same date and the Bombay Samáchár (71) of the 14th January express similar sentiments.

The concession of trial by jury to Natives is desirable to prevent the frequent perpetration of injustice by capricious Magistrates and Judges.

In a leader advocating the concession of trial by jury to Natives under the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Gujaráti (101) of the 13th January observes that a short time ago Mr. Fernandez, a Magistrate of Ahmedabad, disposed of a case of theft in which great injustice has been perpetrated. The accused in the case were some respectable Kanbi Kinkhábwálás, and the accusations brought against them were trumped up, but the Magistrate convicted and sentenced two or three of them. The truth in this case that the accusations were false and got up came to light afterwards, and yet it is strange that no notice has been hitherto taken of Mr. Fernandez's conduct in the matter. The proposed concession of trial by jury will prevent the perpetration of injustice that is often committed by capricious Magistrates and Judges.

Makes remarks on the conduct of Europeans in the agitation against the Ilbert Bill and says that Natives should not be backward in carrying on a constitutional agitation for guarding their own interests.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th January in discussing the last phase of the Ilbert Bill repeats many arguments which have been frequently reported, and observes that the Natives of India should never forget one particular fact in connection with the agitation which has just ended. The present rulers of India are the most civilized in the world. In their spoken and written utterances they give expression to the most exalted sentiments, but when they are called upon to redeem their promises, they exhibit the utmost selfishness imaginable. The Natives of India should be cautions in believing in the sincerity of their public declarations. They should not allow themselves to be deceived by mere words. The Ilbert Bill has brought out the real opinions of many eminent Anglo-Indians. Strictly speaking the Natives of India did not ask for the right of trying European criminals. Mr. Ilbert introduced the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill into the supreme Legislative Council in order to avoid certain administrative inconveniences. The provisions of the Bill in question were supported by the Viceroy, and this fact created a strong desire in the Native mind that Native Magistrates should be permitted to try European culprits. But the actual result has been utterly at variance with the expectations formed at the begining of this conflict. Four or five Natives of certain standing and position are to be allowed to sit in judgment on European offenders, but every European culprit has obtained the right of being tried by a jury of his own countrymen which he previously did not possess and for which he did not ask. The Natives of India ought not to forget a lesson which ought to be learnt from the result of the agitation made by the Defence Association. Their proceedings were most outrageous and disloyal, and similar exhibitions from any other quarter would have been severely punished. But the Natives of India ought never to be backward in carrying out a strictly constitutional agitation for guarding their own interests.

Observes that the Honourable Mr. Thomas ought to retract the remarks he made in the Imperial Legislative Council about the incapacity of Native Judges.

With reference to the statement made by the Honourable Mr. Thomas, the Member for Madras, in the Imperial Legislative Council, that a certain Covenanted Native Judge sentenced an accused to three months' imprisonment, but that the High Court quashed the sentence and decided that the accused should be made to expiate his crime by being hung, the Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 14th January observes that after making this statement Mr. Thomas recommended that the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill should be withdrawn, because the above instance had proved the incapacity of Native Judges. The fact, however, is that five years ago Mr. S. N. Tagore, then Session Judge of Ahmedabad, sentenced a murderer to transportation for life, but on an application from the Government of Bombay the High Court called for the papers in the case and sentenced the accused to be hanged. Under these circumstances, can the original disposal of the case be called a miscarriage of justice, as Mr. Thomas tried to make it? In numerous cases the Bombay High Court has quashed the sentence of hanging passed by the lower Courts. Mr. Thomas ought to withdraw in the Legislative Council the unjust remarks he made about the incapacity of Native Judges on a false assumption.

Municipalities.

Asks for the publication of the papers connected with the enquiry made by Government into the allegations

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th January, in an article headed "Official White-washing," disapproves of the way in which the inquiry into the serious allegations brought against Sir Richard Meade by Mr. Knight was made by Lord Hartington, and after styling the whole affair made by the Indian Spectator against Mr. Fernandez, late Chairman of the Ahmedabad Municipality.

as "travesty, a pure mockery," remarks: It is not unusual to see Government acting both as Judge and jury in cases where its servants, be they high or low, stand charged with delinquency or irregular procedure. An analogous instance of the sort of trial we have referred to above has just occurred in connection with Mr. Fernandez, the late official Chairman of the Ahmedabad Local Funds Committee. The difference between the two cases is one of kind, not of degree. In the one case it was a State official of high position whose conduct was impeached. In the other case it is subordinate official's mal-administration of the rate-payers' and trustees' funds that has been publicly criticised. But all the same is the solicitude of the bureaucrats in power to whitewash the protege of an influential Collector. The procedure is also the same. The reader is aware that we have exposed at various times since October last the unconstitutional and arbitrary proceedings of Mr. Fernandez while permanent Chairman of the Ahmedabad Local Funds Committee. It is needless to go over all the details of his mal-administration or to repeat the alleged breach of fiduciary relations in connection with the Ranchhodlál Charitable Dispensary Trust—a breach involving an offence under the Criminal Procedure Code. Our object is to point out how valueless is the Resolution of the Bombay Government as bearing on the matters which we have criticised. Our repeated reference to what has been justly characterised by the Ahmedabad public as a scandal had so much effect on Government as to rouse them into action. The Judges condescended to look into the papers on the subject and had energy enough to pass their judgment. The judgment is that Mr. Fernandez was slightly in error, but that there was nothing serious. Rather, if at all, the wasting of two lákhs of public money on worthless roads, the acquisition of private properties at ridiculously extravagant rates, acquisitions which were the subject of adverse comment by the late lamented Judge Phillpotts, notably the affair known as Rádhan Miyá's Havili, and the abstraction of Rs. 20,000 belonging to a trust—all these were such "highly successful" instances of Local Funds administration in the eyes of the provincial rulers that they seem to give credit to that official! What ordinary mortals could not view without a blush is here held up to praise and as worthy of imitation by popular Local Boards to be called into existence! Now it is clear to the meanest understanding that in a matter of this kind it is necessary, if the public are expected to endorse the Resolution of the provincial rulers, that all the papers received by them and on which they have found their judgment, be laid on the Editor's table. Let it be observed that the official criticised was the protege of the Collector, a nominee of the Governor. Is it a wonder if the Collector, under whose orders Mr. Fernandez must take shelter for his acts, has made a report in favour of that subordinate? Is it a wonder if the Commissioner of the District has recorded his opinion in an equally complacent manner on the strength of the one-sided report of the Collector? And we again ask, is it a wonder if the Executive Council has thereupon indited this Resolution? For all that such make believe trials might be held in the cells of Macbethian witches. We ask where are the reports? Do the facts contained in them correspond with the facts disclosed publicly? What assistance has Government rendered to the public of Ahmedabad, which demanded at one of its influential meetings a correct and authenticated copy of the proceedings, minutes and correspondence relating to the subject? If Government really mean well, and if they be convinced of the innocence of the party concerned, then it need not shrink from making every paper public. If the documents are of a satisfactory nature they will not fail to elicit from the public the opinion already expressed in the Resolution. And we shall be the first to concede the justice of the decision. But in the absence of such papers we cannot but characterise the proceedings as a mockery.

Expresses satisfaction at the Resolution of the Bombay Government regarding the official conduct of Mr. Fernandez, late Chairman of the Ahmedabad Municipality.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 11th January in noticing the Resolution of the Bombay Government regarding the official conduct of Mr. Fernandez, late Chairman of the Ahmedabad Municipality, says that for some time past the name of Mr. Fernandez has become an eyesore to several persons, who do not miss an opportunity of giving vent to their passions. Their jealousy first passed off as rumour, but afterwards it took the form of anonymous petitions. When they failed in their cowardly attempts several disappointed individuals presented a petition some time back to Government. Mr. Reid the Collector, and other officers at that time, also made a strict enquiry into the allegations made against Mr. Fernandez. It is now known that some of the petitioners were kept in ignorance of what was stated in the petition. At any rate it was then proved that some envious persons had raised an outcry against him for no purpose. Now the Indian Spectator has been deceived by some and its complaint has been found to be a mistaken one. The Government Resolution ought to be studied by those who envy him. Not only has Government contemptuously rejected the charges preferred against him, but has appreciated his valuable services and praised them in due terms. Mr. Fernandez is not entirely free from defects. As a mortal creature he must have some defects along with good qualities. But a protest must be entered against the vile manner in which some wish to pourtray him. His assailants ought first to place themselves in his position and then complain; for preaching is easy but doing is very difficult. By virtue of his office, Mr. Fernandez may have perhaps incurred the displeasure of many, but he cannot therefore be blamed. When Mr. Hope, the late Collector of Surat, began the work of widening the streets of that city, he met with a similar reception. There are certain reasons beside this for the cry raised against him. Selfish persons cannot afford to view independent conduct with pleasure. He has displeased some of the leading men of Ahmedabad society by his independent action. It is natural that those who fail in their objects should feel displeased. As he has become unpopular with several selfish persons by his impartial administration of justice as City Magistrate, they have been creating a noise against him for a long time. The cry against Mr. Fernandez dates from 1875-76, when he decided the case pertaining to a remarriage amongst the Sarmáli caste. His decision enraged some young men belonging to the reformers, and they wanted since that time to have him transferred from Ahmedabad. The Hitechchhu newspaper has begun to take the lead among his assailants, and the cry has become strong since the time its Editor was sent to prison by Mr. Fernandez in the case of defamation brought against him by Mr. Giles in 1879 and which sentence was upheld by the High Court. Since that time a clique has been formed of some persons who have suffered imprisonment and of those who are dissatisfied with Mr. Fernandez. Some of these were the very persons who preferred a petition against him to Government and which failed in its object. The Hitechchhu first of all wanted to have Mr. Fernandez transferred from Ahmedabad on the plea that he was there for many years. The people considered this cry as one proceeding from spite, since there were several other officers in Ahmedabad who were serving in the city for a long period. As, on the contrary, Government appointed him permanent Chairman of the Municipality in addition to his other duties, considering his services necessary in carrying out certain works pertaining to the municipality, the cry grew stronger than hitherto. The chief complaint of the Hitechchhu is with respect to the misappropriation of the trust money of the Ranchhodlál Dispensary, the purchase of the building known as Rádhanmiyá's Haveli and the construction of the new road and market. These complaints appear to be without foundation, for Mr. Fernandez has not derived any profit from them; on the other hand, he has removed many inconveniences which the people suffered. He bought for the use of the municipality the Rádhanmiyá's Haveli and other houses with the same care and economy as a Márwári exercises in purchasing a house for himself. Mr. Fernandez is a very good tempered, experienced and popular gentleman. He is not a person who would favour rich or influential men, yield to pressure or be deceived by hypocrites. He first attends to the grievances of the poor and has acquired their love and blessings. The different offices he has filled and his praiseworthy good qualities have raised him many enemies. The Samsher is sincerely glad at the Government of Sir James Fergusson having done justice to its faithful and trustworthy servant by making a strict enquiry into the allegations brought against him and by publishing its result in public papers.

Disapproves of the resolution of the Ahmedabad Municipality regarding the non-furnishing of copies of minutes, &c., to the public.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 17th January says that at the last general meeting of the Municipal Commissioners of Ahmedabad it was resolved by a majority of votes that a copy of the minutes and proceedings of the Commissioners should not be furnished to the public. By this resolution the Commissioners have lost the opportunity of gaining the confidence of the people in the work they have to perform. The people believe that the Commissioners are guided by the advice of officials and care for their interests than those of the public. But it is a matter for regret that the Commissioners should not have seen their own good and passed this resolution through the pressure and fear of their President. The public would have been enabled by the supply of the copy of the minutes, &c., to judge how far the Government Resolution on the official conduct of Mr. Fernandez is just. The public and the Government would have known for certain whether Government officers have deceived them in their enquiry or not. The leading men of Ahmedabad society have shown by this resolution that they are incapable of looking after their own interests. One of the Commissioners had intimated in private to a friend of the writer that he had no objection in giving copies of minutes, &c., but owing to the fear of the President and the presence of Mr. Fernandez, he and the other Commissioners kept quiet at the meeting. This will show what others think of the courage and views of Natives. European officers, along with thus hushing up unjust deeds, test the firmness of Natives. The Municipal Act nowhere enjoins the Commissioners not to furnish copies of their minutes, &c.; on the contrary it permits them to do so. It cannot therefore be understood why the Municipal President and Commissioners refuse to give copies? It will afford an encouragement to officers in their corrupt conduct. The Local Self-government Bills do not contain any allusion regarding the furnishing of copies; and the retention of the Collector as President shows that Government wishes to allow its officers to continue to commit unjust deeds.

Native States.

Papers connected with the enquiry held on the dead body of the late Mahárája of Kolhápur and remarks thereon.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 17th January in alluding to the publication of the papers with respect to the enquiry held on the dead body of the late Mahárája of Kolhápur, states that Government have exonerated Messrs. Green and Birch from all blame in this matter. In the first place Government have been dilatory in publishing their resolution on the enquiry held subsequently to the death of the Rája. The Dnyán Prakásh is not satisfied with the report of Mr. Jopp. No valid ground has been shown for withholding from the public the depositions of witnesses which were taken down by the Magistrate. There are serious discrepancies in the evidence of Mr. Green and Malhári. Mr. Jopp has tried to exculpate Mr. Green by stating that Malhári has made false statements for the sake of his master. Mr. Jopp says that the men composing the jury were intelligent and in all respects fit for judging the evidence submitted to them, but it is extraordinary that their names, excepting that of a Pársi juror, should not have been made public. The Dnyán Prakásh has heard that the jurors were not men of intelligence, nor capable of sifting the evidence which was submitted to them. Why did not Mr. Green go when Malhári told him to fetch Mr. Birch? If Malhári was capable of making a false statement to save the character of his master as is alleged by Mr. Jopp, then is not Mr. Green equally capable of making an untrue statement for the sake of saving his own life? If the Mahárája remained quiet after he threw a boot at Mr. Green, then the latter was not justified in using force in holding him. Have the Government weighed the evidence of the doctor? His opinion tends to show that Mr. Green used more force then was necessary. No reasons have been assigned for exonerating Mr. Green from all blame. The Dnyán Prakásh does not mean to assert that the Rája was purposely killed by any body, but from the published accounts it appears that Mr. Green did not take all the precautions which he ought to have done. The Bombay Government should make further enquiry and publish the result of it. No secrecy need be observed about this matter.

[The Kesari (36) of the 15th January, in writing on the same subject, makes somewhat similar comments. It further adds that no satisfactory explanation has been given how the doctor failed to observe the enlargement of the spleen between 18th and 25th December. It suggests that further enquiry should be made.]

Says that the jury which sat at the post-mortem examination of the body of the late Mahárája of Kolhápur was not composed of intelligent and independent persons as it ought to have been.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th January says that the jury which sat on the enquiry held on the dead body of the Mahárája of Kolhápur was not properly constituted. In order to test the guilt of Malharráw Gaikawad, it was considered necessary by Lord Northbrook to appoint high English officials and Native princes to conduct the enquiry. This being so, it is unaccountable why similar precautions were not taken in constituting the jury to sit on the enquiry on the dead body of a much more exalted personage like the late Mahárája of Kolhápur. From the information which it has received from Ahmednagar, the Indu Prakásh is of opinion that a jury composed of more intelligent and independent men than the one actually summoned could have been easily gathered in the city of Ahmednagar for the purpose of conducting the enquiry on the corpse of the late Mahárája of Kolhápur. It is impossible to believe that all the complaints about the manner in which the jury was packed could be untrue. Highly intelligent and respectable gentlemen like Ráo Bahádur Abáji Nánáji and Khán Bahádur Nasarvánji Karsetji were appointed to distribute money and alms on the 13th day after the death of the Mahárája, while for conducting the examination of the corpse it was considered sufficient to select Patils, Kulkarnis and contractors. The whole affair wears a most extraordinary aspect. Somebody has committed a fearful blunder in selecting men for the jury which sat at the post-mortem examination of the Mahárája's body.

Makes some suggestions to Colonel Hancock who is enquiring into the complaints made against the Rája of Nándod.

In alluding to the enquiry that is being made by Colonel Hancock into the complaints made against the administration of the Nándod State, the Gujaráti (101) of the 13th January observes that it is reported that one or two partizans of the Rája have spread a report among the people of the State that the enquiry will not injure the Rája, who will be quite free after the closing of the Commission, to act as he likes. This rumour has frightened the subjects of the State considerably, and they are afraid to come forward to lay their grievances before the Commissioner. Colonel Hancock ought, therefore, to take due steps to prevent the rumour producing bad effects and to punish those who set it afloat. Unless this is done many complaints against the oppressions practised by the Rája himself will not come to light. The subjects of the State are dissatisfied with their chief and are unwilling that he should rule over them in future. A rumour has spread in Nándod that the Rája has collected three thousand Bhils in the hills and will oppose his removal from the gádi, but there is no foundation for it.

Comments in connection with the contemplated meeting of the Native Chiefs in Mahi Kántha in the Camp at Harsol to meet His Excellency the Governor of Bombay.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 18th January says that all the Native Chiefs in Mahi Kántha are to gather in the camp at Harsol to meet the Governor of Bombay. On account of the difficulty experienced in finding accommodation for all of them, it was necessary that some measures should have been taken beforehand for the accommodation of these royal guests in this cold season. All the Chiefs are not well-off; some of them are deeply involved in debt. They will have to incur heavy expenses in providing themselves with tents and other necessaries. As they cannot but spend money to keep up their position, the burden of debt will continue to increase. Government ought to advise them to stop extravagant expenses. As Governors and persons high in office now go on tour every year, it is advisable that Native Chiefs should, as far as possible, give up pompous living. The condition of the people living under British sway is similar to that of the above described Native Chiefs. Large amounts of money are spent by municipalities on the reception of high officials. It would be a boon to the public, if the municipal money, which is collected with great severity, were applied towards lessening the burden of taxation instead of being thus spent, for the condition of the people is becoming worse owing to want of employment. Moreover, the burden of taxation is very heavy.

Says that Mr. Shámráo should be re-appointed Diwán of Cambay.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 18th January says that the eyes of the people of Cambay have opened at last. They now praise the administration of Mr. Shámráo, and complain against Máhádev Prajárám, who came forward to fight their cause. Government ought to entrust Mr. Shámráo once more with the work of reforming this corrupt State, for an injustice has been done to him in being obliged to leave the Diwánship. Moreover for no fault of his this experienced man will be better able to introduce reforms into the State than one unacquainted with it. He has derived experience from the recent disturbances how to manage the State, and the leading men of Cambay have also had an opportunity of judging between good and evil. The Samsher opines that if he is re-appointed Diwán, the public of Cambay will be greatly satisfied with his administration. Government ought to receive the blessings of the people by again nominating him Diwán of Cambay.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
26th January 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Abkári: Manufacture of liquor in Sálsette 6
Agricultural education: Expression of opinion that provision should be made for importing — to the children of Indian farmers ... 5
Agricultural improvements: Expression of opinion that Government should amend the law on the subject of taxing — and should not deal with this subject in Government Resolutions which are liable to be changed 4
Conservation of forests: Condemnation of the policy of Government about the — and advice for the settlement of the land-tax in perpetuity... 5
European traders: Complaint that next to benefiting Government, the officials try to give a helping hand to — 6
Judicial matters: Request to the Bombay Government for the non-abolition of the Assistant Judge's Court at Surat 6
Maintenance of Christian religious establishments from the taxation raised from Hindus and Mahomedans: Disapproval of the — ... 5
Public honours: Expression of opinion that Government should confer still higher honours on Mr. Navroji Fardunji for his public services. 8
Repairs to the new road at Bharoli: Complaint against the want of — and the necessity of widening it 7
Reports on the vernacular press: Expression of opinion that the weekly — prepared and submitted to Government by the official reporters should be made accessible to the public 7
Revenue settlement: Suggestion that the State should fix its share of the produce of land in kind and convert it into money value which should remain unalterable during the currency of the — ... 3
Stamp duty: Expression of opinion that duplicate and other copies of receipts for sums of money above Rs. 20 should be exempted from the —
    The Gujarát Mitră 7
    The Hitechchhu 7

PART II.—Local Self-government—

Bombay Legislative Council: Remarks upon the strange way in which the business of the — is conducted 8
Bombay Local Boards Bill:
    Approval of the — 10
    Approval of the — with certain reservations 11
    Disapproval of the — 11
Debate on the Local Self-government Bills in the Bombay Legislative Council: Comments in connection with the — 8
Proposal to confer the franchise on the educated classes: Regret at the rejection of the — in the Bombay Legislative Council 10

PART III.—Legislation—

Concordat arrived at between the Government and the European Defence Association in regard to the final settlement of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
    Condemnation of the — as a serious political blunder 13
    Expression of opinion that it is unwise to oppose the — since its terms do not violate the principle of the Ilbert Bill ... 13
    Expression of opinion that the Supreme Government have gained a easy victory by the — and a wish for the extension of the system of trial by jury to the Natives 12
Extension of the system of trial by jury to Natives:
    Advisability of the — 14
    Desirability of the — for the prevention of the frequent perpetration of injustice by capricious Magistrates and Judges ... 14
    Satisfaction at the non-opposition of the European British subjects of Calcutta to the proposal for the — 14

C. R. 6925 INDIA OFFICE 20 FEB 91

INDEX.

Page.

Part III.—Legislation—continued.

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:
- Expression of opinion that the Honourable Mr. Thomas ought to retract the remarks he made in the Imperial Legislative Council about the incapacity of Native Judges... 15
- Hearty approval of the Viceroy's proceedings in the matter of the — 11
- Remarks on the conduct of Europeans in the agitation against the — and advice to the Natives that they should not be backward in carrying on a constitutional agitation for guarding their own interests 15

Part IV.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad:
- Disapproval of the resolution of the — Municipality regarding the non-furnishing of copies of minutes, &c., to the public ... 18
- Request for the publication of the papers connected with the enquiry made by Government into the allegations made by the Indian Spectator against Mr. Fernandez, late Chairman of the — Municipality 15
- Satisfaction at the Resolution of the Bombay Government regarding the official conduct of Mr. Fernandez, late Chairman of the — Municipality 16

Part V.—Native States—

Cambay: Expression of opinion that Mr. Shámráo should be re-appointed Diwán of — 20

Kolhápur:
- Expression of opinion that the jury which sat on the post-mortem examination of the body of the late Mahárája of — was not composed of intelligent and independent persons as it ought to have been 19
- Remarks in connection with the papers connected with the enquiry held on the dead body of the late Mahárája of — 18

Mahi Kántha: Comments in connection with the contemplated meeting of the Native Chiefs in — in the camp at Harsol to meet His Excellency the Governor of Bombay... 19

Nándod: Some suggestions to Colonel Hancock, who is enquiring into the complaints made against the Rája of — 19

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 26th January 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Mahárásthră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Mahárásthră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardum	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Points out the advisability of the contemplated revival by the Government of India of five State scholarships in connection with the Indian Institute at Oxford.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 24th January gives a history of the creation of nine State scholarships for enabling Native lads to proceed to England to compete for the Indian Civil Service Examination, disapproves of their abolition in 1870 by the Duke of Argyle, refers to the contemplated revival by the present Government of India of five of those scholarships in favour of Indian students proceeding to England to complete their studies, and remarks:—If our surmise be correct, we need hardly say that the re-establishment of these scholarships will be one of those acts for which the administration of the Marquis of Ripon will be long and gratefully remembered by the people of this country. The aristocracy of India having voluntarily contributed its mite towards the foundation of the Indian Institute at Oxford, it is only fitting that the Government of India should supplement the efforts of the Indian aristocracy by founding State scholarships to enable young Indian students to complete their studies in England. Other Asiatic countries, such as China and Japan, have already taken steps in a similar direction, and it is certainly a disgrace to such an enlightened Government as the Indian Government that it should have lagged behind in this respect. We have no doubt that if Government takes a proper lead in such a movement and makes adequate provision, the Native States will in course of time follow suit and found similar scholarships for the benefit of their respective subjects. Nay, we would even go further and say that if the Duke of Argyle had not abolished the State scholarships in 1870, there would have been by this time additional scholarships founded through the munificence of our aristocracy. One example is more potent as an incentive to reform than a thousand precepts. Does not the fact that all our Universities have been richly endowed during the short period of their existence clearly point out that similar endowments would unerringly follow in the wake of a proper lead by the Government of India? We want at least fifty intelligent young men to proceed to England and other Western countries every year to prosecute their studies in the several branches of arts and sciences before the desired result manifests itself to any appreciable extent. It is certainly not preposterous to expect that every provincial administration in this country should annually spend between Rs. 10,000 and 20,000 upon such a scheme, and we have no doubt that in course of time the example set by Government will be more than adequately followed by the Indian aristocracy when Government, if it so choose, may withdraw its grant. The principal difficulty lies in taking the initiative. Though we agree with the Duke of Argyle in holding that the nine State scholarships were a very paltry provision for the vast population of this country, yet that circumstance instead of having been made a plea for their abolition ought to have led Government to increase the number of scholarships, which could have been easily done. If the nine scholarships were deservedly characterized as a paltry provision, the five scholarships proposed to be revived now in connection with the Indian Institute at Oxford must be still more so; but we are disposed to accept the proposed revival as a first instalment of the adequate realization by the Government of India of its duties and responsibilities in this direction. We want the initiative to be taken, leaving the future development and expansion to time. We hope that the proposed revival of five State scholarships will in due course be officially announced.

Prefers the mode of giving appointments to Natives of India in the Civil Service by competition.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 20th January says:—The Government of India are said to contemplate a change in the present unsatisfactory mode of selecting the Statutory Civilians. Two alternative proposals are reported to be under consideration. One is that the allotted places should be conferred upon such persons as rank highest at a competitive examination, to which young men from families of a comparatively high social status only will be admitted. The other proposal is that half the places should be given as at present and half by competitive examination open to all. We prefer the latter mode, as it is, we think, calculated to prove the superiority of the educational and intellectual test—and it is the only just and correct test—and eventually pave the way for that test alone being adopted in making selections for the ranks of Statutory Civilians.

Says that the expenditure incurred for the maintenance of volunteer corps is a waste of public funds.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 22nd January observes that the sum of ten lákhs of rupees annually expended upon the European volunteer corps is a mere waste. There are 12,000 volunteers, a large number of whom are foreign subjects, such as Goanese, Portuguese, Greeks, Danes, Germans, and French. Some of these are not likely to prove of service to India in the event of a war breaking out with the foreign power of which the volunteer is a subject. Moreover nearly half of these volunteers are likely to leave India every year for settlement in Australia or Africa. Again the danger of indiscriminate enlistment of Europeans as volunteers was made evident in connection with the opposition to the Jurisdiction Bill. Many volunteers threatened to lay down their arms if the Bill was passed. It seems desirable that all Government servants, whether European or Native, should be enrolled as volunteers, since they will not dare to threaten Government with sedition. A few private individuals may also be enlisted, but great precaution should be taken to select respectable citizens alone.

Contrasts the treatment of the Dacca students for quarrelling with some policemen with that of the grown-up Europeans who heaped insults and indignities on the Viceroy.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 20th January says:—The ways of the Government of Bengal under its present régime are wonderfully mysterious! It has been troubled by anxiety on the score of the Dacca students. It has weighed them in the balance and found them wanting, and the fiat has gone forth from the Government that among the said students there is a sad want of discipline. It is announced that they have contracted all the vices of political agitators; and Mr. Thompson apparently detects signs of grave danger to the stability of Her Majesty's Indian Empire in the "unruly" conduct which according to recent discovery is their special characteristic. Mr. Thompson and those who have helped him in making a valuable search of this kind are evidently not inclined to favour those who betray contempt for the constituted authorities of the land. The Dacca students have not gone beyond quarrelling with a handful of policemen. But elsewhere there have been civilised and grown-up men who have done something worse by courting sedition, by openly avowing disloyalty, and heaping insults and indignities on the Viceroy whom the Empire regards as the representative of its Government. If the Dacca students, who were recently flogged for obstructing some policemen on duty, were in Mr. Thompson's opinion leniently dealt with, what should be the due of those elsewhere whose conduct filled the country with shame and indignation? If Mr. Thompson is such a sincere hater of sedition and disloyalty in boys, he should tell the public through his administration reports what he thinks of the recent occurrences in Calcutta, to which boys were not parties.

Recommends the reduction of the rate of commission charged for money orders.

In noticing the report that Government have decided to send money orders by telegraph on payment of the telegraphic charges by the remitter, the Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 20th January observes that the commission charged for money orders for large amounts is exorbitant. For a money order for Rs. 100 one rupee is charged; but a shroff or a Native banker gives a hundi for the same amount sometimes at par and at other times for four, six or eight annas. For this reason very few persons obtain a money order for large amounts. Money orders for small amounts are obtained by the people because the shroffs cannot issue hundis for a small commission, as they have to undergo a heavy expense on account of postage. It is desirable therefore that the rate of commission for money orders should be reduced all round, i.e., one anna should be charged for sums below Rs. 10, two annas up to Rs. 25, and two annas for every Rs. 25 above that sum. A very small charge for a telegram should be exacted when the arrangement for sending money orders by telegraph comes into force. If these recommendations are adopted a larger number of people will avail themselves of the convenience afforded by money orders for making remittances.

Complains of the oppression caused by the A'bkári Act.

In an unfinished leader headed "Tyranny in the name of the A'bkári Act," the Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 20th January observes that section 45 of Act V. of 1878 works harshly because the vendors of liquors are not educated and good accountants. They often commit mistakes through carelessness and inattention and are fined for such faults. A heavy tax is imposed on trees yielding spirituous drinks. When vendors of spirituous drinks and toddy are prosecuted for using short measures or for selling adulterated liquors, the A'bkári Inspector is the prosecutor and his peon the only witness, and the unfortunate vendors are punished on the evidence given by them. The toddy extracted from the khajuri (Indian date) tree is no doubt intoxicating, but such is not the case with nira (unfermented and fresh juice of palm trees). This assertion will be found to be true if the Chemical Analyser to Government or any other Civil Surgeon is called upon to give his opinion. Nira is not only not intoxicating but is a wholesome and healthy drink, and acts as a tonic in certain diseases. About five years ago a question arose whether nira should be treated as an intoxicating drink, and the then Collector of Surat decided after making due enquiries that it was not so. Recently Messrs. Lorimer, Clarke and Gulám Mahomed of the A'bkári Department have decided with the sanction of Mr. White, the District Collector, that nira is a spirituous drink, and have exercised a strict supervision on its sale. Two vendors of nira were recently charged before the City Magistrate with selling it without a license, and since then it has not been sold in the city. [The Surat Akhbár (83) of the 21st and the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 25th January express similar sentiments.]

Complains of the unsafe condition of the road leading from Kapadvanj to Dákor.

A correspondent of the Akhbáre Sodágar (86) of the 22nd January observes that highway robberies are often committed on the road leading from Kapadvanj to Dákor, and the unsafe condition of the road has frightened travellers so much that they fear to use it. The authorities concerned ought to make arrangements for the patrolling of the road by armed police. [The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 24th January expresses similar sentiments.]

Requests the authorities at Kolhápur to make enquiries about the indecent behaviour of European soldiers and low-caste women by the side of a certain road at Kolhápur.

The Dnyán Ságar (26) of 21st January says that a correspondent reports that on the side of the road leading from the Executive Engineer's Office at Kolhápur to the post office some European soldiers behave indecently with low-caste women between the hours of ten and four during day time. Many persons in the neighbourhood have noticed the indecent behaviour of the soldiers and the women. The Dnyán Ságar says that if this statement be true, the conduct of the soldiers is most disgraceful. The authorities should make inquiries and put a stop to the shameful exhibition.

Local Self-government.

Points out the necessity of inserting a proviso in the District Municipal Act Amendment Bill for the supply of copies of minutes, proceedings, &c., of municipal bodies to the public.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 24th January says that the people were exceedingly glad at the announcement of the introduction of the Viceregal scheme of local self-government into the country, for they hoped to be entrusted with the independent management of local funds and municipalities and thereby to receive some sort of political education. But the Bombay Presidency has been more unfortunate in this respect than any other part of India, as is evidenced by the passing of the Bombay Local Boards Bill. By it Government officials have been made independent rájás. The retention of District Collectors as presidents of local boards has made the representatives of the people in those boards mere statues. The people cannot now complain against the commissioners, for their mouths have been stopped by the grant of the privilege of returning their representatives in the local boards. By this enactment Government officials have been provided with further means of carrying out their arbitrary wishes. All this has been done in the face of the denunciations of the representatives of the people, and public memorials and suggestions. Sir James Fergusson, who is not favourably inclined towards the scheme of self-government, has very unwillingly passed it. Mr. Peile has also disappointed the public in the expectations formed of him on his nomination to the Executive Council. The omission of an explicit mention in the Bill of the public being entitled to demand and receive copies of minutes, proceedings, &c., from municipal bodies will enable Government officials to carry on affairs in an arbitrary manner with impunity. It was necessary that a proviso should have been inserted in the Bill authorizing rate-payers to demand copies of minutes, &c., by paying a small fee. The rate-payers would thereby have been enabled to expose the arbitrary deeds of officials. Though by the present Municipal Act it is intended that such copies should be given, the absence of an explicit mention in the Act to that effect enables officers to screen their unjust deeds. This has been proved by the action of the municipalities of Ahmedabad, Surat, Poona, Nadiád, Dholka and other places. Owing to the wilful interpretation of this portion of the present Municipal Act by the municipal commissioners of Ahmedabad the public did not come to know of the waste of a large amount of municipal money on the construction of the new road at Ahmedabad and of the views of the commissioners on the subject. Nine out of twenty-seven commissioners, it is said, recorded their opinion, when Mr. Borradaile's memorandum was circulated amongst them, that much money had been wasted on the construction of this new road. They also referred to the misappropriation of the trust money of the Ranchhodlál Dispensary and other affairs and asked for a commission of inquiry. The Hitechchhu does not think that all these things were brought to the notice of Government in the recent investigation into the charges brought against Mr. Fernandez by the Indian Spectator. A resolution asking for a copy of the minutes and proceedings in connection with this matter was adopted at an influential public meeting held in the city, but the commissioners refused to furnish a copy. They have not given a copy of the minutes, &c., lest the advocates of the public cause should bring them to the notice of Government. The same was the case at Surat in connection with the extension of the People's Park and other affairs. The local newspapers asked for the publication of the papers connected with these matters, but the consideration of the request was postponed during the presidentship of Mr. White. But when Mr. Whitworth became president the request was granted, and the papers are now being published. Nadiád and Dholka have also suffered from similar mismanagement. It is therefore necessary that a proviso should be inserted in the District Municipal Act Amendment Bill providing for the furnishing of copies of all papers connected with any act of a municipality. A provision to that effect can be inserted in that portion of the Bill which is substituted for section 93 of the present Act. This will prove beneficial alike to the public, the municipal commissioners and Government, and a misunderstanding between the people and Government will be prevented. The commissioners will thereby give increased attention to their work. Copies may not be given if a work is under consideration and if it is likely that the furnishing of copies at that stage will prove injurious to the interests of the municipality. The Governor in Council ought to attend to this matter. The Hitechchhu requests public societies and newspapers to show to Government the advisability of the insertion of such a proviso in the new Municipal Act.

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Is satisfied with the concordat in the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 20th January observes that if the opponents of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill really derive any pleasure from the delusion that the settlement of the question is no gain to Natives and that it is a complete triumph of the opposition, including the most rabid anti-Natives, they are welcome to the enjoyment of that kind of happiness. However, the facts stand as clear as noonday that the Government has indicated fully its policy, that the Natives have obtained a substantial concession in the shape of the amelioration of their condition and the raising of their political status, and that the Europeans have been obliged to submit to an abrogation of what they asserted as their privilege as being that of a superior race. All this is in favour of the natives of this country, the realization of whose hopes certain Europeans had declared their intention, nay resolution, of preventing by all their might. The gain of the Natives is therefore in reality very great; and they must remain satisfied with that gain, not minding how certain carping spirits under the chagrin of disappointment cry like the sly fox in the fable that the grapes are all sour. [The Gujaráti (101) and the Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Says that Natives have hardly an occasion to be dissatisfied with the concordat in the matter of the Ilbert Bill and points out the advisability of the extension of the system of trial by jury to Natives.

The Pramod Sindhu (53) of the 21st January, in an article headed "The Ilbert Bill Concordat," says:—The agitation which had stirred up India from one end to the other has been brought to a satisfactory end. In the Viceregal Legislative Council held last week the principle which had been challenged has been firmly established and recognized. Mr. Ilbert's speech shows beyond doubt that the Government of India will not be bullied by any section of the community. It is however held in certain quarters among the Native papers that the concordat is more disgraceful than the withdrawal of the Bill itself. We for one really fail to see the truth of this assertion. Those who say so cannot be supposed to have any adequate notion of the results of the withdrawal. These have been pointed out by Professor Wordsworth and would have been more disastrous than the compromise sought to be effected. Besides the principle which formed the life of the Bill and against which such a hue and cry was raised is entirely preserved. The theory that an Englishman had an unalienable right to be tried on criminal charges by European Magistrates and Judges has utterly exploded and the one demand of withdrawal of the Bill has been rejected. Considering these advantages there is hardly an occasion for discontent or discouragement. It must not, however, be understood that we approve of the arrangement in its entirety. One of the chief objects which the Bill had in view was to abolish once for all the invidious race distinction. This the Government partially fails to accomplish. It removes the distinction between the Judges and Magistrates but keeps up that among the people. We cannot see what harm would have followed if the privilege of trial by jury accorded to the British subjects had been also extended to Natives. To confer a privilege on one community and to refuse the same to the other establishes an inequality which can hardly be defended. And yet there are men who would beat their hearts if the privilege were bestowed upon Natives. At least to humiliate this hateful spirit and to explode the doctrine of race superiority the Legislature should have abolished the odious inequality by according the trial by jury to both. However, as Government finds it inconvenient to go so far at present, the arrangement arrived at cannot be pronounced a political blunder, for we all know that political advancement is always slow. Fears are entertained that miscarriage of justice might occur in many cases, since in the trial of Europeans the majority of the jury will consist of their countrymen. These fears are neither unreasonable nor unfounded. Even the Honourable Mr. Ilbert seems to have shared the apprehension, inasmuch as he said that if the instrument of justice which is intended and ought to be a terror be converted into a source of impunity for evil-doers the Government will take measures to quell the evil in time. But it is not prudent that such a grave contingency, by no means impossible, should have been left unprovided for. If Government thought it its duty to attend to the chimerical fears of a section of its subjects, it is incomprehensible that it should disregard those of the other section, which are neither imaginary nor trivial. The suggestion of Mr. Mehta of the Bombay bar that the complainant in cases of acquittal should have a right of appeal, if carried into effect, is likely to serve as a wholesome check on the jurors without curtailing their power, and demands consideration at the hands of Government.

Criticises disapprovingly the terms of the concordat in connection with the Ilbert Bill.

In an article headed the "Concordat," the Native Opinion (10) of the 20th January says:—The controversy over the Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure, now-a-days called the Ilbert Bill, has at last assumed a more sober aspect. From the time of its introduction into the Supreme Council this unfortunate piece of legislation has suffered such rough treatment as we think no other Bill has recently met with. It was carried over the whole of India, and like Pandora's box whenever it was opened it produced such a storm of vituperation and abuse as was almost awful to behold. Its devastation was not confined to this country only, but even in England it formed the subject of party strife and denunciations. The whole history of it, as far as it has advanced at present, is well worth a close study. Such incidents as these are most valuable in the study of contemporary politics, because they by their unusual proportions tear off the mask of false appearances, and opening the veil show the true inside of the situation. Before this Bill was enunciated Natives and Europeans alike had deceived themselves into a belief that they regarded each other as equals in law, and that race or colour formed no ingredient of the feelings with which each viewed the other. Both parties talked highly and loudly about meeting on the common ground of friendship and equality and mixing with each other on all social as well as public occasions on equal terms. It had begun to be thought that the Western had forgotten his barbaric pride and the Eastern his slavish abjectness, and that the white man had renounced his claims to superiority simply on the strength of the whiteness of his skin and agreed that merit and worth alone should decide the day. Even then signs were apparent that what appeared at the surface was not the truth, and that though matters were progressing towards that happy ideal yet they had not progressed so far. But these indications being minute were passed over and were not allowed to disturb that equanimity of assumed sentiment which both the races believed to be real. But the facts and incidents that occurred with reference to this Bill at once and clearly displayed the true nature of the relations between the two races, and anybody now can comprehend without the slightest mistake how far they have improved and how much they are yet behind that consummation which is desirable. Race prejudice and the conqueror's pride being fallacies repugnant to human nature must yield ultimately to worth and merit, and that they have even now considerably abated in their inciting vigour has been made abundantly clear by the concordat of Europeans and Natives with regard to this Bill. But the same conduct has shown that there yet remains much that is invidious and much that will take many years more to rectify. After noticing the modifications, the Native Opinion proceeds:—So the result is that as regards jurisdiction there is no distinction between Native or European Sessions Judges and District Magistrates in all ordinary trials, and both are to try European British subjects with the assistance of a jury. So the clear gain to the Native side is that a Native Sessions Judge is put on an equality in all respects with the European Sessions Judge. But as to the Native District Magistrate he is not in all respects made equal to his European colleague. The Native District Magistrate is equal to the European in all ordinary trials, but he has no summary jurisdiction over European British subjects, which the European has. Everything else remains as it has been. This last change made by the Government of India has come now to be styled as "the concordat." Now as to this concordat we think it is the name that has given more offence than the substance. That the Bill has been pruned considerably we do not for a moment deny, and we think that the pruning was made obligatory upon the Government by the strong pressure of circumstances, which it would be madness to deny. It may be asserted that Government have seemingly flinched, though not considerably, from the original position. But yet we cannot say that the Government made terms with the "Defence Association." It never surrendered to their violence nor succumbed to it. No doubt the opposition was stronger than was expected by some, and Lord Ripon and his colleagues must have thought that a partial retreat, if it disarmed that opposition, would be desirable, and so the retreat was made. That we think is the long and short of the new change. And in this respect we must praise His Lordship and his colleagues for the tact they have shown in this arduous struggle. It is not that they have not yielded, but they have not yielded much. They have taken care of the Native interests as much as lay in their power, and have secured to us at least one if not two conditions wholly to our mind. What is lost is due to the European agitation and what is gained is solely due in our estimation to the great and noble mind that at present rules our destinies. It would have certainly been better, we think, if the question had been somehow or other referred for decision to the Imperial Parliament, in which case we are almost sure the original frame of the proposal would have been retained. As to the trial by jury that is accorded to European British subjects, and we do not know as yet to what offences it is to be restricted, we think it will materially affect the actual working and make the experiment unsuccessful. In districts where a European jury may not be available this provision will virtually deprive the Native District Magistrate of jurisdiction over European British subjects unless there are offences made necessarily triable by District Magistrates; for the complainant will always prefer to go before a European first class magistrate in his district than before a Native District Magistrate who will have to refer the case to some other tribunal. That the system of jury-trial would be unworkable was foreshadowed by the Viceroy himself when he admitted that he was legislating for the day only and if any inconvenience arose it would be the duty of the Government of the day to remove it. It is this portion of His Lordship's speech that we take exception to, and it is this that makes us think that agitation against the Bill has become rather too heavy for the Government of India. We wish, however, that this thought for the present had been cast aside and His Lordship and his colleagues had given us something that will be enduring. The present position looks like haste with a disagreeable business and is in our view entirely unbecoming to modern statesmanship.

A severe condemnation of the concordat arrived at in the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In alluding to the report that the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is making satisfactory progress in the Select Committee, the Rást Goftár (115) of the 20th January ironically observes what a great satisfaction it is that the Bill, which was expected to pass into law a month ago, should make easy progress through the Committee, after it was subjected to clippings that have made it almost worthless! What a great victory that the Bill, the original draft of which had so much excited the Europeans as to bring about mutiny, should move through the Committee with ease after it was made so very weak as to induce Europeans to withdraw their opposition! What a great achievement that the members of the ruling race, who became the enemies of the highest authorities and inflicted shameful insults on them, should have been conciliated by conceding to them new rights! To withdraw the Bill would be a victory to the opposition, defeat to Government, and disappointment to Natives for not getting a right which Government had resolved to concede. The Bill could not therefore be thrown overboard. Government has kept its word about getting the Bill passed into law, though it has assumed a form quite different from what it originally had. Government promised to remove the race distinction made by the Code between Europeans and Natives, but has kept the promise by widening that distinction! Government resolved to give Natives their just rights and carried out that resolution by simply increasing the privileges of Europeans! Government has pleased Natives and Europeans! There was a prohibition against placing accused Europeans before Native Magistrates, and this restriction has been removed and Natives are pleased: the Europeans claimed that they should not be tried by Native Magistrates, and have been satisfied by the admission of their claim by Government! What an important right Natives have obtained! The accused European will be placed before a Native Magistrate, but he is not to be tried by the latter; his case will be decided by his own countrymen. And when no European jury can be convened in the mofussil the case will be sent to the District Sessions Court. The accused European has got the new right of trial by jury before a District Magistrate—a right that the accused Native does not enjoy; moreover the Sessions Judge, who had the power hitherto of trying an accused European, will hereafter have to try him with the assistancy of a jury composed of Europeans. The trial of an accused European be European juries before European Magistrates and Judges is a great advantage to the accused and a disadvantage to Natives, since European juries are partial to their countrymen and often give improper verdicts. Can Natives want more than this? They ought to be satisfied with what they have gained and ought to be grateful for it to Government!

Says that the concordat is no gain whatever to Natives.

In a leader headed "The difference between saying and doing," the same newspaper elsewhere observes that the speeches made by Lord Ripon and the Honourable Mr. Ilbert at the last Council meeting in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill are very valuable for the description given in them of a just administrative policy and for the defence of the principle of the Bill. But when these speeches are compared with the changes made in the Bill by the concordat, a great difference appears between the sayings and doings of those in power. The principle of the Bill is preserved nominally; it is written in the law but is not to be brought into force. The Bill asserts that the Native Magistrate has a right to try an accused European, but does not concede that right. A proposal was made to extend the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates over accused Europeans: the extension was allowed, but with the reservation that a European jury should try them. Does this not mean that without a jury the Native Magistrate is not competent to try an accused European? And if such be its meaning, how can it be said that the principle of the Jurisdiction Bill has been preserved or enforced? Lord Ripon deserves no blame for this state of things. Recent circumstances compelled him to preserve the shadow instead of the reality. An attempt is made to make the concordat appear a great victory in the interests of Natives, and they are advised to accept the compromise and be thankful for it; and hence the true character of the whole affair has been thus prominently depicted here.

Does not approve of Mr. Mehta's proposal of appealing against acquittals.

In an article headed "Mr. Pherozshah M. Mehta on the Concordat," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 21st January says:—Mr. Mehta suggests that where a British offender is tried before a Magistrate or Judge and a jury of his countrymen and is wrongly acquitted or lightly punished, the complainant in such a case should have the right of appealing to the High Court. That such a provision, if embodied in the Code of Criminal Procedure, would to a great extent deter perversely inclined juries from returning wrong verdicts cannot for a moment be doubted, but it seems to us that the remedy proposed by Mr. Mehta seeks to introduce into Indian legislation by a side-wind a principle which English jurists from times immemorial have condemned as unsafe to introduce into any enlightened system of jurisprudence. If complainants against British-born offenders be allowed the right of an appeal against an acquittal, the question will necessarily arise—why should not all complainants have the same right given them? The principle of the English law is that no man shall be tried twice for the same offence, and this rule is defended by English jurists on the ground that it is better that the guilty should escape than that even a single innocent man should suffer. This rule of English law, which we believe still forms part of the criminal laws of England, was adopted by the Indian Legislature till 1872, when, while amending our Code of Criminal Procedure, Sir FitzJames Stephen sought to modify it. The modification was at the time very much protested against by the Native press particularly, who contended that it was a menace to the liberty of the subjects and would lead to much trouble and anxiety to any person who might stand accused of an offence before a criminal court in India. The Native press were, however, assured that the right of appeal against an acquittal would not be given to private individuals but would be confined to the local Governments only, and that the local Governments would exercise that right only where they felt that the accused concerned had been acquitted in a manifestly unjust manner. With this limitation the English rule was altered. If it be now proposed that the rule should be altered further still, and particularly with reference to European British subjects, the question may arise—why should it not be altered with reference to others also? Are we prepared to accept such an alteration as will make an acquittal by a criminal court of no final effect but liable to be set aside by the highest Courts of Judicature, and that at the instance of a complainant? It is this that creates some misgiving at the outset in one's mind concerning the suggestion made by Mr. Mehta. We think that it is dangerous to allow private parties to appeal against acquittals. The criminal laws in India are already rigorous enough, and we should be careful not to accept a suggestion which may have the effect of adding to their rigour by enabling irresponsible complainants to persecute their enemies by accusing them of an offence before a criminal court and in case of their acquittal by dragging them again before the High Court. As the law stands at present the local Governments have the power of appealing against wrong acquittals, and it is desirable that the right should continue to be limited to them rather than that it should be extended to private parties. As to the fear that by the system of jury-trials which the Legislature are about to introduce in the mofussil in certain cases affecting European British subjects justice will not be properly administered and acquittals will be general in such cases, we may ask—does not the same fear exist now, or has it not existed for many years past? Has Lord Ripon's compromise brought it into existence or intensified it in any way? This question appears to have been ignored by many in writing upon this subject. Under the present law, which has been in force since 1872, a European British accused could be tried by none but a Magistrate or Judge of his own race, so that the fear of a wrong acquittal exists under that state of things as much as it will exist under the changes about to be effected according to the concordat. The Legislature adopted no safeguards with reference to wrong acquittals of European offenders tried by European Magistrates, and Lord Ripon in bringing forward the Ilbert Bill did not profess to provide any safeguards against such acquittals. All he aimed at was the removal of an administrative inconvenience, and Natives have defended the principle of the Ilbert Bill more because it sought to remove certain distinctions between the European and the Native magistracy and judiciary than because they thought such legislation was desirable for the purpose of preventing the wrong acquittals of European offenders. Lord Ripon never professed to provide a remedy for the evil, which exists as much now as it will exist hereafter, namely, the evil caused by European offenders either getting unjustly acquitted or leniently punished, and when we ask His Lordship to provide proper safeguards against a European jury in the mofussil acquitting an accused of their own race we are asking him to provide safeguards not against an evil which will come into existence for the first time under the innovations which he is making, but against an evil which existed as much before His Lordship had ever thought of such a thing as the Ilbert Bill. In other words, the chances of European British offenders escaping punishment by reason of the partiality of those trying them will be under the system about to be inaugurated not more than they were under the law as now existing and as it has existed for many years past. Some people talk as if by allowing the right of jury-trial to European British subjects Lord Ripon has brought a new evil into existence, as if under the existing law appertaining to European British subjects, which law His Lordship is going to modify, that evil did not exist, and as if in removing certain disabilities from the position of the Native judiciary His Lordship's principal object was to minimise the evil in question, i.e., to remedy the injustice caused in the shape of wrong acquittals by European Magistrates and Judges trying men of their own nationality. We think it proper to point out that Lord Ripon professed no such object and has brought no new evil into existence. Wrong and perverse acquittals will not be increased by what he has done nor will they be less. Their chances in future will be as many as their chances for many years past have been. If then His Lordship has not increased those chances but has left them exactly as they were, and further if he never professed by means of the Ilbert Bill to minimise the evil by lessening the chances of wrong acquittals, would it be reasonable to charge him with having substituted what some people call a new and grave anomaly in the shape of jury-trials for an old and equally grave anomaly in the shape of a distinction between the European and the Native judiciary? It seems to us, looking at the matter in its proper light, that Lord Ripon's compromise in the matter of the Ilbert Bill has, where it has done us good, given us something new and something which it was his principal aim to give; and where it has done any evil, the evil is not new or one arising for the first time out of the compromise, but is one which existed before as much as it will exist under the compromise. Native politicians would do well to judge of His Lordship's policy relating to this particular question with due regard for the objects he has sought to accomplish and the evils which he has sought to remedy.

Education.

Makes suggestions regarding the diffusion of scientific and technical education in India.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 20th January, in an article headed "The neglect of scientific education in India—Important suggestions to Government," says:—We are very glad to hear that the first subject that engaged the attention of the National Conference at Calcutta was the extension of scientific education in India. The conference will be doing good service if it can formulate distinct and practical proposals for the attainment of this object and persuade Government to open more schools and colleges of science in every province and to decide that the men issuing out of them have preferential claims for State service. Abstract resolutions without the will and the power to put them into operation are of no use, and it is our earnest wish to see substantial progress made in whatever is undertaken by the leading bodies. It is now very well known that Government intend to extend the field of primary education and to pass an Education Act as the outcome of the labours of the Education Commission. We contend that inasmuch as Government levy special taxes for educational purposes the people are entitled to see not only that the money thus raised is applied to those purposes but that it is equitably apportioned between the different branches of education. We maintain that the distribution up to this time has been unfair and that the basis on which technical schools and colleges are founded is weak and requires to be strengthened. We would raise the standards of these institutions so as to secure men able to conduct the duties at present performed by the Royal and Civil Engineers, the Superintendents of the Schools of Art, the Locomotive and Carriage and Waggon Superintendents in connection with the railways, and in fact everyone imported from England on account of his technical training. But if this cannot immediately be done we would propose that the high schools should have Bachelors of Science and Licentiates of Civil Engineering to teach mechanics, chemistry, astronomy and other scientific subjects in preference to persons who have not made them their special study. As drawing-masters are attached to a selected number of high schools, so should these persons be attached to them. We would further propose that with a view to give a scientific turn to the juvenile mind some vernacular classes be attached to the Medical and Engineering Colleges to train up persons fit to teach in vernacular and some important primary schools. We would direct that scientific subjects be taught not only for the Matriculation standard, but in every standard in the high school. We would place adequate materials at the disposal of the science-teachers in order to enable them and the boys to conduct experiments. We would make it incumbent on these teachers to give periodical lectures to the boys of the schools collectively and to the people in popular phraseology. We would start an association for the purpose of composing or scrutinizing and adopting scientific books suited to every standard, for bringing into one focus the diverging views of scientists and urging the claims of science upon the notice of Government and the people. Recognizing the fact that the boys attending the schools belong to the middle and poor classes of society, we would charge very moderate fees and increase the percentage of free studentships and the number of scholarships. We would legally provide for technical schools and colleges by making the Government and the municipal and local fund boards responsible for their establishment, maintenance and supervision. We would fix a minimum limit of money and the number of institutions in each district by a legislative enactment. It is very much to be regretted that the Government of India expressly omitted the subject of technical education from the questions referred to the Education Commission, but a Government that can see the necessity for encouraging private enterprise and industries can easily see that no enterprise and industry can spring up unless the people are given means of gaining a proper knowledge of technical subjects. Government are as well aware of this fact as the people on whose behalf we have been writing. The Liberal party is essentially a popular party, and if during its tenure of office such important business is neglected, where shall we look for the courage and heart to introduce this reform in justice to this country? But we do not despair. We have the assurance of Lord Ripon's Government that the Indian subjects of Her Imperial Majesty will under his rule derive all the blessings of peace and be treated in the spirit of the principles enunciated in the Queen's Proclamation of 1858 and the Charter Act of 1833, and we therefore appeal to the conscience and the good sense of the members of the Government of India and the local Governments to take immediate and effective steps in this matter. The liberality and public spirit of Native and European gentlemen should cooperate in this direction with the members of Government.

Native States.

Some remarks in connection with the incidents attending the death of the Mahárája of Kolhápur and the enquiry held on the dead body.

In an article headed "The death of the Mahárája of Kolhápur," the Mahrátta (2) of the 20th January says:—We have not the least doubt that Mr. Green had no intention of killing the Mahárája, but we certainly cannot acquit him of rashness and negligence. If Malhári's account be correct, then, as observed by Mr. Jopp, it is clear that Private Green erred in attempting to put restraint upon the Rája. Mr. Jopp, however, thinks that Mr. Green's account appears to be correct, as he repeated the same story to Mr. Birch when he entered the room, when Mr. Green had no idea of altering facts to screen himself. The reason is indeed good, but we cannot understand Mr. Green's conduct in refusing to call for Mr. Birch immediately. Mr. Jopp thinks that Mr. Green is liable to severe censure for this, though Government has not been pleased to notice this opinion. It is said that Malhári would naturally not say anything against his master, but is it more probable that Malhári would not say anything against his dead master or that Mr. Green would not depose against his own life? It is our opinion that even if Mr. Green's account be taken as correct, there was no sufficient justification to push and press the Mahárája as he did. The Rája was already dispossessed of his boots, and by leaving the room for a while Mr. Green could have well avoided the attack if he expected one. The Rája was not violent and could have been soothed immediately. We are quite sure that had Mr. Green left the room and returned after some time we should not have heard of the death of the Rája. Mr. Green lost his temper and did what he was not justified in doing, though Government think quite otherwise. The opinions of the guardians of the Rája also are divided on the subject. Mr. Birch thought that restraint was necessary to make the patient believe that no violence would be tolerated; while Mr. Cox, who had been there to pay a Christmas visit to his friend, deposed that restraint was justifiable only if His Highness seemed aggressive after throwing the boot. Mr. Jopp, who presided over the Court of Inquest, which by-the-by we are told partly consisted of men who could hardly write, has not given his opinion clearly on the point, but he thinks that Mr. Green could not be held responsible for the death of the Mahárája, "as the fall was not a necessary or even a probable result of the restraint used"; though he observes "it would be open to the heirs of His Highness to prosecute Mr. Green for common assault." As remarked above, he also thinks Mr. Green is "liable to grave censure for not having at once informed Mr. Birch of His Highness's condition." With these recommendations of the Magistrate before us we cannot but express our strong dissent from the Government resolution on the subject. Had Mr. Jopp inquired into the history of Mr. Green's previous "tussles" with the Mahárája, we think he would not have regarded the fall as a rather improbable result of the restraint used. But even supposing that the result was not probable, Mr. Jopp is certainly wrong in saying that the Mahárája's heirs may prosecute Mr. Green for common assault only, as Mr. Green may under the circumstances published be held liable for a graver charge, viz., causing death by rashness or negligence under section 304 A. of the Indian Penal Code. He was rash in restraining the Rája and neglected his duty in refusing to call for Mr. Birch immediately. These are culpable elements in the story, and as Government took upon themselves the guardianship of the Rája as against his relatives, we believe it is their duty to take legal action against Mr. Green instead of leaving the heirs of the Rája to settle the question as suggested by Mr. Jopp. In conclusion we hope that Government will take a lesson from this unfortunate and sad event and will not force in future their departmental treatment on young princes as against that of their guardians. Howsoever painstaking and well-meaning the officers of Government may be, they always lack that feeling of attachment which nature alone can supply. What would be said of a man who sent his sick sons to a hospital for treatment instead of treating them at home? In bringing up future rulers of States Government should of course see that they are freed from prejudicial influences, but to separate them from their relatives is not a sound policy. In selecting a new claimant to the throne we hope Government will take care that this history is not repeated on the supposition that there are no proper natural guardians for the boy. Separating a boy from his natural guardians is the last course to be resorted to, and we request Government to make such a choice that they will not have to interfere in the domestic treatment of the boy afterwards.

Says that a public enquiry should be made into Mr. Green's conduct in connection with the death of the late Mahárája of Kolhápur.

The Native Opinion (10) of 20th January observes that in addition to the papers published relating to the enquiry held on the corpse of the late Mahárája of Kolhápur Government ought to have made public the details of the evidence taken down by the Magistrate and the report of the doctor. But since this has not been done, all sorts of people are talking all sorts of absurdities as to how the Mahárája's death occurred. Hearsay evidence is not admissible in proceedings conducted according to law, but in the enquiry held subsequently to the death of the Mahárája this rule was not strictly observed. For the satisfaction of the people the evidence given by different witnesses ought to have been published. From the published proceedings it is quite clear that the Mahárája's death resulted from the rupture of the spleen. It must also be taken as proved that nobody had any intention of killing the Mahárája and that it was the result of mere accident. But although Mr. Green had no intention of hurting the Mahárája, yet his conduct is not altogether free from blame. In order to exonerate him completely it ought to have been shown to demonstration that Mr. Green took all the necessary precautions to prevent the Mahárája's death. But this has not been done. In the eleventh paragraph of Mr. Jopp's report he says that Mr. Green is deserving of blame for not at once sending for Mr. Birch when the Rája's condition became serious after the tussle. If Mr. Green had summoned Mr. Birch immediately after the tussle, the latter would have at once called in the doctor and it is not improbable that the Rája's life might have been saved. But the fact that Mr. Green prevented Malhári from going to fetch Mr. Birch shows conclusively that the former committed a fatal blunder. It is strange that the above observation of Mr. Jopp should not have been noticed in the Government resolution. In order to remove the false impression created in the public mind regarding the death of the Mahárája of Kolhápur a public enquiry should be held to enquire into Mr. Green's conduct. It would be well if Government were to attend to this suggestion.

Says that Mr. Green should be publicly tried for his conduct in connection with the circumstances attending the death of the Mahárája of Kolhápur.

The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 20th January observes among other things that Government committed a blunder in delaying the publication of the papers relating to the enquiry held on the corpse of the late Mahárája of Kolhápur. Government also made a great mistake in completely exonerating Mr. Green from all blame. From the beginning to the end of this affair the policy of the Bombay Government is deserving of censure. Government ought not to have turned a deaf ear to the complaints of Native newspapers regarding the treatment of the Mahárája of Kolhápur because the English journals observed silence on the subject. Malhár Ráo Gáikwád was put on his trial on mere suspicion of his having attempted to poison the Resident at Baroda. On the death of an insignificant European in the service of the Mahárája of Cashmere the Government without any adequate cause suspected that the Mahárája had poisoned him and thereupon instituted a minute enquiry regarding the occurrence. But when a Native king met his death from the tussle which he had with an English soldier, the latter is not put on his trial. Such conduct is not befitting the just British Government. The Poona Vaibhav suggests that Mr. Green should be publicly tried before a legal tribunal.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
2nd February 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári Act: Complaint against the oppression caused by the— ... 5
Civil Service: Preference of the mode of giving appointments to Natives of India in the — by competition 3
Indecent behaviour of European soldiers: Request to the authorities at Kolhápur to make enquiries about the — and low-caste women by the side of a certain road at Kolhápur 5
Money orders: Recommendation for the reduction of the rate of commission charged for— 4
Road leading from Kapadvanj to Dákor: Complaint regarding the unsafe condition of the— 5
State scholarships in connection with the Indian Institute at Oxford: Advisability of the contemplated revival by the Government of India of five— 3
Treatment of the Dacca students: A contrast between the — for quarrelling with some policemen and of the grown-up Europeans who heaped insults and indignities on the Viceroy 4
Volunteer Corps: Expression of opinion that the expenditure incurred for the maintenance of — is a waste of public funds 4

PART II.—Local Self-government—

District Municipal Act Amendment Bill: Necessity of inserting a proviso in the — for the supply of copies of minutes, proceedings, &c., of municipal bodies to the public 5

PART III.—Legislation—

Concordat arrived at between the Government and the European Defence Association in regard to the final settlement of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill:

  Adverse criticism on the terms of the— 8
  Expression of opinion that the — is no gain whatever to Natives. 10
  Expression of opinion that Natives have hardly any occasion to be dissatisfied with the — and recommendation of the extension of the system of trial by jury to Natives 7
  Expression of satisfaction at the— 6
  Severe condemnation of the— 9
Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill: Disapproval of Mr. Mehta's proposal of allowing appeals against acquittals 10

PART IV.—Education—

Diffusion of scientific and technical education in India: Suggestions regarding the— 12

PART V.—Native States—

Kolhápur:

  Expression of opinion that a public enquiry should be made into Mr. Green's conduct in connection with the death of the late Mahárája of— 14
  Expression of opinion that Mr. Green should be publicly tried for his conduct in connection with the circumstances attending the death of the Mahárája of— 14
  Some remarks in connection with the incidents attending the death of the Mahárája of — and the enquiry held on the dead body 13

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 2nd February 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Mahárásthră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Mahárásthră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that the stability of the British rule depends on the contentment of Natives.

The Shubh Suchak (64) of the 25th January, in an article headed "How can the stability of the British rule be secured," says:—It is an undeniable fact that a people inhabiting a distant island gradually gained power in India and placed it on a sure foundation, and the same may in course of time receive an accession of strength and firmness, but how to accomplish this last result is a question of great importance. The rulers that wielded the scattered kingdoms in this country before the arrival of the English were neither cowards nor ignorant of the secrets of diplomacy. One who will take pains to study the causes that led to the passing of these kingdoms into the hands of the English and to the lenient treatment of the ruled by the rulers will perceive that if the generous and sage governors of those times had not followed the policy of ruling their newly acquired possessions with a mild hand, of dealing even-handed justice to all concerned, and of enhancing the mildness of their sway by abolishing all the oppressive levies of former regimés, their grasp would not have been as firm as it is, nor would the people of India have been in a position to appreciate the blessings of the English rule. In the face of these circumstances we are unable to conceive how very foolish is the cry of prestige and privilege of being tried by peers, which has been raised by European officers of all ranks, cobblers, gardeners and agriculturists, who are scarcely cognizant of the ways and means, fair and foul, by which their forefathers acquired the dominion of this vast peninsula. They only can judge how far such a cry becomes those whose scriptures inculcate the doctrine of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. We for one think that if there is any chance of the foundations of the British rule being strengthened, that chance does not lie in treating Natives with haughtiness, arrogance and injustice. How can those raw youths who hold views derogatory to the Natives, and who consider it an insult to the dignity of Europeans to be tried by Natives, be blind to the state of affairs in Presidency towns in India and in Ceylon. Do not Native Presidency Magistrates pass sentences on European accused? How can they reconcile their idea about this sense of dignity with this state of things? Have not the persons who are now clamorous in singing the superiority of Europeans heard that their forefathers had to wait on the Peshwas and Nizáms without shoes and with folded hands? When you fearlessly hold that an insignificant Native can try a Native prince, but that a Native, who has risen by length of service and experience to the post of a Sessions Judge, is not competent to try a white loafer, who will not say that all sense of justice has abandoned you, that you are not actuated by fear of God and that you are wholly overtaken by false pride? It will thus be seen that the cry of superiority raised by the Europeans of the present day is not only erroneous but is instrumental in giving rise to various sinful and unjust acts. Do these Europeans ever take thought of the extent to which the people of British India have been burdened with taxation? Do they ever consider the circumstances which have made the life of the subjects of the British Government unbearable on various accounts? These ignorant Europeans fail to recognize the fact that it is their duty to remove the causes of the distraction that is rapidly spreading among Natives on account of the disregard shown to their vested rights, the injustice done to them, and the impecuniosity brought on by their being deprived of their riches in various ways. What can be said of the attempts that are made to thwart Lord Ripon and his generous compeers in their efforts to please Natives by allowing them their due? During the recent discussion on the Ilbert Bill a European councillor is reported to have said that history does not show that it is possible to maintain a kingdom by means of a generous administration and liberal laws! What a narrow mind does such a statement betray? If India ever gets such a Viceroy, then the mouths of the people will surely be gagged. For a kingdom to be strong and firm it is necessary that the sympathies of the ruled should be on the side of the rulers, and if the people of India are kept pleased the British Administration will have nothing to fear for any length of time.

Necessity of reforming the present constitution of Indian Legislative Councils.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 31st January, in an article headed "Our Legislative Councils," says:—We believe it to be a generally admitted fact that our Legislative Councils, as at present constituted, are not at all satisfactory, and we think that the time has arrived when the problem of reforming them must be boldly faced and solved. It may even be contended that Lord Ripon would have done better if he had directed his attention to this question before initiating his now memorable policy of developing and extending local self-government in this country. It is in the long run better that such reforms should commence from the top than at the bottom, and then by the process of filtration permeate the lower regions. So long as our Legislative Councils are wholly constituted on the principle of nomination and so long as the non-official members in these Councils, or, to give them their proper designation, the additional members as they are called, are not permitted to put any interpellations in executive matters to the members of Government, they must continue to be powerless for good and only powerful for mischief. The Legislative Council in Ceylon is differently constituted, the non-official members thereof being elected by the various communities whom they represent. These non-official members can also put interpellations in executive matters to their official colleagues, and it need hardly be said that this power affords a salutary check to the vagaries of the executive Government. Moreover the Ceylon Legislative Council possesses control in financial matters, in so far as the annual budget is discussed and sanctioned by the Legislature. The Honourable P. Rámanátham told us that this system has worked very satisfactorily. Here then in the Ceylon Legislative Council we have a model before us to which it should be our endeavour to conform. If the system has worked successfully in Ceylon, between which and India there is no difference whatever, the former being only a part of the latter mainland, we fail to see why it should not be crowned with the same happy results in India. It is the Home Government, that is, the Secretary of State for India and the Imperial Parliament of the United Kingdom, that must move in the matter and alter the Government of India Acts of 1858 and 1861. Lord Ripon told us in his speech at Calcutta on the occasion of the unveiling of the statue of the late Prasannakumár Tagore that it was he himself who carried the Indian Councils Act of 1861 through the Parliament. The Marquis of Ripon having been thus most directly connected with the initiation of a liberal policy which opened the doors of the Legislative Councils in India to the Natives, we believe we are justified in entertaining a hope that before laying down the exalted and responsible office he now so worthily fills the Marquis of Ripon will advise the Home Government to amend the Councils Act of 1861 so as to assimilate the system in this country with that prevailing in Ceylon, and which, as we have already remarked above, has been found after a long trial to work very successfully. We cannot conceive of a more fitting close to so splendid and successful a career as His Lordship has had in this country than that he should earn the lasting gratitude of the millions entrusted to his fostering care by giving them an adequate representation in their Legislative Councils. Moreover we think that the leaders of the great Liberal Party, who are now in power, must also turn their attention to this subject, if they are honestly to fulfil the expectations they raised in the minds of the people of India by their declarations when out of office. The speech from the throne when the first Session of the present Parliament was opened contained a declaration that an important departure in the administration of India was both advisable and necessary. With a view to pave the way for the introduction of the needful departure in the existing constitution of India it is necessary that a Parliamentary Committee of Inquiry should be appointed to inquire into and report upon the working of the existing system of the Government of India both in this country and in England and to suggest the needful reforms. It is now full twenty-five years since the direct administration of this country passed from the late East India Company to the Crown, and since then there has been no inquiry of the kind suggested above. Such an inquiry must precede the introduction of any reform in the existing system, for without such an enquiry the defects of the existing system will not be laid bare in all their naked hideousness.

Besides the traditions of the East India Company's regime point to the same direction and require that such an inquiry should precede any change of constitution. Formerly there used to be such an independent inquiry after every twenty years and before the periodical renewal of the Charter of the East India Company. That practice was undoubtedly very useful, and in the interests of India and in those of progressive Government it is essentially necessary that that practice should be revived and followed after periodical intervals. Without such an inquiry at fixed intervals there can be no guarantee of a progressive Government, and it is only an exhaustive review of the kind suggested above that can suggest the needful reforms. If we remember rightly, Professor Fawcett, who is an important member of Her Majesty's present Government and who we are told materially assists the Secretary of State for India by his ripe and judicious advice, suggested such an inquiry before the dissolution of the last Parliament by the late Lord Beaconsfield. If such was the case it is unaccountable why a Parliamentary Committee of Inquiry should not have been appointed long ago. Within a week more the fifth session of the present Parliament will be opened, and now that there is greater tranquillity in Ireland and there are no foreign complications to distract the attention of Parliament, we trust that the opportunity will be availed of by Her Majesty's Government to appoint a Committee of Inquiry of the nature suggested above. Our object will be gained by limiting the scope of the Committee's inquiry to the constitution of India only. The field of inquiry will thus be narrowed and a reasonable hope may be entertained that the Committee will be enabled to bring its labours to a close at an early date. The present Parliament is entering upon its fifth year and there is no knowing when it may be dissolved. Moreover owing to a variety of causes, more especially the bitter controversy that raged throughout the past year in connection with the Ilbert Bill, a great deal of interest in Indian subjects has been excited in England, and we therefore think that the present time is the most opportune for the appointment of a Parliamentary Committee of Inquiry of the nature proposed above.

Necessity of the disestablishment of the Christian Church in India.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 27th January refers to the article in the London Times of the 23rd December last on the subject of the disestablishment of the Christian Church in India, quotes extracts from a letter from Mr. Baxter, M.P., to the Times and from the Indian Statesman on the same subject and remarks :—So even according to the high authority of the Thunderer, which has been so long harping upon the subject of treating Natives as a conquered race in connection with the Ilbert Bill, a State-church in India is a great anomaly. We are glad the Times is prepared to pass over an Anglo-Indian's supposed vested rights in respect of his religion. The question of disestablishment is in a nutshell and should not require any hot controversy to arrive at any legitimate conclusion. The Government of India as the rulers of the Indian people do not and cannot profess any religion, and hence there ought to have been no State-church in this country; and yet we have such a church and a costly machinery attached to it to conduct its functions. This position of the Indian Church suggests two or three important questions. If the Indian Government does not profess any of the indigenous religions, why should a Christian Church be maintained solely for the religious behoof of foreigners at the cost of the people who do not recognize it? Again if the Indian Government while not professing any indigenous religion maintains a church for the spiritual welfare of foreigners out of the money of Indian tax-payers, have not the people themselves a far greater right to have their own religious needs provided for? Thirdly, can the religious endowments of former Governments be an argument in favour of the present State-church? As to the first question we need say no more than that a Government professing no indigenous religion can have no State-church, and its present existence is a veritable anomaly, the mere offshoot of the will, not of the law, but of those who hold the country under their sway. It is preposterous to say that a Government which pays so handsomely for the physical well-being of our great services should pay for their religious well-being also. And are not the services quite in a position to pay for themselves, and do not those visitors of the church who do not follow the tenets of the English Church pay their preceptors for their religious ministrations? And yet we have our Bishops, Deacons et hoc genus omne to add by so much to our financial difficulties. If the services out here want some people to take care of the peace of their souls, they ought to pay for it from their own pockets, handsomely lined as they mostly are. If it be urged that a provision in the case of British soldiers at least is necessary, nobody would ever object to such provision, provided that a similar provision was made in the case of the Native army by entertaining the services of their own priests and ministers. But when we find no such provision nor even remote possibility thereof we think the Government of India ought to leave the religious field absolutely neutral, and neither provide for the one nor neglect the other. We may not object to provision being made for the spiritual welfare of the soldier; but why should the well-paid civilian enjoy the lion's share of all this provision? If the civilian's soul requires the ministrations of religion, let similar Hindu and Mahomedan establishments be founded for the Hindu and Mahomedan servants of Government, and then there will be no cause for irritation among the people. But while the Christian spiritual hierarchy is given every encouragement in India, opportunities are never lost to knock on the head many indigenous religious establishments founded by former Governments, and for which the present Government can claim no credit. The British people have accepted the sovereignty of India as it has come down to them, and as successors of the Peshwas and the Emperors of Delhi they are bound to respect the institutions of their predecessors. They cannot, however, in the performance of that duty claim the credit of providing for other religions besides the Christian, as some Englishmen seem to think.

Complains of the stringency of the provisions of the Forest Act of 1878.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 28th January refers to the memorial addressed to Lord Ripon by some 26,000 inhabitants of the District of Kolába on the necessity of making changes in the Forest Act of 1878 and remarks:—The five years during which the Forest Act has been in force have encouraged those entrusted with its working to extend its application far beyond the intentions of the Legislature. The memorialists point out that "even the rights guaranteed by Mr. Dunlop's proclamation and upheld by the High Court of Bombay on the basis of that proclamation are now interfered with." The Forest officers decide what is and what is not within the purview of the Act. They are, practically speaking, uncontrolled. They have no sense of responsibility, such as is created when an official knows that what he does is liable to be scrutinised in, and set aside by, a court of law. The result is that a Forest officer is now more feared in the mofussil than a Magistrate or Collector. A belief prevails that a prosecution for a forest offence cannot end in anything else than conviction. Not long ago we met with a case where a Magistrate convicted a man accused of a forest offence, although, as the Magistrate himself admitted in his judgment, there was no evidence whatever to support the conviction except the opinion of the prosecuting Forest officer (which under the law was no evidence at all) that the accused had committed the offence charged against him! It is stated in the memorial that the assessment on land was fixed at a time when forest produce was available to the people for grazing cattle and for ráb and manure for their fields. Now while the assessment remains what it was the rayats are deprived of the advantage which existed when the assessment was fixed and which was taken into consideration by the Survey authorities in determining it. The memorialists are not asking Government to do away with forest legislation altogether. On the other hand they admit that they fully sympathise with the object of the Legislature in providing for forest cultivation, but admitting that forest preservation is most important for the prosperity of the country in future they submit that some regard is also due to the claims of the present generation. For instance, what can be more reasonable than to ask Government to make provision "for a reasonable use of forest produce for the grazing of the cattle of the agriculturists?" A few months ago when complaints were brought to the notice of the Government of India that the salt-tax was pressing heavily on agriculturists they issued a Resolution after consulting their officers intimating that steps should be taken to mitigate the evil. The present complaint seems undoubtedly to fall within the same category, for it concerns agriculture as much as the complaints against the salt-tax. Government might hesitate to be lenient towards poorer classes like the Kátkaris, but both reason and self-interest demand that they should relax the forest rules with regard to the grazing of cattle. "There are," say the memorialists, "1,32,361 head of cattle in the Kolába District, and the expense for the grazing of these animals is about Rs. 5 per head per annum. All this was saved by the rayats before the common grazing grounds set apart under the last settlement were declared to be reserved forests." If Government feel disinclined to grant all the prayers of the memorialists, they should at least grant this, as it affects agriculture immediately.

Says that the Sind Encumbered Estates Act has not improved the condition of the landholders in Sind.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 27th January quotes that portion of Mr. Hope's speech delivered on the occasion of the introduction of the Sind Encumbered Estates Bill into the Legislative Council which enumerated four causes to which the poverty of the Jághirdárs and Zamindárs in Sind was in his opinion attributable, and remarks:—Have the causes abovementioned—improvidence, natural circumstances, survey or settlement, and the action of the Civil Courts—been all neutralized or eliminated? The Sind Encumbered Estates Act of course does away with the action of the Civil Courts and ostensibly protects certain landholders from the consequences of their improvidence, but the Survey and Settlement Department is as busy and flourishing as ever, and the capricious Indus is still the main source of irrigation in Sind. No Act of the Legislature can force the river to give up its fitful freaks, but the Survey and Settlement Department surely admits of vast improvements. Have these improvements been effected? Mr. Hope stated in one of his later speeches on this Bill that in Bombay "to know of an evil was to Revenue officers synonymous with taking every possible measure to redress it." But in the first place taking every possible measure to redress an evil is not synonymous with redressing it, the remedy being often worse than the disease; and in the next place one good which the creation of the Manager's Department has done is to give a direct lie to this sanguine official optimism. So far as we know no one has so vigorously protested against the operations of the Survey and Settlement Department in Sind as the Manager himself. He has felt himself bound in duty to point out the iniquities and hardships inflicted by the Revised Survey and Settlement in Sind. So much for Mr. Hope's roseate view of the Revenue administration. It is clear then that the Act purports at the most to remove two of the four causes of its proteges' poverty. The other two still exist and operate as fully and freely as before. The Civil Procedure Code no longer applies to the indebted Zamindárs and Jághirdárs, but the Bombay Procedure Code applies to them as much as to any other. A harsh adjective law is superseded, but the harsh substantive revenue law still remains. The jurisdiction of the Civil Judge is ousted, but not that of the Survey and Settlement Officer and his long train of hungry subordinates. This officer with his field book may be trusted to behave equitably when measures are taken to redress the evils of his method of assessment, but the Civil Judge, it seems, is incorrigible and irreclaimable. No measures can be taken to redress the evils he perpetrates, unless he is packed off bodily bag and baggage from the landholders' camp. It seems even a law repealing the usury laws and doing away with court fees in the case of landholders or embodying the pure essence of justice, to be found in the rules framed under the Sind Encumbered Estates Act itself, will produce no impression on the hardened heart of the Civil Judge. He is a wild animal that cannot be tamed; not so the Survey and Settlement Officer. All his ways are of course ways of pleasantness and all his paths are those of peace, while those of the unfortunate Civil Judge are nothing if not the reverse. The Settlement Officer has, it seems, enough and to spare of saving grace. Hence the Zamindárs and Jághirdárs need expect nothing but the milk of human kindness and the honey of pure justice from the Settlement Officers, while they have every reason to pray to be saved from the Civil Courts! And then imagine the checks against any alleged arbitrary proceedings of Settlement Officers. There is the Survey and Settlement Superintendent, who is always chary of the good name of his Department; there is the Survey and Settlement Commissioner, who has eagle eyes to detect the least inequality of assessment which may take something out of the pockets of Government; and there is finally the head of the Presidency, who is always ready to receive petitions, so long as they conform to the rules, to send them down for report to the local officers, and to act upon these reports. Every one of them is interested in justifying the existence of the huge Department by showing that its operations cost much less than the probable increase of income expected from them. Every one of them has to write his Administration Report and to prove therein the success of his administration. Unfortunately administrative success does not consist in showing that the previous calculations miscarried and that the revised settlements were a mistake because more expensive than lucrative. No one likes to be called imprudent or short-sighted. Who then can blame the authorities for taking care to spin the yarn of figures per day which go to form the weft of an Administration Report? Their demands upon the patience of the peasantry are of course very few—they are so little exigent, and of course whatever evils they were in the habit of inflicting are all now redressed by the prompt measures of Revenue officers. Only somehow or other, curious to say, the old cry comes to us again and again "save us from these unsettling settlements." If there is any truth in this cry it follows that one of the main causes of the landholders' poverty in Sind still subsists in full force. We have already shown that the natural circumstances of the province cannot be altered though they can be palliated by an elastic and easily intelligible system of remissions. We understand there is no such system in Sind; at any rate it is not at all well-worked. Thus two out of the four causes enumerated by Mr. Hope still continue to work woe to the landed interest, the Manager's proteges included, and the Sind Encumbered Estates Act is powerless to remedy them.

Advocates the free employment of Native undergraduates in the Agricultural Department in connection with the new system of agricultural statistics introduced by the Government of India.

The same in an article headed "The new system of agricultural statistics" observes:—A very important and much called for reform in connection with the Department of Agriculture has just been taken in hand by the local Government. It is another of the series of practical suggestions which originated with the Famine Commission. It must be remembered that it is no light task to organize an efficient staff for the purpose, if absolute veracity, which is the chief object aimed at by the Supreme Government, is to be attained in the record of agricultural statistics of every description. At present the work is left in the hands of illiterate village kárkúns and other underlings, who are so overburdened with work that it is foolish to expect anything like accurate returns from them. It is on the information collected in the first instance by such ignorant clerks that the district officers depend. The district officers have again in their turn so much to do, as has already been declared in State Resolutions, that they cannot afford to verify the data submitted by these subordinates. Want of such verification leads to mischievous litigation, and private individuals are at times deprived of their ancestral property. There is not a little of chicanery and falsification of records going on in all parts of the empire. The Government of Bombay has now made a beginning in right earnest. The first district where the Agricultural Department is to work in this connection is Dhárwár. Our suggestion to Government is that it should avail itself of young University undergraduates for the subordinate staff, who will prove a more intelligent and efficient class than illiterate and corrupt kárkúns. The undergraduate class await such employment, and we strongly urge their claims. By this means Government will be preparing a new class of men for subordinate State employment in the most important branch connected with Imperial revenue. The more numerous the elements composing such a class the greater will be the indirect benefits to the State. Native agency is absolutely needed. It must supersede European agency which absorbs a large amount of State expenditure in connection with land revenue and survey assessments. Otherwise we have no hope of the reforms being carried out in the spirit of the Resolution of the Government of India. The ends in view will be best attained if Government prescribe the employment of Native undergraduate agency now abundantly available in every part of the empire on reasonable salaries. It must be remembered that after all the selection of the subordinate staff ultimately rests with the district officer. We know from painful experience that in seven cases out of ten he is either so careless about the agency he employs or otherwise so completely in the hands of some favourite who thinks only of feathering his own nest or so abuses his master's patronage that the State and the rayats have to suffer between them. In the Survey Department especially abuses have gone on for years, which no Government has had the moral courage to put a stop to. Again there are Europeans everywhere provided for—men quite unqualified, who only know how to lord it over the crouching and corrupt menial and draw the maximum of salary with the minimum of work. Superior Native graduates might very well supersede these Europeans. An Imperial Resolution that shall minutely prescribe the sort of agency which ought to be employed in the future in reference to agricultural reforms is therefore necessary. Whether the Survey Department, which has so long fattened like locusts on the fruits of agricultural industry, will ever be extinguished is problematical. Off and on it has been hanging like a huge millstone over the State. It is a dread spectre haunting the rayat day and night. And we doubt if at the end of another quarter of a century this official cormorant, which has preyed upon the people for upwards of thirty years, will loosen its hold on the unhappy victims.

Points out the necessity of treating the cultivating classes of Khándesh with leniency in the matter of the realization of the second instalment of land revenue.

The Khándesh Vaibhav (37) of the 25th January points out the necessity of Government showing some consideration to the cultivators of Khándesh in the matter of the realization of the second instalment of land revenue. During the current year the cultivators have not been able to reap a harvest sufficient for their maintenance and they were enabled to meet the demand for the first instalment by the sale proceeds of the scanty crops of cotton and sesamum. They are thus left without any means of satisfying the Government demand. Government officers however have been resorting to coercive processes for the realization of revenue, and this circumstance has given rise to several complaints among the agricultural classes.

Approves of the abolition of the Government Central Book Depôt in Bombay.

The Yajdán Parast (127) of the 27th January is thankful to Government for abolishing the Government Central Book Depôt in Bombay. The existence of the Depôt was a stumbling block in the way of private enterprise, and its abolition will be beneficial to the public. The step taken by the authorities is in unison with the policy recently adopted by the Government of India in the matter of giving encouragement to private industry and ought to be hailed with joy.

Does not approve of the contract given to Messrs. Thacker & Co. for the supply of books.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 30th January says that the main object of the authorities in closing Government Book Depôts was the development of a spirit of enterprise among Natives, and this object is made clear by the general tenor of the policy of Lord Ripon's Government in connection with the encouragement of Native manufactures. If this be so, why should the contract of supplying books have been entrusted to the European firm of Messrs. Thacker & Co.? Do the Native booksellers of Bombay charge higher rates than Messrs. Thacker & Co.? It is not known whether the Director of Public Instruction has effected this arrangement with or without the sanction of Government. In our opinion it was absolutely necessary to call for tenders by public advertisement from all booksellers. We suggest that Government should make the necessary enquiries in the matter and devise means for carrying out the primary and praiseworthy object of Lord Ripon's policy above indicated. [The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 28th January expresses similar sentiments and invites the attention of the Director of Public Instruction to the inconvenience that has been caused to school boys by the closing of the shop attached to the Government Central Book Depôt for the retail sale of books].

Some suggestions in connection with the abolition of the Government Central Book Depôt.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 31st January says that though the contract given to Messrs. Thacker & Co., Limited, is somewhat objectionable, no opinion can be expressed about it as long as the terms of the contract are not made public. However, the contractors should be required to sell books at a fixed price, and a list of such prices should be exhibited in their shop, or other booksellers might be permitted to sell the same books and thus competition be allowed free-play. The Hitechchhu then points out the advisability of the speedy abolition of district depôts, and says that booksellers should be permitted to publish the books required for use. It will be sufficient to ask the Translator's Department to see that they are not badly and incorrectly printed. It should also be arranged that the booksellers could print new Government publications, the proof-sheets of which should be submitted for approval to the Translator's Department. The booksellers should be made to pay for the increased cost of the Translator's Office and other necessary expenditure. By so doing Government will free itself from trouble and encourage private enterprise. It is to be hoped that Government will give speedy attention to the matter. [The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 28th January also expresses an opinion that the prices of all school-books should be fixed.]

Complains of the dearness of the justice dispensed in British Courts of Law.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 28th January says:—Four years ago we drew the attention of our readers to the fact that Government were making a trade, as it were, of the administration of justice. We then showed that the High Court of this Presidency was yielding to Government surplus profits, and suggested the desirability of making justice cheaper than it was. The discreditable anomaly has not been remedied however, and people can form no idea of what resort to a Court of Justice means. In the mofussil it means reduction to poverty; in Bombay it means absolute ruin. One has only to file a suit and the sad truth ere long dawns upon him; he finds that slowly but surely the cost of litigation involves him in misery once for all. It has come to this—that the Courts exist for the profession, and the Government and the suitors are at the mercy of both. Sir Richard Garth, the present Chief Justice of Bengal, has not a day too soon opened the eyes of Government to what is doubtless an administrative scandal sanctioned by the Legislature. In a minute lucidly written His Lordship says that "in any other country such a burden upon suitors would be considered intolerable. In England there has always existed a very strong feeling against the revenue making anything like a profit out of a tax of this kind. We have seen that a plaintiff suing in the mofussil for a debt of Rs. 10,000 would have to pay an institution fee of Rs. 475, and if in the same suit an appeal were instituted the appellant would have to pay another stamp fee of Rs. 475 before he could file his appeal." The practice in the High Court on the Original Side is no less ruinous, though Sir Richard thinks it is. It is true that parties have not to pay as heavily for stamps as they have to do in the mofussil, but they are borne down in a different direction by counsels' and solicitors' fees, which are at times quite out of proportion to the amount of the claims. One or two instances of this kind came recently before Mr. Justice Scott, of the Bombay High Court, when His Lordship could not help feeling surprised at them. When will the Legislature provide a remedy for this evil?

Says that the work of the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Ahmedabad is carried on very slowly.

The Ahmedabad Samáchár (85) of the 30th January says that the work of the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Ahmedabad is at present carried on very slowly. Since the time Government refused to extend his term of office, and asked him to continue to perform his duties till further orders, Mr. Mukundrái has not heard contested cases. As he only takes up short and urgent cases the people are obliged to put up with postponements and suffer inconvenience.

Expresses an opinion that Assistant Collectors in the Dhárwár District should be ordered to stay during the rains within their charges instead of going to Dhárwár.

The Chháva (21) of the 13th January, but received on the 28th idem, says that the circumstances that have led to the transfer of Mr. Richardson to Násik give rise to feelings of surprise and regret at the inconsistent nature of the ideas of justice and sympathy entertained by the rulers. It is said that the transfer of Mr. Richardson has been effected at the instance of the First Assistant Collector of Násik, who pointed out the inconvenience caused to certain European accused by the absence of a European Magistrate at the head-quarters. But has similar sympathy been ever shown to Natives? Great inconvenience is caused to the people of the Dhárwár District by the absence in the mofussil of Magistrates empowered to commit cases to the Sessions Court, and the parties concerned are even in the height of the rainy season compelled to make long and inconvenient journeys. It is meet therefore that orders should be issued directing Assistant Collectors to stop at places within their charges during the rains instead of running down to Dhárwár.

Points out the necessity of establishing a Branch Post Office at Redi in the Vengurla Táluka of the Ratnágiri District.

A correspondent of the Satyă Shodhak (60) of the 27th January complains of the inconvenience caused to the inhabitants of Redi in the Vengurla Táluka of the Ratnágiri District by the absence of a post office, and invites the attention of the authorities of the Postal Department to the necessity of establishing a Branch Post Office to be managed by the schoolmaster at that place. A calculation of the postal receipts of the village will convince the authorities of the justice of such a step.

A postal complaint.

The Ahmedabad Samáchár (85) of the 30th January says that though the mail from Wadhwán is received at the Ahmedabad Post Office by 8 P.M., letters are delivered at about 11 A.M. the next day along with those received from Bombay. The people loudly complain of this delay. It will be better if the letters received with the Wadhwán mail are distributed the next morning, if not on the same night.

Gives some information about a highway-robber of Káthiáwár.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 27th January states that Muwar Saghwáni of Mália, with a following of ten mounted and armed highwaymen, has been committing highway robberies in Káthiáwár for some time past. After alluding to some of the crimes committed by this highwayman, the correspondent describes the encounter that recently occurred between the robber and Major Humfrey, and observes that the daring robber is a resident of Mália and visits the place at night. Sometimes he stops there for several days together, and it is very strange that the Thánadár and other authorities of the place should not have apprehended him. He will not be secured unless some special arrangements are made for his capture. It is said that this highwayman and his companions have been receiving good support from some persons residing in the Viramgám Táluka, and Major Humfrey ought to make due enquiries in this direction. If he does so he will very likely be able to capture the robber and his companions.

Complains that hawkers of provisions are prevented by the police of Bombay from visiting certain quarters of the city.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the 27th January complains that the police of Bombay has prohibited the hawkers of raw provisions of daily consumption from frequenting one or two quarters of the city on the plea that thefts are frequently committed in those parts. The prohibition has caused inconvenience to the residents of those quarters and loss to the hawkers. The police ought not to prevent any dealer from frequenting any quarters because thefts are of common occurrence there. The attention of the Commissioner of Police is requested to this complaint.

Local Self-government.

Disapproves of the Bombay Local Boards Bill and says that it is the result of the struggle for the retention of absolute and illimitable power so long enjoyed by the Indian bureaucracy.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 27th January, in an article headed "The Debate on Bombay Local Self-government Bills," condemns the proposed constitution of the Local Boards as likely to end in failure and says:—We have already observed that the structure of the Bills is founded on "belief" and "hypothesis" supported by the opinion of the only unofficial body once unjustly discredited by Government itself. Of course the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha is entitled to its own views; and if it suits the present purposes of Government to accept them, we have no right to complain. But what we protest against is the declaration that the views so represented are "representative" of those of the people of the entire Presidency. This is a statement which cannot be allowed to pass by without a challenge. We have shown that the author of the Bills has simply made a show of having "considered" really representative opinions. In reality he has passed the Bills on a foregone conclusion. Mr. Peile having resolutely determined that he would draw the line somewhere, it was useless for the people to oppose that determination, however loud their protests, and however reasonable and convincing their remonstrances. He has throughout assumed the attitude of non possumus. By all means have "cautious progress." But the attempt of Government seems to make this "cautious progress" practically impossible, except in name. It is with this device that we are dissatisfied, because it cuts at the very root of "cautious progress." We make bold to say that it will only end in retrogression of a discouraging character. We are not at all advocating "more precipitate action" with which Mr. Peile has tried to frighten his Government and all people outside. For our part we fear there is nothing like fair dealing. This is in short the charge we lay at the door of the local Government. The Acts as at present framed are merely to please the Imperial Government. But we dare say that Government will detect the fallacies. The Supreme Government may refer back the Bills for the modifications which the memorials from almost all representative bodies have prominently pointed out touching the necessity of allowing a preponderating elective element. The East India Association must lose no time in memorialising the Supreme Government on the subject. It is better to insist on this preponderance. Then alone will the popular demand be reasonably satisfied. There will be nothing in it to endanger "cautious progress." But the authorities need not at present assume that Local Boards with a majority of the elective element will work unsuccessfully when all representative bodies assert the fact of business capacity and intelligence to be found in rural and urban districts. Our rulers must put the people in a position to prove their assertion. Instead of that they try to stand by their own foregone conclusion which can never stand the test of facts. It is a conclusion which in reality opposes the "cautious" advance of popular self-government. There is nothing like finality in the present legislation, which is ostensibly experimental. So we do not see the pertinence of Mr. Peile's observation that the law when once passed will permit of no retreat. Are we to be told that the paternal Government is powerless to repeal an Act and enact it anew just as it suits its purpose? We thought this was the process which the Provincial Government was never slow in adopting. How many measures have been tinkered, amended, repealed and re-enacted during the last 15 years? Surely if the Local Self-government Bills, after being framed on popular basis, are found to be unworkable or unsuccessful, there will be nothing wrong in a retreat; and the people in that contingency may not object, because Government in such an event will be in a position to justify the course. But such a contingency is not at all likely to arise. The struggle is for the retention of absolute and illimitable power in local administration so long enjoyed by the Indian bureaucracy. To have framed the Bills on the basis of the popular demand so as to make them really successful in practice would have been tantamount to a surrender at discretion. Our bureaucrats know too well that in proportion to the success of local self-government will be the reduction of the illimitable power they have hitherto wielded. The hitch is there. The theory of "caution" is purely imaginary.

Suggestions in connection with the District Municipal Act Amendment Bill.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 27th January, in an article headed "Our last appeal to the Legislature," places in juxtaposition what it calls the defects in the District Municipal Act Amendment Bill and the necessary amendments to be introduced in it and after justifying its distrust in the executive officers of Government, remarks :—It is as clear as anything can be that municipal bodies, whether town or city, have advanced a good deal more than Local Fund Committees, and unless most of the members of the Legislative Council are ready to eat their own words, they cannot say that local and urban boards are on the same level. Is it then just that the latter should be lowered down to the status of the former? Then we come to the important point of classification. What can the Legislature say to the provisions of section 27 of the principal Act, which so far as we can see has not been repealed. The section made a distinction between the different municipal towns and can the Legislature undertake to say that the ten towns, where Chapter V. of the principal Act has been in operation for the last ten years, cannot claim to stand at the top of the list of 164 municipal towns? Can His Excellency and his colleagues in the Council say that the 14 towns which have been recently raised to the status of city municipalities have been so raised by a haphazard selection and that there was nothing before Government to guide it in that selection. All this points to one fact that different towns are differently civilized and that they must be classified under different groups. As publicly declared by His Excellency there are at least 12 towns in the Presidency where non-official gentlemen who can well be made presidents have been found. If so, why not provide in the Act that these first class municipalities will have non-official presidents elected by themselves? Let the 14 towns have vice-presidents and let the Collector continue to preside in smaller towns. It appears from the proceedings that official and non-official opinions are at one on these points; what harm is there then in providing the same in the Act? We may state that every one of our suggestions has been, so far as we can see, approved of, but the only difference that yet remains is that we want what Government promises us as of right, while Government wants to give it to us as of grace. We beg to draw the attention of the honourable member in charge of the Bill to the report of the Select Committee on the Bengal Municipal Bill. The Bengal Bill, as originally framed, was, we may say, a twin of the Bombay Bill, but the Select Committee has so modified it that it meets the requirements of the people and the wishes of Government. Mr. Peile will do well to read what he himself has said, and then we have no doubt, unless he wishes to contradict himself, that he will readily yield on the points we urge. In conclusion we hope that the non-official members in the Council will not disappoint us as they did in the case of the other Bill. If there are any engagements or pleasure tours let them be postponed; if there are other businesses, let them be sacrificed; for if the Municipal Bill passes in its present form the scheme of local self-government will have been introduced with a vengeance, and Lord Ripon will probably have to see municipalities involved in deep debts, people oppressed and civilianism rampant throughout the Presidency. [The Gujaráti (1) of the same date advises the Bombay Government to frame the District Municipal Act Amendment Bill on the lines of the Bengal Bill.]

Legislation.—The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

Approves of the enactment of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill.

In alluding to the passing of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, the Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 27th January observes that the Bill in its final shape is a sure gain to the country. Seeing through what difficulties the measure had to be carried without prejudice to the diginity of Government, the rights of the Natives and the peace of the country, all concerned ought to be thankful for the result arrived at. There is certainly cause for congratulation for all on what may be termed the happy termination of an affair which at one time threatened to prove the occasion of interminable race-antagonism in the country, and of serious inconvenience, not to say great anxiety, to the authorities. The Native members of the Council appear to believe that the concordat is not fair to their countrymen and right in principle, and hence the discussion raised by the Mahárája of Darbhanga and vigorously carried on by the Honourable Mr. Kristodas Pal. Without meaning to uphold the course they pursued it might be observed that the Native members of the Council were not without some seeming excuse for what they did. They, in common with a large section of the Natives of Bengal, really felt somewhat disappointed at the turn which the Bill took within the last two months. It would, however, have been much better if they had refrained from putting forth the amendment. Both the Honourable Mr. Ilbert and His Excellency the Viceroy, though willing listeners to the suggestions for extending the right of trial by jury to Natives, were distinctly of opinion from the first that no conclusive arguments or reasons had been produced showing the necessity for the adoption of the suggestion. They also emphatically declared themselves averse to the adoption of such a radical suggestion without previously consulting the local Governments; and all things considered, they were right in their views. The representatives of Natives might therefore as well have accepted the concordat with a good grace and left the new Act to run its natural course. But since they chose to act upon their own views, the Viceroy and his colleagues had no alternative but to oppose the amendment put forth by the Mahárája of Darbhanga, and to controvert the arguments urged in support of the same. The line of action taken by the Viceroy, the Honourable Mr. Ilbert and the Honourable Mr. Hunter was perfectly justifiable. [The Yajdán Parast (127) and the Gujaráti (101) of the same date, and the Bombay Samáchár (91) and the Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 28th January express similar sentiments. The Káside Mumbai (109) of the 30th January approves of the passing of the Bill and praises the conduct of the Viceroy in the matter. It disapproves of the conduct of those Natives who express dissatisfaction with the enactment. The Europeans have conquered the country with the sword and the beginning of the curtailment of the right enjoyed by them for centuries past has been made with great wisdom. The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 31st January is satisfied with the enactment and wishes that a Bill for the extension of the system of trial by jury to Natives were speedily introduced into the Supreme Legislative Council. The Native public is anxious that such a Bill should be brought before the Legislative Council during the Viceroyalty of Lord Ripon, in whose justice and impartiality it has full confidence].

Education.

Requests the Principal of the Grant Medical College to contradict the false reports that the Pársi male students have grossly insulted the female students of the College.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 3rd February observes that false reports about the Pársi male students of the Grant Medical College shamefully insulting the female students of the same College are being extensively circulated in some Anglo-Indian newspapers and most of the Vernacular newspapers of this Presidency. It is also reported that the Professors of the College have refused to teach certain subjects of the curriculum to the female students. The Principal of the College ought to contradict these false reports in the interests of the Pársi students and the College itself. [The Yajdán Parast (127) of the 27th January recommends that the boys who may be guilty of such want of discipline should at once be dismissed from the College.]

Remarks in connection with the system of grant-in-aid pursued by the Bombay Educational Department.

Referring to the report that His Excellency the Governor of Bombay has consented to preside at the ceremoney for the distribution of prizes in the new English School, Poona, the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 31st January says:—Now that we are on the eve of the inauguration of an important departure in the educational policy of Government towards private enterprise, consequent upon the recommendations of the Indian Education Commission of 1882-83, we trust that the time is not distant when this worthy Institution will have a helping hand extended to it by Government in the shape of grants-in-aid. Such an attitude of cordiality towards this institution will immensely increase its utility, and will moreover directly encourage the establishment of similarly conducted institutions throughout the Presidency generally, but more especially in the more advanced districts.

The educational policy of Government must be placed on a firm and sound basis before such a result can be realized. Now that so eminent an educational authority as the Honourable Mr. J. B. Peile, C.S.I., whose administration of the Educational Department as the Director of Public Instruction was most successful and was characterized by an attitude of cordiality towards private enterprise, is controlling the educational policy of the Government of Bombay, we have great hopes that he will place the policy on a firm and sound basis. That policy has not hitherto been placed on a sound and firm basis, and moreover it has never had a fair trial. We have no doubt that if Mr. Chatfield, who succeeded Mr. Peile as Director of Public Instruction, had loyally persevered in the policy first inaugurated by his predecessor, we should have had by this time several flourishing private schools in the leading towns of this Presidency. And it is our past experience which leads us to insist upon the educational policy of Government being placed on a firm and sound basis instead of being left to be regulated at the sweet pleasure and caprice of the head of the Department for the time being. In short we await with considerable impatience the orders of the Government of India upon the voluminous report of the Indian Education Commission, without which the local Governments cannot be expected to take any action in the matter.

Railways.

Prefers several complaints against the G. I. P. Railway Company.

A correspondent of the Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the 27th January complains that there are two booking offices at a long distance from each other at the Bori Bandar Station of the G. I. P. Railway for issuing third class tickets, and the tickets are given on some occasions from one office and on other occasions from the other office. One booking office is situated at the end of the station buildings on the market side, and the other office at the other end of the building, namely, on the Bázár Gate side. No timely intimation is given to third class passengers from which of the two offices tickets will be issued, and many of them are obliged to run with haste just about the hour of the departure of the train from one booking office to the other in order to secure tickets in time, and several passengers cannot get them early enough to allow of their availing themselves of the departing train and are left behind. There seems no good reason why third class tickets should not be issued from both the booking offices at the same time or why timely intimation should not be given from which of them tickets will be given on particular occasions. At the Bori Bandar and Byculla Stations Native passengers are not allowed to take their servants with their luggage to the platforms nor can the passengers get the station porters to carry the same, and they are therefore obliged to carry their luggage themselves. European passengers, however, are freely allowed to enjoy the indulgence. Great difficulty is experienced in getting time tables and the one posted at the station is placed so high that it cannot be read without something to stand upon. The Bori Bandar Station is lighted insufficiently. The Kaiser requests the Railway authorities to remove the cause of the above-mentioned grievances, and observes that these and other complaints against the railway may be traced to the invidious distinction made by the Railway authorities between Europeans and Natives. The European lads employed at the larger railway stations treat the Native passengers with incivility; the third class carriages are as bad as waggons for carrying live stock; and no seats are provided at the Bori Bandar Station for passengers waiting for tickets.

Municipalities.

Asks the Postal Department to get the Municipality of Bombay to correct the wrong names of streets and to preserve one set of numbers upon houses.

After expressing gratitude to the Postal Department for making arrangements for the sorting of letters in the railway trains for the different quarters of Bombay and for requesting the public to mention in the address the number of the house and the name of the lane, the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 29th January observes that of late the Municipality has changed the names of several lanes and put new numbers on houses without removing the old ones, and this circumstance will stand in the way of the public giving their precise addresses and of the postmen finding them out soon. For instance the lane near the Mumbádevi tank is named Kálbádevi Street, and sign-boards with the name Lohárchál are put up from near the market corner to the Trinity Church near Dhobi Taláv. Many more instances of wrong names given by the Municipality may be quoted. New numbers are given to houses without removing the old numbers, and there being considerable difference between the two, people find themselves at a loss to understand which is the correct number. For the convenience of the public and the Postal Department the Municipality ought to remove old numbers and correct the mistakes made in naming streets by writing on the street-boards the names by which they are widely known. The Postal Department ought to move the Corporation to do this work as early as possible.

Native States.

Suggests the establishment of a special court for dealing with the complaints of Native Chiefs.

The Shiváji (63) of the 25th January, in an article headed "Our Political Department," observes that though it cannot be denied that the concession of adoption has afforded considerable relief to the Chiefs of Native principalities, still there are other matters in which their position is yet troublesome and which, if not well attended to, will not fail to bring about a repetition of the critical times of 1857. A consideration of the relations of Political officers with Native Chiefs cannot but force a conviction that the latter enjoy no happiness. Our Native Chiefs are no better than life-convicts, and it is the present administration of the Political Department that is responsible for such a state of things. It is not good to annoy the Chiefs in this fashion. We do not think such a policy will prove beneficial to Government. On the contrary there is great danger in the disaffection of Native Chiefs, and it is therefore most advisable that steps should be taken to keep them satisfied. Their patience is sorely tried in all cases in which they seek redress from the wrongful acts of Political officers, and generally their efforts are not crowned with success, which is but natural, considering that redress has to be sought in the quarter from which the wrongs proceed. Some measures must therefore be devised by which redress can be vouchsafed to these Chiefs. Government should constitute a tribunal consisting of the leading Native Chiefs, who should be associated with by competent Judges selected by Government. This tribunal should deal with all complaints from Native States and its decisions should be binding on Government. Such a step will leave no cause for complaint to the Native States and remove all possibility of a misunderstanding regarding the apparently unjust treatment of a Native Chief. Without affecting prejudicially the interests of the paramount power it will confer a mighty boon on the Native States, and they will be spared the humiliation which at present it is their frequent misfortune to suffer. Their loyalty to the British Crown will be more firm and the foundations of the British rule will receive an accession of strength. The tribunal above described should also have cognizance of questions of adoption on failure of heirs of the body. It is true that such an arrangement will deprive the officials of a portion of their authority and gain, but considering that it will in the long run be advantageous to the interests of Government officers with sincere motives should not disregard it.

Condemns the acceptance of provisions, &c., by Political officers, their guests and dependents from Native Chiefs.

In noticing the prohibition regarding the acceptance of presents from Native Chiefs by Government officers which has been recently repeated by the Government of the Panjáb, the Rást Goftár (115) of the 27th January does not understand why this order should be confined to that province alone. This civilized method of receiving bribes has considerably overgrown in Native States. Not only in the Panjáb but in most other parts of this country do the Political Agents or Residents and their guests and dependents get from Native Chiefs provisions, including sheep, carriages and horses, and other conveniences, and consequently they enjoy themselves as much as the Indian Viceroy does, and save their salaries. This is a heavy tax on the Native States from which they ought to be relieved.

Alleged disappearance of a large amount of money from the Morvi State Treasury during the administration of the State by Mr. Fernandez.

The Gujaráti (101) of the 27th January observes that after his return from England the Thákor of Morvi found that about sixty thousand rupees had disappeared from his treasury while Mr. Fernandez was in charge of the administration of the State, and has therefore imprisoned all those who acted under the orders of the late Administrator. Mr. Fernandez wasted some money while he was administering the State. He was prohibited from building a palace, and yet he built one, and in doing this work a large amount of money has been misappropriated. The Thákor ought to try his best to detect the fraud. On the appointment of Mr. Fernandez to the Morvi State the Gujaráti remarked that as he had acquired a bad name elsewhere it was not proper to entrust him with the administration of the State. He has contracted the bad habit of doing all things on his own responsibility, and this evil practice made him act as he did at Morvi. If the Bombay Government cares for the good name of its officials and wishes to uphold what it said before, it should call upon the Thákor and Mr. Fernandez for an explanation about the alleged mismanagement of the Morvi State funds. If it will not do this the people will be confirmed in their belief that Government overlooked and whitewashed Mr. Fernandez's mismanagement of the Ahmedabad Municipality. [The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 31st January quotes this article from the Gujaráti and requests Government to investigate the matter and publish the result of such investigation. It also requests Government to publish the papers connected with the enquiry held into the charges brought against Mr. Fernandez in connection with his administration of the local municipality.]

Affairs at Cambay.

The Deshi Mitră (96) of the 31st January says that Aga Mahomed Nabikhán, Diván of Cambay, is a good man but he appears to be very timid. Instead of transporting Mahádev Prajárám, Champakrám Dulbharám and others who took a leading part in the recent disturbances at Cambay, the Diván has given these rebels employment under the State. This is very strange on the part of the Diván, who appears to be wanting in experience. He gave Champakrám, the Mukhtyár of those who created the disturbances, the post of Faujdár of the town of Tárápur. Will not Mr. Spry the Political Agent and the Bombay Government interfere in such an anarchical state of things ?

RAOJI BHAWANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
9th February 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Abolition of the Government Central Book Depôt in Bombay:
  Approval of the — 9
  Disapproval of the contract given to Messrs. Thacker and Co. for the supply of books after the — 9
  Some suggestions in connection with the — 10
Agriculture: Advocacy of the free employment of Native undergraduates in the Department of — in connection with the new system of agricultural statistics introduced by the Government of India ... 8
Assistant Collectors in the Dhárwár District: Expression of opinion that — should be ordered to stay during the rains within their charges instead of going to Dhárwár 11
Disestablishment of the Christian Church in India: Necessity of the — 5
Forest Act of 1878: Complaint regarding the stringency of the provisions of the — 6
Indian Legislative Councils: Necessity of reforming the present constitution of the— 4
Judicial matters:
  Complaint regarding the dearness of the justice dispensed in British Courts of Law... 10
  Statement that the work of the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Ahmedabad is carried on very slowly 10
Land Revenue: Necessity of treating the cultivating classes of Khándesh with leniency in the matter of the realization of the second instalment of — 9
Police:
  Complaint regarding hawkers of provisions being prevented by the — of Bombay from visiting certain quarters of the city ... 11
  Some information about a highway robber of Káthiáwár ... 11
Postal matters:
  A postal complaint... 11
  Necessity of establishing a Branch Post Office at Redi in the Vengurla Táluka of the Ratnágiri District 11
Sind Encumbered Estates Act: Expression of opinion that the — has not improved the condition of the landholders in Sind 7
Stability of the British rule: Expression of opinion that the — depends on the contentment of Natives 3

Part II.—Local Self-government—

Bombay Local Boards Bill: Disapproval of the — and expression of opinion that it is the result of the struggle for the retention of absolute and illimitable power so long enjoyed by the Indian bureaucracy 12
District Municipal Act Amendment Bill: Suggestions in connection with the — 13

Part III.—Legislation—

Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill: Approval of the enactment of the— 13

Part IV.—Education—

Grant Medical College: Request to the Principal of the — to contradict the false reports that the Pársi male students have grossly insulted the female students of the College 14
System of grants-in-aid pursued by the Bombay Educational Department: Remarks in connection with the — 14

Part V.—Railways—

G. I. P. Railway Company: Complaints against the — 15

Page.

Part VI.—Municipalities—

Bombay: Request to the Postal Department to get the Municipality of—to correct the wrong names of streets and to preserve one set of numbers for houses 15

Part VII.—Native States—

Acceptance of provisions, &c., by Political officers, their guests and dependents from Native Chiefs: Condemnation of the— 16
Cambay: Affairs at— 17
Establishment of a special court for dealing with the complaints of Native Chiefs: Suggestion for the— 16
Morvi: Alleged disappearance of a large sum of money from the—State Treasury during the administration of the State by Mr. Fernandez... 17

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 9th February 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 1080

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Monopoly of high offices in India enjoyed by Europeans and its sad consequences.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 4th February quotes an extract from a "Ladies' Letter" from London which appeared in the weekly edition of the Times of India for the 19th January 1884, alluding to a complaint about the monopoly of high offices enjoyed by the German relatives of the Royal Family, and observing that England for the English might well be the cry of that country and especially of those who after long years of service find some raw youth promoted over their heads, and remarks:—Now the great reflection which the careful perusal of the foregoing extract suggests naturally is that if such be the feelings of Englishmen or at least of a large section of them in consequence of some half a dozen or dozen lucrative appointments in the British service being held by foreigners or "these German relatives of our Royalties," what must be the feeling of the Natives of India when they see not a portion but all the lucrative appointments in their country monopolized by foreigners? There is certainly no dearth of intelligence, ability and integrity in the country, as can be easily seen from the fact that some of our biggest Native States have prospered and are prospering to this day under the enlightened administration of purely Native rulers. In British India there is no field for a Salar Jang, a Dinkar Ráo, a Rangacharlu, a Madhavráo, a Sheshaya Shástri and a host of others that can be named. In this respect the present condition of India is quite without a parallel in the annals of history. This is not the first time that India has been under foreign yoke. The Mogals held sway over this country for centuries, but there is this to be said in favour of that foreign rule—a thing which, as every one is aware, cannot be said of the present foreign rule,—that the higher, lucrative and responsible offices under Government were not then, as now, exclusively monopolized by the members of the dominant race. The higher appointments in the Civil and Military Services are now exclusively reserved for the members of the dominant race; even the appointments in the Uncovenanted Civil Service, which is understood to be exclusively reserved for the Natives of the country, are given away to such members of the dominant race as fail to enter the Covenanted Service. The relatives and friends of those high in authority, who fail to enter the sacred ranks of the Civil or other Covenanted Services, are pitch-forked into the highly-paid posts in the lower service. In short it may be said without the slightest exaggeration that India is now a rich preserve for Englishmen of all ranks, no matter though their qualifications and abilities are in no way more marked than those of their Native competitors. It is even well-known that under some plausible plea or other many appointments are created for the benefit of Europeans. We shall name an instance in point. It is not considered sufficient now if the head of the District Police is a European officer; he must needs have one or two probationers under him to qualify themselves as his Assistants. Such probationers, who are of course Europeans, have been recently appointed to almost every district. In short the feeling of indignation in the country at the multiplication of offices held by Europeans is growing more and more intense; and the people are gradually realizing to themselves the inherent injustice and hardship of the procedure adopted in disposing of the higher appointments in the gift of the Government of the country. If half a dozen or a dozen appointments held by foreigners in England, or, to speak more accurately, by "these German relatives of our Royalties" are "almost enough to make one radical," what should be the feelings, we earnestly ask, of the Natives of India when they find themselves religiously excluded from every lucrative and important office and when they see that India exists for all practical purposes for Englishmen and not for themselves? And when concessions to native aspirations and ambition are grudgingly made, and when no pains are spared to deprive the concession of more than half its value, the people are expected to be thankful for these small mercies and to remain ever contented and loyal to their heart's core!!! Those people who raise the cry of "England for the English," and we must here observe that we thoroughly sympathise with them, though the evil complained of appears to us to be so small as to be almost insignificant, ought certainly to be able to realize to themselves in a fair degree the feelings of the Natives of India. The magnitude of the evil from which we suffer is infinitely greater than that of the evil which has found an expression in the letter in the Times of India from which we have given an extract. If Englishmen had suffered in this respect to half the extent to which we in India suffer, we have no doubt that they would have all turned "radical" and would have made one successful effort to put a stop to the evil. It is only the Indian population that can put up with such an evil generation after generation. But patient and enduring as the Indian population undoubtedly and admittedly is, there is a limit to everything human, and we should not be true to ourselves and to our duty if we did not warn our rulers that unless they mend their ways in due time the inevitable result must follow—a result the magnitude of which will startle the world, and before which the grandest revolution that the world has ever seen will sink into insignificance. What the end of the British rule will be no one can foretell, but we agree with Sir Arthur Hobhouse in holding that its end will be as unprecedented as its beginning has been.

Advises the abolition of the License-tax and the re-imposition of the import duties on European cotton goods.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 9th February observes that the License-tax ought to be abolished and the import duties on European cotton goods re-imposed. By this policy an annual income of 75 lákhs of rupees will be earned and the burden of taxation which sits heavily on the poor people will be shifted to the shoulders of rich persons. The License-tax does not fall upon barristers, medical practitioners and other professional persons who earn large incomes, while its incidence presses heavily on the poor people. The Income-tax is an equitable levy, but Government do not impose it through fear that the rich would loudly complain against its imposition. The import duties on European cotton goods ought to be re-imposed because their abolition has not benefited the cotton manufacturers of Manchester to any appreciable extent. There has been an increase in the consumption of cotton cloth to the extent of five per cent., but this has not been the result of the abolition of the duties. The general prosperity of the country has been the cause of that increase. There has been no fall in the prices of goods since the duties were abolished. The rich people in particular use Manchester cotton cloth and they can afford to bear an increase in prices that would be necessitated by the re-imposition of the import duties. For these reasons Government ought to abolish the License-tax and re-impose the import duties.

Demands the publication of the reports made by Mr. Woodward and Dr. Pollen on the subject of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and of all the papers connected with the re-settlement of land revenue in the Málvan Táluka of the Ratnágiri Collectorate.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 3rd February, in an article headed "Wanted greater publicity for important State records," says:—The teachings of the statesmanship of the west, combined with the progress of education, must supplant the reign of bureaucracy in India by means of a new political faith that shall beat in unison with the aspirations of the whole nation. The dawn of such a new faith is already visible. The policy inaugurated by Lord Ripon's administration has in many ways given a new life to the country at large. In this connection therefore the greater the amount of healthy criticism, for which the bureaucrat has great horror, which is brought into play on the numerous burning problems of the day, especially as to land and finance, which are the very backbone of the Indian empire, the more rapid will be our material and political progress. It is therefore a matter of satisfaction to observe the interest that the Bengal Rent Bill, the Agricultural Loans Bill and similar measures for the amelioration of the condition of the impoverished Indian peasantry have called forth. But these topics must be discussed more fully and intelligently by the light of official information. And there is the hitch. Bureaucracy holds orthodox views on these subjects, and inasmuch as the general public holds opinions at variance with those views, it is chary of giving publicity to important records. The official class has set up certain idols in reference to the question of land revenue in all its ramifications. And when some official, who for the time being happens to be in the confidence of his Government, acts as the high priest at the shrine of a particular idol he has set up, and to which he clings with fond devotion, it is very hard to knock down his special deity. If an attempt is made, the high priest tries to prop it up and extol its virtues based on mystic rites, which are known only to himself and a few who share his belief. There are two recent instances of such secrecy. It is said that Mr. Woodward has made a report in which he has tried to prove that the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is being practically found to be all that its author had wished—that in fact all the misgivings expressed by the opponents of the measure, notably by Mr. Justice West, have been nowhere. Now outside critics demand the publication of Mr. Woodward's report. Is it forthcoming? If not, why not? If the idol raised by Mr. Hope is perfect, then why not allow the public to offer it willing homage? But that is not to be. In the name of the people we demand the publication not only of Mr. Woodward's report, but the previous reports of Dr. Pollen. Facts have only shown that the views held by Mr. Justice West are gaining strength. Again, for some time past a contemporary has been directing public attention to the question of revenue survey assessments, and notably to the rough-riding of Sir Charles Wood's despatch of 1864, wherein it is laid down as a cardinal principle for the guidance of Governments that in no case shall assessments be valued at more than 50 per cent. of the net yield of a holding. The local Government has just published in the official Gazette the fact of the settlement of 58 villages of the Málvan Táluka of the Ratnágiri Collectorate under the Bombay Land Revenue Code. The Bombay Gazette promptly suggested the desirability of placing in the Editors' Room all papers connected with that settlement. As so much has been and is being daily written on the subject of the tyrannical revenue survey, our contemporary is quite in order when he observes that the publication of these papers will help materially to remove many doubts and uncertainties in the matter. We entirely agree in and support the suggestion that the Government should comply with so reasonable a request. The interests of the agriculturist and those of the public at large demand that the history of the settlement of the Málvan Táluka be made known forthwith. Will Government satisfy the public in both the matters referred to above? Or will they ignore the demand for fear of criticism? Whatever their wishes, we must again impress on them the value of publicity. Nothing can be gained by secrecy. It is much to be wished that our provincial rulers became alive to the manifest advantages of giving free publicity to reports and papers on important matters affecting the interests of their subjects. All records of important State transactions should be published in time, while public interest may be still fresh or while public criticism is actively directed thereto. What is the use of burying such papers in the secret bureaus of the Secretariat and allowing the public the barest glimpse at times, when all their interest or freshness is lost and when they retain their value only for polemical or historical purposes? How much criticism of the wrong sort, based on inaccurate or insufficient data, might be avoided by publicists, if timely and authentic information were given to them! How much greater trust might be established in the popular mind by such a procedure! How needless apprehensions of mischief from this or that arrangement might be allayed! But the provincial bureaucracy is never at ease unless when attempting mystification. It cannot bear the light of intelligent criticism. Short-sighted mortals! As if the interests of the State were not identical with those of the people! It is here that the root of the error lies.

Says that the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is a miserable failure.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 3rd February writes:—It is over a year since Mr Woodward was appointed to make certain inquiries in connection with the working of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. We then suggested that a regular commission should be appointed for the task; but owing to its wonted apathy and culpable neglect in listening to public voice the Government of Bombay cared not to act upon the suggestion, and now we learn that Mr. Woodward has submitted his report to Government—a report which contains nothing new. We pointed out two years ago what the report of Mr. Woodward points out to-day. And what is it? It is nothing else than that the Act is a miserable failure. It was never expected that a measure so antagonistic to the principles of political economy as the Relief Act, a measure based upon unsound principles, a measure that was launched with the view of concealing the real source of the fountain of misery; a measure that was drafted to draw away public attention from real hard facts; a measure by the aid of which Government wanted to throw off its own responsibilities on to the shoulders of the sávkárs; it was never expected, we repeat, that such a mischievous measure could end in anything but failure. The conduct of the Government that initiated the measure, passed and enforced it, is grossly censurable, if not culpable. Government, we believe, is too well aware that if it allowed the reports to see the light it would only draw deserved abuse upon itself. It has not therefore the courage to lift the veil of secrecy so skilfully thrown over the matter. We challenge Government to publish the papers in order that the public may see if what we have said about the Act is not true to the letter. [Several Vernacular papers express similar sentiments.]

The treatment accorded to prisoners confined in Indian jails.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 7th February says that though prisoners in Indian jails are now better treated than formerly their condition is deplorable. They are not well clothed; in fact they are kept half-naked. A piece of cloth passed round their loins, a short waistcoat and a cap form their full dress. They have neither shoes to cover their feet nor anything to protect them from the rains and the heat of the sun, while working hard in open places. The result of this sort of treatment is that many either die in the jails or leave them in a state verging on death. It is true that there is a doctor in the jail to attend them, that medicines and food are given them; but all this is simply nominal. If the doctor is kind-hearted, he personally attends to the supply of medicine and food to sick prisoners; otherwise he simply comes, stays awhile and walks away. The same is generally the case with persons nominated by Government to visit jails. The articles of food supplied to the prisoners are those of the cheapest kind and those which the public reject as useless. Though great caution is necessary in the selection of articles of food for the prisoners, the contractors manage to pass inferior articles. A distinction is also observed between the treatment of European and Native prisoners. While the former get rations of the value of annas 8 and more, the poor Native prisoners only get rations of the value of one anna and a half. When Government itself has thus kept up a distinction between the treatment of European and Native prisoners, what sympathy can be expected from jailors and other European officers? Indian jails are places of either torture or death when compared with those of the civilized countries of Europe. The Hitechchhu then quotes a description of the treatment and supply of food given to prisoners confined in the jails of France and remarks that kindness is very effectual in the reformation of criminals. Moreover, the system of allowing a prisoner on his liberation one-third of the earnings of his period of confinement is very good. It prevents commission of crime by enabling the liberated prisoner to maintain himself. In India no sooner are offenders admitted into jails than they are made to dig, grind, carry weights and do such other work, while in France they are given that work only which they know. This proves beneficial both to the Government and the prisoners. It is to be hoped that the Government of Lord Ripon will give its attention to the improvement of the condition of prisoners confined in Indian jails.

Says that Government should receive back court-fee stamps and paper that are not required by the purchasers or should make their transfer to others legal.

The Dhárwár Vritt (24) of the 31st January complains that great inconvenience is caused to the public by the new court-fee adhesive stamps and papers. It not unfrequently happens that parties purchasing court-fee stamps or paper cannot get back their money if they subsequently find that all need for the stamps has ceased. The stamps and paper are not transferable because they bear the names of the purchasers. This state of things has resulted in a loss to many people who are in possession of stamps and paper that are of no use to them. In these circumstances it is necessary that Government should either issue orders for receiving back such stamps and paper or should make their transfer legal.

The benefit of the Insolvency Act should be granted very sparingly.

The Yajdán Parast (127) of the 3rd February observes that now-a-days numbers of insolvent persons easily pass through the Insolvency Court. Numerous petty dealers and persons with small incomes incur heavy debts and obtain the benefit of the Insolvency Act very easily. Several insolvents make their appearance in the court more than once and succeed in getting rid of their liabilities without trouble. They get interim orders and final discharge without much delay, and therefore do not scruple to incur heavy debts over and over again. This ought not to be the case. Strict enquiries ought to be made into the causes of the insolvency of the parties concerned, and interim orders and final discharges should be sparingly dealt out. Unless this is done trade in petty loans threatens to come to a standstill.

Complains of the unreliable nature of the health reports submitted by Táluka officers.

The Dhárwár Vritt (24) of the 3rd January says that there is reason to believe that the health reports periodically submitted by Táluka officers are not reliable. The report for Dhárwár contains no mention of diseases and epidemics, while small-pox is raging in the town. This shows that the officers submit their reports without taking the pains to know the real state of things. It will be better if the Collector attends to this matter and warns the Mámlatdárs to be careful.

Complains that prices of English school-books have risen since the abolition of the retail shops established in connection with the Government Central Book Depôt.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 4th February observes that before the closing of the retail shops established in connection with the Government Central Book Depôt English educational works could be had at the rate of eight annas per shilling; but that the same works are now sold by private booksellers at the rate of ten to twelve annas per shilling, while no retail sales are transacted at the depôt. The Branch Book Depôts at Surat and Poona have been closed and this has given rise to a complaint that no school-books are to be had in villages and minor towns. If the school boys in villages order books from the head-quarters of their respective districts they will have to pay one-fourth or one-half as much again as the original prices. Sometimes old school-books are discarded and school boys are required to buy new editions. Hitherto in such a contingency old school-books were periodically sold by auction at the Government Book Depôt. But how will the private booksellers hereafter get rid of their stock of rejected school-books?

Suggestions to Mr. Keyser, Collector of Kolába, in the matter of his appeal to the public of Bombay for pecuniary help to the inhabitants of the village of Morbe in the Mángaon Táluka.

The Arunodayă (14) of the 3rd February, while approving of the action taken by Mr. Keyser, Acting Collector of Kolába, in having addressed a letter to the Bombay Gazette, appealing to the generosity of the public of Bombay for aid to the inhabitants of the village of Morbe in the Mángaon Táluka of the Kolába District, who have recently been reduced to a destitute condition on account of their houses with all the belongings having been destroyed by fire, observes that it would have been better if Mr. Keyser had given in his letter some additional information which is necessary for a proper consideration of its subject-matter. Has Mr. Keyser asked for the balance that remains to the credit of the Surat Relief Fund, and if so, with what result? If the License-tax has been imposed with the view of making provision for famine times, why cannot this contingency fall under that category? It is indeed very desirable that the public should contribute towards the cost of rebuilding the houses of those that are destitute, but Mr. Keyser should have stated in his letter if Government are willing to make free grants of timber for the purpose and at the same time to contribute a sum equal to that contributed by the public. He should also have stated that Government are willing to remit the dues on account of land revenue for one year. The generosity displayed by Mr. Keyser in this matter gives reason to suppose that he has already secured the concessions above noticed from Government, but it being unfair to keep these particulars from the public, it is to be hoped that he will see his way to giving them publicity. [The Suryodayă (27) of the 4th February advises Government to make the concessions noticed above.]

Makes certain remarks upon the trial of Charles Pattison of Surat for an attempt to murder.

In alluding to the trial of Charles Pattison of Surat for an attempt to murder, held at the last Criminal Sessions of the Bombay High Court, the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 8th February observes that the accused being a European the jury that was empanelled to try him was composed of six Europeans and three Natives, and thus it was almost wholly a European jury. Under these circumstances it would have been better if all the three Natives had been Hindus instead of one of them being a Mahomedan, another a Jew and the third a Portuguese, in order that they might have better understood the feelings of the complainant and his witnesses, who were mostly Hindus. Again the Mahomedan juror was allowed to continue to sit on the jury even after it was discovered that he did not know English well enough to understand the evidence taken in the case; it would have been better if he had been allowed to make room for a juror who knew English well. The counsel for the defence alluded to the Ilbert Bill and attempted to rouse the feelings of the European jurors. The Judge ought to have prohibited him from expressing such objectionable sentiments, as such indiscretion is likely to lead to evil consequences. [The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 8th and 9th February also expresses similar sentiments. The Akhbáre Sodágar (86) of the 7th and 8th February says that the decision given by Justice Scott in this case has completely dissatisfied the Native public. It is much to be regretted that a Judge who is remarkable for his patience and justice should have so acted in the present case. This is by no means a pleasant augury of the future results of trials in the mofussil by juries consisting of a majority of Europeans.]

Complains of the heaviness of the price at which liquor is sold by the Abkári farmer at Surat.

The Surat Akhbár (83) of the 4th February says that the local consumers of liquor complain of its heavy price and bad quality. The Abkári farmer charges Rs. 3-4-0 for one gallon of liquor, out of which he has to pay Rs. 2 as duty. This duty is very heavy. Poor people die of want of liquor in their old age. Dr. Blaney expressed himself to that effect at the time of the inquest he held over the dead body of Mr. Rána, the late Shroff of the Bank of Bombay. It is said that Government has sanctioned the prices at which liquor is at present sold by the Abkári farmer. This statement cannot be relied upon. One gallon of liquor costs the Abkári farmer annas 8, while he sells it to the old and helpless poor, who use it as medicine, at two and a half times its cost. Has Government sanctioned such a contract? The dearness of liquor is a desirable thing; but its present dearness is discouraging its use for medical purposes and as food for the old.

Says that the postmen of Bombay ought to be allowed the concession of pension and sick leave.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 3rd February, in referring to the issue of reply post-cards and the arrangements for the earlier delivery of letters than hitherto from the beginning of the current month, remarks:—But all this means additional trouble to officers and servants, most of all to postmen. We believe the work of the delivery and other peons must have quadrupled in the course of the last few years. It is therefore with sincere regret that we find from a printed copy of a correspondence between the Honourable Mr. Mandlik, the champion of the postmen of Bombay, and the Postal authorities that these humble but most useful servants of the State have not been allowed the right of pension and sick leave which they have so long been claiming. The men are poorly paid and hardworked. It is clear that Lord Cranbrook, some time Secretary of State for India, dismissed their memorial under a misapprehension of facts. The local authorities, who cannot but feel for their men, must press the matter on the attention of the Director-General of Post Offices, and that officer, whose sympathies are known to be active, will earn the gratitude of the peons by laying the matter before Lord Ripon. We are anxious to see justice done to this most deserving class of Her Majesty's servants.

Says that instructions in the Vernaculars should be printed on all postal cards directing that the name and address only should be written on their face.

The Pratod (54) of the 4th February says that postal cards bear a direction on their face that the name and address only should be written on that side. This instruction is however in English and not in any Vernacular, and great inconvenience is caused to the public by their ignorance thereof. It is therefore necessary that similar instructions in the Vernaculars of the Presidency should be printed on all postal cards.

Complains of an increase in the number of thefts at Bandora.

In alluding to an attempt at burglary recently made in a bungalow near St. Mary's Church at Bandora, the Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the 3rd February observes that considering the large population of the town there are very few policemen to guard the life and property of the inhabitants. It is said that there are only three policemen to guard this large place! Either the authorities ought to increase the number of policemen with due regard to the safety of the people, or the town should be made over to the Bombay police, as thefts and burglaries have become very common of late.

Prevalence of thefts in Sátára.

The Bodh Sudhákar (19) of the 6th February complains of the extensive prevalence of thefts in the town of Sátára, and requests the attention of the authorities concerned to the necessity of taking effective measures for restoring peace among the people. The Sudhákar attributes this state of things to the insufficiency of the police force for the requirements of the city and to the meagre remuneration enjoyed by the members of that force, and requests Government to remove all cause for complaint.

Complains of the increase in the number of thefts committed in the town of Ahmednagar.

The Nyáyă Sindhu (46) of the 4th February says that thefts are being fearlessly committed in the town of Ahmednagar. The police however do not deserve blame for this state of things. The present police force is insufficient for the requirements of the town and needs to be augmented. It is also necessary that a detective agency should be employed. Want of occupation has driven many people to gambling and similar walks of life and they cannot but resort to thieving practices. [The Jagadádarsh (31) of the 3rd February expresses similar sentiments.]

Local Self-government.

Remarks in connection with the reports of the Select Committee on the Bombay Local Self-government Bills.

Referring to the reports of the Select Committee of the Bombay Legislative Council, appointed to consider and report upon the two Bombay Local Self-government Bills, the Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha (4) for January 1884 says:—While we are glad to note that the Select Committee has seen its way to accept several of the suggestions that we ventured to put forth in these pages, we must confess to some feeling of disappointment which the perusal of the reports in question has caused. The principal reason of this disappointment is that the Select Committee has not seen its way to accept some of those suggestions which the spirit pervading the speech of the Honourable Mover of the Bills of the 25th August last required the Select Committee to accept, and that undue stress has been laid on the discretion and good will of the Executive Government and its officers. Nobody is more aware than we are that in certain matters we must leave much to the discretion of the Executive Government and that the cordial good will of the Executive Government and its officers is a sine quâ non to the eventual success of the grand experiment about to be inaugurated. But though we are fully aware of all this, we cannot reconcile ourselves to leaving to the discretion and good will of the Executive Government those matters which it is essentially necessary should be definitively guaranteed by the Legislature in the body of the law. We hold that nothing that the Legislature can now definitively and firmly secure without endangering the public interests should be left to the discretion of the Executive Government; otherwise there would be no use in having the Legislature as opposed to the Executive. We are quite willing to abide by the dictum laid down by Sir James Fergusson in the concluding portion of his speech of the 25th August last that every principle which the public interests require to be withheld as a concession in the direction of popular liberties should be withheld, but we must say that that dictum has a corollary which also must be accepted as true, that corollary being that every concession in the direction of the extension of popular liberties, which can be made without endangering the public interests in any manner, or which, in other words, the very public interests demand, should on no account whatever be withheld from the people. We need hardly say that we agree with much that the Select Committee has said in the preliminary portion of its report on the Bombay Local Boards Bill regarding the constitution portion of the two Bills. But there are three points in the constitution portion of the two Bills wherein we do not at all agree with the Select Committee. These points relate to (1) the elective minimum in the District Local Boards, (2) the absence of an express provision in the body of the law that salaried servants of Government shall not be eligible as vice-presidents of local boards and municipalities, and the absence of an equally express provision by which the position of the elected vice-president can be assured instead of being made dependent, as it is now proposed, on the mere sweet will and pleasure of the official president, and (3) the absence of an express provision in the body of the municipal law that municipalities fulfilling certain well-defined tests shall have the right of electing their own president. In all these three respects the Bills have been left very defective so far as their constitution portion is concerned; and our surprise at this omission is all the greater because, so far as one can judge of the intention of Government from the opening speech of the Honourable Mover, their views correspond remarkably with our own. As regards the elective minimum in the District Local Boards the Select Committee has not only confessed its inability to advance a single argument against entertaining the proposal of the Sárvajanik Sabha, but is on the contrary forced to admit that the arguments of the Sabha are "not without weight"; and yet we are told that there is nothing to the contrary in the Bill, and that the question must not be argued as though the Bill laid down both the minimum and the maximum proportion of elective members. We are further told that it would depend upon the popular representatives to justify the raising of their proportion, and that when practical experience recommended such a course, the Executive Government would readily do so. We think that the Legislature is not bound to pay heed to any considerations other than those of public interest and safety, and that it should concede the larger minimum without hesitation, if there are reasonable grounds to suppose and hope that such a concession would not lead to an abuse of power. As regards the first argument of the Select Committee that there was nothing to the contrary in the Bill, we are not disposed to attach any weight to it. One might as well say that there was "nothing to the contrary" in the existing District Municipal Act of 1873, if the Government of Bombay had been disposed to concede the elective franchise to the leading municipal towns even prior to March 1882. But as a matter of fact we know that the Bombay Government was dead opposed to move an inch in the matter even in the case of the most advanced towns. It is within our knowledge that in 1880 the District authorities at Poona were fully prepared to entertain favourably a proposal that one-third of the nominated Municipal Commissioners should be allowed to be elected by the rate-payers, but as the Divisional Commissioner and the authorities at the head-quarters were not disposed to entertain any proposal howsoever reasonable, the negotiations fell through. The truth is that though there was "nothing to the contrary" in the Municipal Act, the Bombay Government, as is quite natural in the case of all bureaucracies, was quite loath to make a single advance in the direction of the extension of popular liberties. The Government of India appear to have taken a due note of this fact, for we find that that Government in their letter No. 1521, dated October 4, 1882, reviewing the Bombay Resolution of September 19, administered a deservedly sharp rebuke to the Government of Bombay for its gross neglect to have availed itself of the discretionary power vested in it by law in the case at least of advanced towns. Nobody who knows the true history of the whole movement can for a moment question the absolute propriety and justice of the rebuke thus administered by the Government of India to the Bombay Government. The initiative taken by the Government of India perforce compelled the Bombay Government to elevate fourteen towns to the rank of City Municipalities and to extend the elective franchise to all the old and new City Municipalities. Accordingly in March and April last elections took place in twenty-three towns, and the result of this first experiment has been officially admitted to be highly successful and encouraging. The circumstance shows very clearly that the apprehensions of the Bombay Government which found expression in its letter of October 20th, 1881, were quite unfounded and were due simply to unworthy and mean prejudice. In short our past experience and the lessons it teaches us render us naturally very anxious to secure now by law every concession in the direction of popular liberties which reason and conscience tell us ought to be secured without delay. For the further development and extension of popular liberties we must of course depend upon the good sense and discretion of the Executive Government for the obvious reason that we must be firm in the ground already secure before we make a further advance. Having said this much we shall now proceed to show how reason and argument are in favour of the Legislature accepting the proposal made by the Sárvajanik Sabha. The principal argument advanced by the Select Committee for declining to raise the elective minimum in the case of the Táluka Local Boards and of Municipalities also is that nothing can now be predicted as to the quality of the elected members, because the electoral body which is proposed to be formed in both the cases will be constituted on a wide and liberal franchise. We fully accept the force of this argument but fail to see how it can apply in the case of the District Local Boards. It is undoubtedly true that something definite can always be predicted of the quality of members elected by nominated or sufficiently restricted constituencies, like those to be formed under the North West-Provinces Local Boards Act, or, to come nearer home, like those formed as the Justices of the Peace in Bombay. It is then clear that if any electoral body or constituency is wholly or partly formed of Government nominees the proportion of members to be elected by such a constituency must be larger than the proportion which would be deemed advisable in the other case, where the Government has no voice as to whether a particular man will have a vote or not, so long as that man satisfies the tests definitively laid down in the body of the law. Now it is a matter of surprise to us that the Select Committee of the Council did not take due note of the striking fact that the electoral body of a District Local Board differs vastly in character from the electoral body of a Táluka Local Board, and partakes very largely of the character of a nominated constituency like the Justices of the Peace in Bombay. That there is such a distinction between the two electoral bodies cannot for a moment be questioned, and it cannot therefore be reasonably contended that the same degree of uncertainty in the matter of predicting the quality of the elective members exists in the case of the District as in the case of the Táluka Local Boards. Every Táluka Local Board in a district and every municipality whose population is 18,000 and above is entitled by section 7 of the Bill to send a delegate to the District Local Board, both the Táluka Board and the Municipality referred to being composed of two equal component parts, viz., the elective members and the Government nominees. Thus the Government nominees in the Táluka Board and the Municipality will not only have an influential voice in selecting their delegate to the District Board but will moreover be themselves eligible as delegates. Under such circumstances we think that the Legislature is bound to sanction a corresponding distinction between the proportions of elective members in the two classes of local boards, we mean a distinction corresponding with the markedly distinctive character of the electoral bodies of the two classes of local boards. We may fairly and reasonably assume that the representative members elected by the Táluka Local Boards and by the Municipal towns containing a population of 18,000 souls and above will be "the cream of the cream," and that when these representative members are supplemented by Government nominees in the proportion of one nominee for every three or even two representative delegates, they can be safely relied upon to intelligently exercise the large powers proposed to be vested in them as a body. We do not think that by sanctioning our proposal the Legislature will be running any risk whatever of imperilling the public interests. So far as we can judge of the principle underlying the two Bills, that principle, in the words of Sir James Fergusson, appears to be that the Government "desires to go as far as it safely could in the first place, and to leave ample room for expansion in the future." If our surmise regarding what constitutes the principle of the two Bills be correct,—and it is upon such a principle that we have hitherto acted in making our proposals—that principle requires that our foregoing proposal about the elective minimum in the District Local Boards should be accepted by the Legislature. As nothing will reconcile us to anything being overdone by the Legislature which may be calculated to endanger the success of the grand reform about to be inaugurated, so nothing will reconcile us to anything being underdone by that body; in other words we cannot consent to anything being deferred to a remote date, which both reason and conscience tell us ought to be done to-day. That the Government will not have a majority on its side in the District Boards, if our proposal be sanctioned, is a consideration with which the Legislature has no concern whatever, any more than the consideration that by fixing the elective minimum at one-half only in the Táluka Boards and the Municipal Boards the Legislature will almost invariably secure a majority to Government need concern the people. The only consideration or principle upon which both the people and the Government must act in this matter is what degree of liberty can be safely given without in any way endangering the interests of the public; and applying this test to the problem we are now considering, we do not feel the slightest hesitation in expressing our firm belief that we can safely fix the elective minimum at least at two-thirds, if not three-fourths, in the case of the District Boards. We now come to the consideration of the second point which has reference to the appointment and position of vice-presidents. What we have to say about this point applies with equal force to the third point also, and we shall accordingly consider the two points together. The Select Committee has not accepted the recommendations of the Sárvajanik Sabha on these points, but we search in vain in its reports for a statement of its views on the subject. Now it is clear that the recommendations of the Sárvajanik Sabha and the intentions of Government, as propounded in Mr. Peile's speech, are perfectly identical. If so, why this hesitation to give the sanction of the Legislature to definite provisions in the body of the law? The very object of making a provision that every board, whether urban or rural, shall elect its own vice-president whenever its president may happen to be an official, is to gradually train non-official gentlemen under proper guidance to efficiently perform the duties of president. If so, why not expressly provide that salaried servants of Government shall not be eligible as vice-presidents? When the framers of any legislative measures mean a thing definitely, we think it is their duty, as far as possible, to express their meaning in precise language, so that there may be harmony between the letter and the spirit of the law. It is quite notorious that when the original intentions of the promoters of any legislative measure are forgotten, the tendency always is to stick to the letter of the law and to ignore its spirit. Again it was officially admitted by Mr. Peile on behalf of the Bombay Government that "the reservations which must at present be made in the case of the rural boards and the Municipal Boards of the smaller towns are not equally necessary in the case of the larger municipalities," which "already exercise a larger measure of independence, and it is to be expected that there will be found in them non-official gentlemen with the necessary capacity and public spirit to undertake the office of president at once." After such a creditably frank admission as this is it not really surprising that the Select Committee should have declined to entertain the proposal of the Sárvajanik Sabha, the acceptance of which would have been in complete accord with the convictions of Government as shown above? We have not the slightest doubt that Sir James Fergusson's Government means what it says, and that it will act accordingly, but what guarantee is there that unless the concession in question is by law secured irrevocably to certain classes of municipalities, a subsequent administration will not ignore the original intentions of the promoters of the whole policy by virtue of the unduly large discretion left to it by law? It really gives us extreme pain to have to prominently refer to unpleasant facts of the past times, but the Select Committee of the Council is to blame for this by reason of its unaccountable reluctance to give legislative sanction to what are understood to be the intentions of Government and the wishes of the people.

Sir James Fergusson and his honourable colleagues in the Bombay Government must remember, and we tell them so frankly, that, having had such a painful experience in the past, the people of this Presidency are not disposed to consent to any arrangement which contemplates leaving to the discretion of the Executive Government anything that can now be safely guaranteed by the Legislature in the body of the law itself. It augurs well for the future success of the reform about to be inaugurated that on all main points there exists a happy harmony and agreement between the official and non-official views, and our regret is therefore all the greater that there should be any disposition whatever on behalf of Government to hesitate to emphasize those points of agreement by legislative sanction. This demand of the public is perfectly reasonable and legitimate, and we appeal confidently to the good sense of Sir James Fergusson and his Government to say whether the people of this Presidency will not have a just grievance if his Government fails to give due legislative shape to its promises. The very fact that there exists a complete accord between the official and non-official views renders it superfluous on our part to adduce any further arguments in support of the legitimate and moderate aspirations of the people of this Presidency. We now come to another point to which the same observations apply with equal force. That point relates to the recommendation made by the Sárvajanik Sabha and other exponents of Native public opinion that an express provision be made in both the Bills requiring the Executive Government to publish in a draft form, before finally issuing them, all rules and regulations which the several sections in both the Bills empower it to make, so that the public may have an opportunity to express an opinion on them in due course. The orders of the Government of India in the Legislative Department, embodied in the two memorable circulars of 1882 and 1883, require that this demand be complied with; and what is more to the purpose, we find that in all legislative measures introduced into, and passed by, the Viceregal Legislative Council with a view to give effect to the views of the Government of India on local self-government in various provinces, an express provision of precisely the same character has been invariably inserted. And though the Bombay Government has already expressed its concurrence in the orders of the Government of India in the Legislative Department referred to above, the Select Committee of the Council did not accept the suggestion of the Sabha and other bodies. What enhances our surprise is that even the Honourable Mr. Badrudin Tayabji, who is fully aware of the great importance of the suggestion, and who in common with the Honourable Ráo Sáheb Vishvanáth Náráyan Mandlik, C.S.I., laid due and prominent stress on this point on the occasion of the debate on the 25th August last, does not appear to have strongly pressed the point upon the attention of his colleagues. We fail to see any reason whatever for "relying upon Government not passing any rules under either of the Bills without first publishing the drafts and inviting the fullest public criticism, specially from the members of the Council," when the most satisfactory way to finally dispose of the important question would be to make an express provision to that effect. Mr. Badrudin ought to have known well that the misappropriation of the local funds during the past six years and more towards objects not contemplated by the framers of Act No. III of 1869 is wholly attributable to the unrestricted power which section 12 of that Act conferred on the Governor in Council, we mean the power of making rules and regulations for giving effect to the policy of that Act. There is an innocence about Mr. Badrudin's confidence in the good intentions of subsequent administrations that is truly naive. Who requires to be told that if a provision like the one we are now contending for had been embodied in the Act of 1869, it would not have been possible for Sir Richard Temple to have brought about such a change of policy as he actually accomplished? Possibly, bold and daring as he was, he would have shrunk from initiating his disastrous policy. We must not also ignore the teaching of that old and sagacious proverb, which we find to be common to all countries, and which cautions you against implicitly trusting your princes (rulers). If you have such an implicit confidence in your rulers, why insist upon express provisions being made in the law for the elective minimum, the qualifications of voters and of members; in short what necessity is there for having a Legislature as opposed to the Executive? The truth is that undue confidence in your rulers is neither healthy nor desirable in the interests of either, and is positively demoralizing to them and yourselves, and accordingly the efforts of the Legislature in all countries and in all ages are always directed towards circumscribing the sphere of those cases in which you cannot help relying upon the good faith and good intentions of your rulers without detriment to the public interests. An Executive Government, if its powers are not jealously circumscribed within the narrowest limits consistent with the public interests, is as liable to exceed those powers as any urban or rural board, if not even more liable, and, holding such a firm belief as we do, we must strongly enter our emphatic protest against the existing state of things being continued, when other provinces, whose Governments are not less competent than ours to exercise such powers, have already accommodated themselves to the altered state of circumstances. We hope Mr. Badrudin will kindly reconsider the question and urge it strongly upon the attention of his colleagues. It will not be out of place if we refer here to an instance furnished by the amended Bills, showing how little reliance can be placed in the non-shifting character of Government discretion. It was originally declared by Government in the Resolution of September 1882 that "females should not be disqualified to vote merely on account of their sex, if qualified to vote as coming within classes 5, 6, 7 or 8, but will not be qualified to sit as Municipal Commissioners." As regards the rural elections the same Resolution in another paragraph laid down that "the disqualifications alike for voters and members should be the same mutatis mutandis as in the case of Municipal voters and Commissioners." Consistently with this executive declaration section 19 of the Local Boards Bill and section 21 of the Municipal Bill were originally drafted, and the Select Committee has amended those sections so as to disqualify females as voters simply on account of their sex, and you search in vain for a statement of the reasons in the Select Committee's reports, which may afford you a clue to understand what could have induced the Honourable Member in charge of the Bills to disqualify females as a class, when it was originally proposed not to so disqualify them. Now suppose such a question had been relegated to executive rules, then what would have happened? One administration may think that females ought not to be disqualified on account of their sex and ought to be given the franchise along with males, while another administration may think differently and act accordingly. The executive discretion, it will be thus seen, is liable to vary with the changes in the personnel of the Executive,—a state of things which is far from desirable; and hence the necessity of checking this tendency in the Executive by providing that the rules which it may be empowered to make shall always be published in a draft form with a view to elicit public criticism prior to their final promulgation.

Legislation.

Disapproves of the Partition Bill now before the Supreme Legislative Council.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 3rd February observes:—The Partition Bill is before the Supreme Legislative Council for disposal. So far as we can understand the provisions of the Bill, we are inclined to say that the Bill will prejudice the interests of more persons than it will serve. It appears at first sight that so long as a pie of revenue has not been increased or lessened, the Bill cannot justly be condemned; but the reader should go a little deeper and he will find that the Bráhmans and Rajputs, whom the Bill directly affects, will ere long be put to such an immense trouble and inconvenience that they will sooner like to give up their five acres of land than consent to submit to the Partition Act. The Act will no doubt lighten the labour of a few Government officials, but this of itself can never justify the passing of an Act. The Legislature has primarily to guard the interests of the governed and then those of the Executive Government; the raiyat therefore ought never to be inconvenienced for the convenience of the latter. It is such little things that work mischief most, and it is therefore necessary that Government should be very careful in such matters.

Education.

Says that the high school and college departments of the Gujarát College ought to be made independent of each other.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 7th February, in referring to the permission granted to the Gujarát College to teach up to the standard of the First B.A. Examination, says that permission ought to have been granted to teach up to the final B.A. Examination, because the poor students of Gujarát would thereby have been saved the trouble and expense of residing in Bombay. At the most the services of one or two extra professors would have been necessary. The professors cannot be blamed if they are unable to pay as much attention to the college as is necessary, for they are also required to do the work of teachers in the school attached to it. The high school department ought to be made a separate department altogether, and the professors ought as far as possible to be made to devote themselves exclusively to the training of the college students. This arrangement will prove advantageous to the college as well as the school department, and the students will have no cause for complaint. If some of the college professors have not sufficient work in the college, they may be required to teach the students in the school for a certain number of hours. It is to be hoped that Mr. Chatfield will speedily attend to this matter.

Says that Vernaculars should be taught up to the sixth standard in all Second Grade Anglo-Vernacular schools.

A correspondent of the A'ryávart (15) of the 2nd February complains that the increase that has been effected by Government in the number of Second Grade Anglo-Vernacular schools, though apparently very beneficial, has proved detrimental to the cause of Vernacular education. These Second Grade schools generally teach the Vernacular up to the fourth standard, but such boys as are unable to pay the extra fees charged for teaching English are obliged to abandon their course. Moreover those that can afford to pay the additional fees are taught English up to the second standard and even then they are not admitted into the next standard classes in the high schools, and therefore do not fare better than those that leave the course. Again their insufficient knowledge of their Vernacular does not admit of their appearing for the Public Service Examination. In these circumstances it is extremely desirable that Government should direct that the Vernaculars should be taught up to the sixth standard in all Second Grade Anglo-Vernacular schools irrespective of any instruction that may be given in the English language.

Railways.

Comments in connection with the policy pursued by Government in the matter of the construction of railways in India.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 3rd February says:—It is a matter for regret that as yet there is no settled policy in regard to the construction of railways in India. Up to the present time various systems have been in vogue, viz., systems of guarantee, private enterprise and State construction. Each one has its own disadvantages. Government cannot undertake to construct railways as it has no State funds sufficient for the purpose. Even if it should undertake such works and try to stand upon its own feeble legs, as has been done in a few cases, failure in the undertaking is certain. The State can under no circumstances afford to lay out from its annual income a capital of Rs. 50,000 per mile to construct a railway. Private enterprise also cannot be much depended upon in this respect. Our country has admittedly been reduced to utter poverty and no amount of private effort, howsoever strongly backed by co-operation, can raise large funds for the construction of railways. Besides our people are utterly ignorant of the principle of co-operation. This is the case with the wealthy classes; while the few that know the principle well and can also preach it to their rich fellow-countrymen are nothing better than inmates of a pauper asylum. The system of guarantee has been found to work well, but then the country suffers much thereby. A large amount is raised for investment by a company of foreign capitalists and Government guarantees payment of interest on the capital. Under this system it is useless to expect economy and good management, for Government cannot with due decency exercise any control over a private company. But the worst feature of it is that profits being carried to a foreign country our land is drained of its own resources. Under these circumstances it would be better for Government to borrow money from foreign capitalists and proceed on its own responsibility to construct railways in India. Our Government has ample credit in England and can therefore borrow at a lower rate of interest than others. English capitalists also can very conveniently and readily offer to invest their money at such a rate, as money is available in England to a large extent. For the satisfaction of such of the interested people as maintain that to undertake such works as railways is no part of the proper function of Government, we may cite the authority of John Stuart Mill. Although we hold and recommend that the State should as proprietor undertake to construct railways in India, we cannot insist upon its taking up the supervision of their working. Local effort must be encouraged to a certain extent and it would be well to employ the agency of private companies under a lease for a term of years for working lines owned by the State. Great economy and convenience would be secured by placing a certain length of railways under one management. There is another way of conducting the management of State railways, viz., by entrusting it to public boards or trusts; and we are sure the plan will work most successfully. We therefore earnestly hope that the objectionable system of guaranteeing interest on capital which honourably passes under the false name of aided private enterprise will be put a stop to, and the healthier one we have recommended adopted in future. The people have implicit faith in the present noble Viceroy and would confidently rely on his disinterested efforts in the direction pointed out for the amelioration of the general status of this country. We may also suggest that along with the settlement of the future railway policy His Excellency Lord Ripon will settle once for all the question of the railway gauge. Now that the hitherto all-absorbing Jurisdiction Bill has been finally disposed of the Viceroy will have no objection to take this question in hand as being almost the next in importance, and dispose of it before the expiry of his term of office.

Recommends the construction of wooden bridges at the Church Gate and Parel stations of the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

In alluding to the reported death of a Pársi boy by being run over by an engine while crossing the line at the Parel station of the B. B. & C. I Railway, the Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the 3rd February observes that considering the large passenger traffic at the Church Gate and the Parel stations of this line, wooden bridges should be constructed at these stations for the safety of the passengers. At the Church Gate station a large number of persons employed in the Government and other offices in the Fort and school-boys have to cross the line to avail themselves of the down trains, and a large number of operatives of the B. B. & C. I. and the G. I. P. Railway Companies' workshops and mill-labourers use the Parel station, and in their interests there ought to be wooden bridges at those stations.

Native States.

Affairs at Janjira.

The Kesari (36) of the 5th February learns from a correspondent that the State of Janjira is running into debt owing to the inability of the present Kárbhári to exercise as much economy in expenditure as is desirable, and that the subjects of the State have become greatly dissatisfied on account of the importation of numerous foreigners into the State. The Nawáb being young is led by his Kárbhári and Munshi. The surplus which the late Kárbhári Mr. Shirgaonkar was enabled to secure by a judicious and economic administration has disappeared and the State has been under the necessity of borrowing money from bankers in Bombay. If this report be true, it is to be hoped that the Kárbhári will mend his ways.

Berár Affairs.

Points out the necessity of taking steps to give a training in agricultural science to the cultivating classes in Berár.

The Pramod Sindhu (53) of the 4th February says that although the present condition of the agricultural classes in Berár is better than that of those classes in the Bombay Presidency, still it is possible that after the lapse of a few years the former will be reduced to the level of the latter. It is therefore necessary that both the Government and the people should take due precautions to prevent the occurrence of such a state of things. There are three ways of meeting the difficulty, but it is very doubtful whether all of them can be fully taken advantage of. To make the Government assessments unchangeable, to prescribe effective checks to population, and to improve the soil by manure—are the questions that deserve consideration. If Government are inclined to view the matter favourably, all enhancement of assessments may come to a close. But the question of over-population does not stand any chance of being considered in all its practical bearings so long as the customs regarding early marriage remain in full force. The question of improvement of the soil is however one which calls for the urgent attention of Government and the people, and it is but fair that the authorities in Berár should earnestly set about the task of securing for the agricultural classes a training in the science of agriculture. This is the most favourable time when steps in this direction stand a fair chance of bringing about good results. Agricultural classes should be established at Akola and Amráoti and model farms should be started.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
16th February 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Complaint regarding the heaviness of the price at which liquor is sold by the — farmer at Surat 8
Abolition of the retail shops established in connection with the Government Central Book Depôt: Complaint that prices of English school-books have risen since the— 7
Appeal to the public of Bombay for pecuniary help to the inhabitants of the village of Morbe in the Mángaon Táluka of the Kolába District: Suggestions to Mr. Keyser, Collector of Kolába, in the matter of his— 7
Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act:
  Demand for the publication of the reports made by Mr. Woodward and Dr. Pollen on the subject of the — and of all the papers connected with the resettlement of land revenue in the Málvan Táluka of the Ratnágiri Collectorate 4
  Expression of opinion that the — is a miserable failure ... 5
Health reports submitted by Táluka officers: Complaint regarding the unreliable nature of the— 7
Indian Jails: Treatment accorded to prisoners in— 6
Insolvency Act: Expression of opinion that the benefit of the — should be granted very sparingly 7
Judicial matters: Remarks upon the trial of Charles Pattison of Surat for an attempt to murder 8
License-tax: Advisability of the abolition of the — and the re-imposition of the import duties on European cotton goods 4
Police:
  Complaint regarding an increase in the number of thefts at Ahmednagar 9
  Do. do. at Bandora 9
  Prevalence of thefts at Sátára... 9
Postal matters:
  Expression of opinion that the postmen of Bombay ought to be allowed the concession of pension and sick leave 8
  Expression of opinion that instructions in the Vernaculars should be printed on all post-cards directing that the name and address only should be written on their face 9
Public service: Complaint against the monopoly of high offices enjoyed by Europeans in India 3
Stamps: Expression of opinion that Government should receive back court-fee — and paper that are not required by the purchasers, or should make their transfer to others legal 6

Part II.—Local Self-government—

Bombay Local Self-government Bills: Remarks in connection with the reports of the Select Committee on the— 9

Part III.—Legislation—

Partition Bill: Disapproval of the — now before the Supreme Legislative Council... 14

Part IV.—Education—

Gujarát College: Expression of opinion that the high school and college departments of the — ought to be made independent of each other... 15
Second Grade Anglo-Vernacular schools: Expression of opinion that Vernaculars should be taught up to the sixth standard in all— ... 15

Page.

PART V.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway: Recommendation for the construction of wooden bridges at the Church Gate and Parel stations of the— ... 16
Policy pursued by Government in the matter of the construction of railways in India: Comments in connection with the— 15

PART VI.—Native States—

Janjira: Affairs at— 16

PART VII.—Berár Affairs—

Training in agricultural science: Necessity of taking steps to give a— to the cultivating classes in Berár 17

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 16th February 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Saurăshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berar papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Discusses the question whether the foundation of the British rule in India rests on the strength of the sword or on the consent of the people.

The Shivâji (63) of the 8th February says that the thanks of the Indian public are due to Mr. Ilbert for having brought forward the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill which has served to elicit a free discussion of the question whether the foundation of the British rule in India rests on the strength of the sword or on the consent of the people. A glance at the history of the origin of the British power in India will serve to show that that power owes its existence chiefly to trickery and deceit. It cannot however be said that the strength of the sword had no share in the foundation of this empire. As opportunities offered the British were not backward in signalizing their prowess by means of the sword. It is not altogether meaningless to say that the English are inferior to all other civilized nations in the warfare of the sword, as recent events in Afghánistan, Soudan and Zululand have shown that the edge of their sword has become altogether blunt. But however blunt their sword when viewed in comparison with other nations, it is keen enough for the Indians, as otherwise it would have been impossible for them to rule over 25 crores of the Indian people. Whatever the materials that form the foundation of the British rule in India it is thus clear that the consent of the people is not one of them. No people can like a foreign rule and the same is the case with this country. If the British administration had been popular in India no complaints would ever have been made nor commotions raised. If the foundations tumble down at this day, the people will not be grieved even in the least. The people however would not like to see the British rule displaced by another foreign rule, because the present regime is generous and considerate. It is therefore their wish that unless they are able to establish a Government of their own the present administration should continue. The past history of this country shows that the predominance of the ruling power is always followed by the ascendancy of the people, and according to this historic phenomenon when the strength of the present Government fails the people will have their day. It is well-known that the Musalmáns are a stern and an unrelenting people and that the Native State of Hyderabad is pre-eminently a Mahomedan principality. On the recent occasion of the installation of the Nizám the Viceroy's seat was to the right side of the Nizám. The Nizám had to address the audience in a standing posture while the Viceroy delivered his address without rising from his seat. What do these things signify? Simply that there is no help for such a state of things.

Regrets that no mention of India was made in the Queen's speech at the opening of the present session of Parliament.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 10th February observes:—The Queen's speech which was delivered on the occasion of opening this session of Parliament contains no mention of India. It is certainly very surprising that such an omission should have occurred a second time. When we remember that this portion of Mer Majesty's dominions has of late engaged much attention in England, and when we remember that had it not been for the clever way in which discussions in and out of Parliament were controlled, some questions of the day would have compelled the leaders of political parties at home to stake their power on the issue of a fresh election, our surprise becomes all the greater. This woful silence about India can only be explained on two grounds, either that there has been some gross blunder in despatching the news by telegraph or that the cabinet has been led to avoid any mention of this country lest an adverse vote on some of the leading questions may be attempted by the opposition. A strong belief is gaining ground that the relations of England with India are becoming closer every day and naturally enough we expected that some authoritative declaration to that effect might be made by Her Majesty. But to our greatest regret we have been disappointed. [Several Vernacular papers also notice the omission with regret.]

Says that the power of imprisoning political offenders without trial, which is now enjoyed by the Viceroy of India, should not be allowed to continue.

In alluding to the circumstances under which one Ranjit Sing committed suicide in the Lahore Jail, the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 14th February observes:—The event is full of significance and it will not do to trifle with it as some Anglo-Indian journals have thought fit to do. It raises various questions which demand serious attention. It is said that the deceased was confined in the Lahore Jail as a political prisoner in 1871 on a simple order from the Governor General, but what the offence was for which this punishment was inflicted and why the prisoner was kept in confinement so long without being tried by a judicial tribunal are questions which should engage the prompt attention of the Viceroy. We must first know whether Lord Ripon was made aware of the existence of such a political prisoner and whether any arrangements at present exist for giving information on the subject to a new Viceroy and other officers. If no such arrangements exist it must indeed be considered a matter of great injustice and steps ought to be taken to remedy this serious defect in the administration. But then where is the necessity of arming an Indian Viceroy with power to imprison a subject by a simple mandate of his own without resorting to a public trial? Not only in this but in many other instances this power has been used with great severity. Such power is not enjoyed even by the authorities in England and it does not appear to have been exercised even in the case of the Irish rebels. In a country like Russia such autocracy prevails to a great extent and it redounds greatly to the credit of England that its exercise is strongly animadverted upon by the English press and that it does not exist in that country. The present laws are so strict and the judicial tribunals are generally so independent that they can bring to justice a political offender of any description. Why then should the exercise of such power, which is only compatible with a state of barbarity and the sway of an autocratic ruler, be allowed to continue?

The License-tax may be readjusted on the express condition that the proceeds arising from its levy will be kept apart for forming the interest fund on capital borrowed by Government for public works.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 10th February says:—Successive Finance Ministers have admitted the injustice of the continuance of the License-tax, and the sum raised by it is so very insignificant that an organized protest against it will have its proper effect, especially as the present is an occasion for the consideration of fiscal measures. In our last impression we said that in favouring the movement of raising loans in England for the extension of railways in India we were indirectly giving our support to the continuance of this obnoxious tax by making the famine insurance fund our capital for paying off interest on the loans, and this is quite true. If we really wish that we should thrive by the introduction of some sound public works policy, we shall have to consent to being taxed for a few years more, but we certainly do not mean to say that this iniquitous tax should continue. If the public works policy of our Government is determined once for all and is known to be that which the people approve of, there is not even the slightest doubt that the people will consent to pay a light tax, the proceeds of which will serve as a famine insurance fund. The sum raised by the License-tax, about Rs. 49,00,000 annually, is certainly a very small sum, and if that were made the interest fund it would enable Government to borrow at 3 or 3½ per cent. a sum of money that would give us only about 2,000 miles of railway every year. What we therefore urge is a proper readjustment of the tax with the express promise that the proceeds will be kept apart as an interest fund for capital taken for public works.

Prefers the Income-tax to the odious License-tax.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 10th February says:—Will Sir Auckland Colvin have the courage to discard the iniquitous License-tax? The tax has been, we believe, universally condemned by the non-official community, European and Native. The higher officials who first thought well of it now denounce it as vigorously as publicists do. We remember that Major Baring expressed strong disapproval of this form of taxation. But he thought he had more pressing work to go through. We cannot say what his successor thinks of the matter. Once the inherent wickedness of the impost is acknowledged the question will be as to a better substitute. We believe Government must go back to an honest Income-tax, of which Lord Northbrook was unnecessarily afraid. A light tax on income would remove the present iniquity and yield a larger return than the one-sided License-tax so odious in its application. [Several Anglo-Vernacular and Vernacular papers recommend the abolition of the License-tax.]

Recommends the permanent location at Rájkot of the Court of the Judicial Assistant to the Political Agent in Káthiáwár.

A correspondent of the Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the 10th February observes that hitherto appeals against decisions passed by Thánádárs and Deputy Assistants to the Political Agent lay to the Agent's Assistants, and that special appeals only could be preferred to the Judicial Assistant. But on a complaint regarding delay in the disposal of appeals it has been ruled that no appeals should be heard by the Assistants to the Political Agent, but that they should be preferred at once to the Judicial Assistant. This ruling came into force from the first day of the current year, and since then many civil appeals have been preferred to the last-named officer. But as this officer moves throughout the province for eight months of the year, and as neither he nor his establishment get travelling allowance if they remain at one place for more than ten days, parties to the appeals find it very inconvenient to appear before him. People of distant parts of the province have sometimes to traverse a distance of more than two hundred miles in order to present themselves at the Court of this officer. Rájkot is a convenient centre for all parts of the province and the permanent location of the Judicial Assistant's Court at that place would result in a saving of much inconvenience and expense to the people and in a reduced cost to the State of the maintenance of the Court.

Does not approve of the order of Government recouping the expenses incurred by certain officers of the Bombay Police in defending a charge of assault brought against them by certain Bohra shopkeepers.

The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 12th February does not approve of the steps taken by Government to recoup the expenses incurred by the Police in defending a charge of assault brought against some of their officers by a few Bohra shopkeepers. The writer tries to examine all the circumstances of the case and says that the facts elicited did not prove the charge of assault to be altogether unfounded. It is the duty of the Police to be courteous and discreet in the discharge of their duties, and if in this case they had from the beginning behaved themselves with the discretion and courtesy that are required of them, things would not have taken the turn they subsequently did. For these reasons it would not have been unjust to let the defendants take a lesson from this case by paying for the expenses incurred by them. Such a measure would on the contrary have produced beneficial results.

Suggestions in connection with the Government Resolution regarding the insolvency of Government servants.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 14th February approves of the Resolution published by Government regarding the insolvency of Government servants and says that it is just and wise. But such Resolutions have also been issued in former times and have remained unheeded. European officers disregard them and contract debts in contravention of the orders contained in them. Government circulars have force only in the case of Native servants of Government. The indebtedness of officers raises apprehensions that justice will not be properly administered in the country. If it is intended that the present Resolution should prove useful, Government servants should be required to furnish returns showing the amount of debt incurred by them, the rate of interest at which money is borrowed, the cause of their indebtedness and the name of the person who lends them money. If this is done the number of insolvent Government servants can easily be made out every year. These returns should be published in the Government Gazette so that their correctness may be tested. This measure will prove efficacious in preventing Government servants from incurring debts. If Government wish to see their Resolution acted upon, they should speedily attend to this suggestion.

Complains that Natives have not been made Justices of the Peace in sufficiently large numbers.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 16th February observes that very few graduates of the Bombay University have been made Justices of the Peace, and that while almost every European solicitor has been made a Justice, only a fourth of the small number of Native solicitors and barristers have been raised to that position. Again while a large number of partners of European mercantile firms and their European assistants have been made Justices, Native merchants have been treated differently. The Government of Sir James Fergusson appears to have followed the rule that the names of such Justices of the Peace as may have taken the benefit of the Insolvency Act should be struck off the list of Justices; but it must be observed that this rule has not been enforced with impartiality. A race distinction is noticeable in this matter, for there are some European Justices who have taken the benefit of the Insolvency Act, but whose names are still borne on the list of the Justices.

Expresses satisfaction with the result of the trial of Mr. Pattison at the last Criminal Sessions of the Bombay High Court.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 11th February, in a paragraph headed "The Surat Case," says:—We think it is possible to judge of the result of the trial of Mr. Pattison, late Engineer of the Surat Mills, at the Sessions of our High Court just ended without indulging in race bias or appealing to the Ilbert Bill. It seems to us, after having watched the trial personally and not confining our attention solely to the report of the case that appeared in the dailies, that it is unfair to lay any blame on Mr. Justice Scott, the presiding Judge. His Lordship was, we think, justified by the proceedings of the case in expressing his regret that the committing Magistrate should have sent up the case to the High Court instead of dealing with it himself. The charge of attempt to murder could not be sustained in the face of the conflicting evidence which was produced, and it must be mentioned that if anybody is primarily responsible for the acquittal of the accused on that charge it is the complainant Mr. Gulábdás himself. There were no doubt certain circumstances which went to show that the accused was not altogether innocent, but it was evident that there had been indiscretion on both sides. The jury could have at the best brought a verdict of guilty on the minor charge of assault, but after the complainant's break-down in the witness box and the conflicting testimony of the witnesses even that chance disappeared, and it became clear that there had been a good deal of "give and take" on both sides. Even if the jury had consisted of Natives, the accused would have, we think, been acquitted. Nothing could be more absurd than to find fault with Mr. Justice Scott for the result of the case. By making a grievance of cases like the present we are prejudicing our own interests and turning the sympathies of reasonable Englishmen against us. We should have hardly thought the case worth any notice but for the importance which some writers are attempting to give it, evidently without having had any opportunity of knowing all the facts that were elicited at the trial before the Sessions Court.

Comments on the trial of Mr. Pattison at the Criminal Sessions of the Bombay High Court.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 10th February says:—On what principle was the jury empanelled and why was not a single intelligent Native juror put in? When it was found that the Musalmán Juror could not follow the proceedings, was it too late to mend matters? How came this gentleman to be a juror and what has the High Court done to prevent a repetition of such cruel mockery? But our strongest objection must be lodged against Mr. Inverarity's irrelevant allusion to the Ilbert Bill. He is too shrewd not to know that his client's case has no more to do with Mr. Ilbert's little dragon than it has to do with the Code of Manu or the Laws of Confucius. But revenge is sweet to the lawyer; it matters not to Mr. Inverarity if his remarks excite Native writers and thus embitter race feeling. [The Mahrátta (2) of the 10th February says:—The facts disclosed are a sufficient commentary on the whole case. Will not Government interfere in the matter? Oh! we forget! Pattison is not a Government servant and Government cannot therefore punish him. It is members of the non-official Anglo-Indian community that are the dread. They are the tigers from whose attack the Native sheep require protection. The Rást Goftár (115) of the 10th

February also points out the absurdity of having jurors who do not understand English and says:—There are several jurors who do not understand English, and care ought to be taken that they are not permitted to serve as jurors in future. The Yajdán Parast (127) of the same date expresses similar sentiments and recommends that a new jury list be prepared by the Sheriff in consultation with the leading members of the different communities. The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 13th February also makes a similar recommendation and points out certain discrepancies between the principles on which members of common and special juries are selected from the Native and European communities.]

Requests the Postal Department to keep receiving boxes at the stations of the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the 10th February complains that great inconvenience is caused to the public by the absence of postal boxes for receiving letters at the stations on the B. B. & C. I. Railway, and expresses a hope that the Postal authorities will see fit to remove the cause of complaint.

Local Self-government.

Approves of the Bombay District Municipal Act Amendment Bill.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 10th February observes that the Honourable Mr. Peile and His Excellency the Governor fully vindicated the course adopted by Government in framing the Bill, defending triumphantly the principles and provisions of the same. They showed successfully that the measure was quite in accordance with the spirit of the resolutions of the Government of India and as liberal as the state of this Presidency and its people could allow. It was also clearly shown that this Bill and the District Boards Act compared very favourably with the enactments of other Provincial Governments on the same subject. Certainly great credit is due to Sir James's Government for the very liberal spirit shown in rendering the scheme as favourable to the growth of popular government in this part of the country as the general welfare of the people needed. The Honourable Ráo Sáheb Mandlik was the only opponent of the measure. He is a confirmed advocate of advanced municipal government. As such he could not perhaps help asking as much for the people as he honestly believed they ought to have at least in principle. His contention in the main was for securing to the people the utmost concession of powers and privileges without reference to their capacity, either present or future, to be able to use the same. He seemed to believe that if there was an opening the people would try to approach the avenue that they must enter sooner or later. And as an independent, honest, honourable and highly-educated member of the advanced class of Native society, he was justified in acting and speaking in the way he did. He asked for concessions some of which the representatives of Government did not see their way to grant just at present. As responsible heads of Government His Excellency and his honourable colleagues had every reason to be cautious in their proceedings and to tread on sure ground. The Bill as enacted is a liberal measure of local self-government, and is in many respects better and more favourable to the growth and development of popular municipal government and the political education of the people than similar schemes of other Provincial Governments.

Education.

Suggestions for the encouragement and spread of scientific education in India.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 10th February, in an article headed "A scheme for scientific education; an appeal to the Bombay University," refers to the publication by the University of the prize essay on the advantages and means of diffusing a knowledge of Natural Sciences in India, written by Mr. C. B. Sethna, B.A., LL.B., and observes:—When appointing the Education Commission the Government of India remarked that as the subject of technical education had been already separately considered by them, it should not be inquired into by the Commission. We are not aware of any papers on the subject having been published by Government beyond the Resolution regarding the Thomason College at Roorkee. Nor are we aware of any recent changes in the quality or quantity of instruction in science, in this Presidency at any rate, and therefore ask Government to be pleased to publish the result of their consideration of the subject. We have already pointed out the inadequacy of the number of the existing scientific schools and of the expenditure incurred on them. If Government think that the Educational Department has not sufficient funds at its disposal, they have the power of placing them at its disposal by readjusting the expenditure in other departments. At any rate they ought to spend more money on account of scientific education. The allotment of funds to the different branches of education should be more fair than it has been. The state of science and of the middle classes of society indicates the state of the country. In India we have very few, if any, mechanics, artisans and engineers. They do not flourish at all. On the contrary their state is miserable. The present is indeed a transitional period. Hundreds and thousands are changing their old avocations for new ones, because their business is gone. Our people must see that times are changed and they must be prepared to take to any legitimate work which, honestly performed, would prove the means of their maintenance. They must leave their caste and other scruples behind. If they do not make haste they will find, when too late, that in the race they are outstripped by classes whom they are used to consider their inferiors. The social scale is being slowly but surely affected by causes over which we have no control. In the Incorporation Act of the Bombay University, No. XXII of 1857, there is nothing that can prevent it from moving successfully in this matter. It has great influence with Government and on the course of instruction imparted in schools and colleges. The University exists for encouraging the study of "literature, science and art." It must see that the course prescribed by it is not suited to the great wants of the country, and that the colleges require to be reconstituted as regards scientific education. In the present state of the country more inducement than hitherto should certainly be offered in the shape of a greater share of the higher appointments in the public service. Will the members of the University be so good as to review their proceedings in this matter and approach Government with proposals adequate to meet the growing necessities of the country? Mr. Sethna advocates the establishment of three grades of institutions corresponding to the primary and secondary schools and colleges already existing. These elementary schools must be widely scattered over the whole country and rendered adaptable to the poorest persons and rudest minds. Teachers for these schools must be supplied by several normal schools or training institutions in the country, which also must be established. In primary schools the subjects to be taught are elementary chemistry, physiology, systematic botany and geography, which should include lessons on the formation of the earth's crust and the classification and distribution of its inhabitants, animal and vegetable, extinct and recent. Easy lessons illustrating the nature and elementary laws of heat, light and electricity should be taught as introductory to chemistry. The instruction must be in vernacular by means of easy primers to be studied by the pupils. In secondary schools the whole course of study should be necessarily more advanced than that in elementary schools, and greater scope should be given to original work so as to awaken the intellectual faculties of the students and befit them for higher scientific studies in colleges or for learning any technical profession. The elements of natural science, including chemistry, physics, biology, physical geography and meteorology, should be taught. The standards should serve a twofold object. They must supply (1) the general wants common to the several sections of the middle classes and (2) the special requirements of each section. The latter object being met by technical schools, teachers for these schools should be supplied by colleges and such other higher institutions in the country. College and University education should be the natural outgrowth and development of secondary education. The divisions of physical science, including physical geography and geology, physics, chemistry and biology, should find here a wider scope than in schools and be represented not merely by professors and lecturers but by laboratories, wherein the students guided by well-trained demonstrators should work out facts for themselves and come into that direct contact with reality which marks the chief characteristic of scientific education. The Indian colleges must become active national instruments for the furtherance of scientific knowledge. They must foster original scientific research. Science requires the services of a class devoted to the extension of knowledge precisely as other classes of society are devoted to commerce, to politics or to agriculture. Such a class is sadly wanted in India, its absence being the greatest defect in the social system. It should therefore be the first concern of our colleges and Universities to make it up for the proper working of the social machine. With a view to encourage original research the following proposals are submitted:—(1) The establishment of a complete staff of scientific professors; (2) the appropriation of Fellowships and other endowments of the kind to the maintenance of persons engaged in original research; (3) foundation of laboratories expressly intended for research and for the training of advanced students in the methods of research; (4) maintenance of scientific museums to an extent beyond what is required for purely educational purposes; (5) institution of a degree of doctor of science. This is the scheme Mr. Sethna has elaborated, and we commend it for consideration by Government, the University and the gentlemen interested in the welfare of this country.

Reviews the position taken by the Education Commission in regard to the relation of the State to private enterprise.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 11th February reviews the position taken by the Education Commission in regard to the relation of the State to private enterprise and observes:—Thus on the whole the views put forth by the Commission are healthy and more or less in accord with Native opinion. We sincerely trust they will be followed by Government. The extreme backwardness which many of the provinces, Bombay in particular, have hitherto shown in evincing any interest in private educational enterprise amply proves that there is something wrong in the system of aid at present in vogue, and that Government, if they desire to act up to the despatches of successive Secretaries of State for India, must find some means of improving the present state of things. Bengal and Madras have already in a manner shown that with suitable encouragement Natives will not be found wanting in enterprise and public spirit. Bombay and the remaining provinces will likewise soon prove their capacity, if only the right means are employed.

Disapproves of the way in which Mr. Chatfield, Director of Public Instruction, Bombay, discharges his duty.

The same newspaper, in a paragraph headed "Mr. Chatfield and his department," says:—The art of being stolidly indifferent to criticism has been so very carefully cultivated by Mr. Chatfield that we doubt whether the suggestion made to him by the Times of India, that as "the head of a great department" he should not only supervise but also "inaugurate and carry out large measures of improvement," will find favour with him. While holding the office of Director of Public Instruction, Mr. Peile is believed to have more than once remarked that it offered very little scope for the exercise of one's administrative faculties, and perhaps long familiarity with the work has bred in Mr. Chatfield a feeling of contempt for educational activity. The Times of India regrets that his annual reports are too dry and "dull" to interest the general reader. A month ago the Bombay Gazette regretted that the Director had made it a point not to grace the annual convocations of the University with his presence, while it is an open secret that Mr. Chatfield's subordinates look upon him as one who has not much sympathy with the department over which he rules. He is splendidly formed for active work, but beyond the performance of routine duties the public has got nothing out of him ever since he secured the post of Director.

Railways.

Complains that some third class passengers by the B. B. & C. I. Railway are made to travel in open waggons.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 15th February states that third class passengers are on account of a scarcity of third class carriages made to travel in open waggons from the Goa Gate station of the B. B. & C. I. Railway while proceeding in the direction of Chándod. The unfortunate passengers suffer much from the sun and ought not to be subjected to such treatment.

Municipalities.

Local Self-government at Ahmedabad.

The Indian Spectator (1) of 10th February observes:—Mr. Fernandez has returned to Ahmedabad from Morvi. The people prayed that he might be sent elsewhere. They seem to dread his presence at the Municipal Board. So long as there was a shrewd and experienced Collector like Mr. Borradaile at the head of affairs, they did not fear much. But with a plastic and inexperienced superior the public of Ahmedabad fear that Mr. Fernandez may again defy Municipal laws and rules and thus bring a fine experiment into discredit. Already they find copies of records withheld from them, the Collector-president shouting, we are told, "will not give, will not give, will not give," and the unhappy Commissioners trembling under Mr. Fernandez's gaze and voting with the officials. If this be even partially true, what a sad pass the scheme of local self-government is coming to! Our first impulse in such cases is to deplore the lack of public spirit among representatives of the people. These men talk bravely to the ratepayers before election and then desert their cause. It is these men who encourage the officials in their highhandedness. But whence can they have public spirit unless Government infuses it in them by keeping a strict watch over public interests and by insisting upon their officials not to run counter to popular opinion in a matter in which the people are so vitally interested? It rests with the Government of Bombay to give genuine municipal government to the city.

Native States.

Does not approve of the delay in nominating a successor to the vacant throne of Kolhápur.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 11th February says that the public are greatly surprised at the delay in the nomination of a successor to the late lamented Rája of Kolhápur. That the State is not to be annexed, that a ruler is to be nominated to the vacant throne, that it is not difficult to find a successor, that several persons are moving heaven and earth to forward their claims, and that there is ample room to choose from amongst them—if all these things are true, where is the hitch? This is indeed a mystery which would defy the intelligence of an ordinary person to fathom it. There would appear to be three things at the bottom of this delay: they are influence, intrigue and greed. Of these the first two have connection with the subjects of the State, while the last applies to the paramount power. The times of 1765, which are known to the readers of Indian history as being connected with a dispute regarding the nomination of a successor to the throne of Mir Jaffir of Bengal, which ended in the selection of Nijám Uddawla against the dictates of the Mahomedan law and recognised usage in consideration of the handsome reward of Rs. 13 lákhs which was divided among themselves by the then Governor of Bengal and his colleagues, have now passed away and we are now living in different times, and therefore we need entertain no serious apprehensions regarding the repetition of those events. We say serious apprehensions because we must always speak with caution in such delicate matters and cannot be sanguine about their result. It is rumoured in some quarters that the present Regent's son will be adopted as the next heir to the throne, others say that enquiries are being made in the Sátára District for a proper successor, while some people say that no definite line of policy has yet been sketched out. Whatever the truth, it is certain that everything will be settled according to the inclination of the paramount power, irrespective of what may be proper according to the law and ancient usage. It is however to be hoped that Government will not depart from usage in this matter. In coming to a decision on this question the rulers should take thought of how the public and posterity will judge of their acts.

Remarks in connection with the death of the Mahárája of Kolhápur.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 10th February says:—We have to thank Government for the copies of papers relating to the public inquiry held at Nagar about the death of the Mahárája of Kolhápur. A perusal of the depositions and other papers supplied to us shows that our remarks on the Government Resolution on the subject are fully borne out.

There is nothing in the papers to show why Mr. Green should have been allowed to escape without even the mildest punishment in the shape of a censure or an expression of regret. There is also nothing in the papers that can support the spleen enlargement theory. The papers conclusively prove that though the Mahárája may have been subject to the influence of confirmed dementia, he was not beyond the influence of natural passions. He missed his wife as much as any strong, stout and healthy male person would do in his mature years and the fact that he was torn from his dear wife and that he had to sell his love to a menial prostitute at times are as heartrending as any such facts can be. Poor soul !! Unfortunate indeed !!

Berár Affairs.

Delay in the introduction of Local Self-government in Berár.

In an article headed, a "Reminder to the Resident," the Pramod Sindhu (53) of the 11th February says :—More than two and a half years have elapsed since the memorable Resolution of our noble Viceroy of May 1881 vouchsafing the extension of local self-government to the people of this land was published; and yet nothing has been done in Berár. More than a year ago the people of Akola and Amráoti petitioned the Resident for the grant of elective municipal franchise and they were assured by Mr. Jones that before long their prayers would be acceded to. A slight move was made in August last when a conference was held at Hyderabad to deliberate upon the introduction of Local Self-government in Berár, and at that time the main principles upon which the scheme should be tried were discussed. But since that time there has been quite a calm. It is not even known whether the recommendations of the conference have been formulated or have received any tangible shape. This sort of apathy does not speak well for our administration. It is true the Resident has many things to look to. But two years and a half can hardly be considered as too short a time for arranging preliminaries, particularly when we remember that after the recent legislation in the other parts of India there is hardly any occasion for originality or deep thought.

Comments in connection with the last report on the municipalities in Berár.

In an article headed "The Municipalities in Berár," the same paper reviews the last Municipal Report and observes :—The principal source of income of the Akola Municipality is the Town Fund cess, a one per cent. tax levied on all persons having an annual income of Rs. 200 and upwards. During the year 1882-83 this tax was extended to incomes as low as Rs. 100. This is in reality an income-tax and its incidence is always unequal. While the honest few or those whose incomes are known are taxed to the full amount of their gains, the dishonest many escape. There is also a difference in the assessment of Government servants and that of non-official classes, which has not been alluded to in the report. The former are taxed on one-fourth of their annual income, while the other classes are supposed to be taxed on the whole. This difference has been defended on the ground that Government servants are required to maintain a larger establishment to keep up their status than others. This privilege has, in the case of one municipality at least, been extended to the servants of European firms. We ask what reason is there to extend the privilege to them in exclusion of others. It is no wonder then that shopkeepers and traders, believing that servants of Government and of European firms are thus unjustly favoured, are tempted to show false returns of their incomes. It has lately been decided, we are told, that when a firm has branches in one or more places only the principal firm has to pay the tax ; and as the maximum amount of the tax levied cannot exceed Rs. 500, that sum is to be distributed among the several branches. This decision may be according to the wording of the law, but we doubt whether it satisfies the common sense of the people. If only the principal firm and not its branches in several places in the province is to be taxed, by parity of reasoning why should the different members of a joint Hindu family be separately subjected to the tax? It is no wonder therefore that, in the words of the Commissioner, very great discrepancies should be "apparent in the incidence of the tax in the different towns." While at Basim and at Akola it is as low as Rs. 2-14-0 and Rs. 3-4-0 respectively, at Shegaon and

There is nothing in the papers to show why Mr. Green should have been allowed to escape without even the mildest punishment in the shape of a censure or an expression of regret. There is also nothing in the papers that can support the spleen enlargement theory. The papers conclusively prove that though the Mahárája may have been subject to the influence of confirmed dementia, he was not beyond the influence of natural passions. He missed his wife as much as any strong, stout and healthy male person would do in his mature years and the fact that he was torn from his dear wife and that he had to sell his love to a menial prostitute at times are as heartrending as any such facts can be. Poor soul!! Unfortunate indeed!!

Berár Affairs.

Delay in the introduction of Local Self-government in Berár.

In an article headed, a "Reminder to the Resident," the Pramod Sindhu (53) of the 11th February says:—More than two and a half years have elapsed since the memorable Resolution of our noble Viceroy of May 1881 vouchsafing the extension of local self-government to the people of this land was published; and yet nothing has been done in Berár. More than a year ago the people of Akola and Amráoti petitioned the Resident for the grant of elective municipal franchise and they were assured by Mr. Jones that before long their prayers would be acceded to. A slight move was made in August last when a conference was held at Hyderabad to deliberate upon the introduction of Local Self-government in Berár, and at that time the main principles upon which the scheme should be tried were discussed. But since that time there has been quite a calm. It is not even known whether the recommendations of the conference have been formulated or have received any tangible shape. This sort of apathy does not speak well for our administration. It is true the Resident has many things to look to. But two years and a half can hardly be considered as too short a time for arranging preliminaries, particularly when we remember that after the recent legislation in the other parts of India there is hardly any occasion for originality or deep thought.

Comments in connection with the last report on the municipalities in Berár.

In an article headed "The Municipalities in Berár," the same paper reviews the last Municipal Report and observes:—The principal source of income of the Akola Municipality is the Town Fund cess, a one per cent. tax levied on all persons having an annual income of Rs. 200 and upwards. During the year 1882-83 this tax was extended to incomes as low as Rs. 100. This is in reality an income-tax and its incidence is always unequal. While the honest few or those whose incomes are known are taxed to the full amount of their gains, the dishonest many escape. There is also a difference in the assessment of Government servants and that of non-official classes, which has not been alluded to in the report. The former are taxed on one-fourth of their annual income, while the other classes are supposed to be taxed on the whole. This difference has been defended on the ground that Government servants are required to maintain a larger establishment to keep up their status than others. This privilege has, in the case of one municipality at least, been extended to the servants of European firms. We ask what reason is there to extend the privilege to them in exclusion of others. It is no wonder then that shopkeepers and traders, believing that servants of Government and of European firms are thus unjustly favoured, are tempted to show false returns of their incomes. It has lately been decided, we are told, that when a firm has branches in one or more places only the principal firm has to pay the tax; and as the maximum amount of the tax levied cannot exceed Rs. 500, that sum is to be distributed among the several branches. This decision may be according to the wording of the law, but we doubt whether it satisfies the common sense of the people. If only the principal firm and not its branches in several places in the province is to be taxed, by parity of reasoning why should the different members of a joint Hindu family be separately subjected to the tax? It is no wonder therefore that, in the words of the Commissioner, very great discrepancies should be "apparent in the incidence of the tax in the different towns." While at Basim and at Akola it is as low as Rs. 2-14-0 and Rs. 3-4-0 respectively, at Shegaon and Khamgaon it is Rs. 11-13-6 and Rs. 11-12-0 respectively. The Commissioner thinks that both in Akola and Ellichpur 'the better classes have been assessed much too lightly and are not bearing their proper share of the local burdens." Defects in assessment have been admitted in several reports, and the municipalities clearly stood in need of being advised that greater care should be taken in assessing this tax "so as to ensure its more even and equitable distribution." But may not comparison be fallacious? Shegaon and Khamgaon are comparatively new towns, and owe their rise to commerce, which may have enriched all classes of people, while Akola being an older town may have a larger proportion of the poorer classes than others. The large number of Mahomedan population in the latter town may possibly account for this. The Commissioner's remarks can be true only on the supposition that all municipal towns are equally rich or equally poor, a supposition not warranted by facts, at least in the case of Ellichpur. The last is a ruined town with hardly any trade, and it may well be supposed that its population is comparatively poor. Next to the Town Fund the market cess is the principal source of income. This includes the bázár cess, which is levied in all municipal towns, the cotton market fees levied in four of the municipalities, and grain market fees and satta tax, which are levied only in Khamgaon. Grain markets are shortly to be established at Akola and Khamgaon, and proposals for levying fees on them are before the Resident. The Amráoti Municipality has, we learn, decided to have a grain market, but it does not propose to charge any fees, at any rate for the present. In the anxiety to increase their incomes municipalities should beware lest they stifle a growing trade by unnecessary and heavy taxation. The trade in wheat is fast rising in importance and requires encouragement. We invite our Commissioners to study the question of taxation for unless that is settled the equilibrium of municipal finances will always remain unstable.

In an article headed "Building sites in Amráoti," the same paper says:—

Suggestions to the Municipality of Amráoti regarding the grant of building sites in the town.

A curious feature of the mode of apportioning sites for buildings in our town is the utter absence of anything like system. Perhaps it never occurred to our civic fathers that there was any necessity for a comprehensive scheme in the case of a large and rising town like Amráoti. Wretched huts, dirty hovels, and miserable dingy looking houses disfigure the most prominent part of the town. The simple reason is that our municipality did not see fit to elaborate a scheme for improving or beautifying the town. Its great cry is that the principal part of the old town is quite crowded and cramped. But then no proper attempt has been made to remedy this evil. Instead of granting piece-meal small strips for miserable hovels it would have been far better if the whole ground on the main roads outside the Bhusari and Amba gates had been parcelled out and granted to the owners of houses in the Bohra and Cloth Bázárs. This would have involved a considerable outlay in the shape of compensation. But it need not have been done all at once but gradually. The effect of such a systematic procedure would have been two-fold. The old town would have been improved both in sanitation and appearance, while the appearance of the new one would have been rendered worthy of the wealth and commerce of a city like Amráoti. As things now stand the old bázárs will defy the attempts of eminent engineers at effecting drainage, ventilation or decent roads. The municipality is aware that under the present system of leases capitalists do not think it worth their while to invest their money in taking up sites and building on them. It has therefore asked the local Government for permission to sell the land. The proceeds will be invested in Government securities or deposited in Bank and the interest applied to the current expenses of the municipality. This is certainly a move in the right direction. If this request of the municipality be not granted by Government, we would suggest to it the advisability of effecting a slight reduction in its present rates. In whatever way building sites are given, whether by sale or on leases, the municipality should determine upon a general scheme for utilizing such sites. We think that it is not quite outside the province of the municipality to improve the appearance of its town and afford facilities to those who would do so. In Bombay they are thinking of reclaiming the Back Bay and erecting what might be called "the fashionable quarters." Might we not in a similar manner reserve a part of the lands outside the walls and make it into a faubourg traversed by broad streets, the sites there being given only to those who would construct houses on some approved plan with a compound for each house? We have here indicated the lines on which the municipality might move. It should work out the details. We would however suggest that it should encourage our people (i.e. the conservative portion) to preserve compounds and plant trees in them. The municipality should levy two different rates, one for land actually occupied by a house or other structure, and another for that used for plants and trees. For the latter the rates fixed by Government for garden land would suit both parties; while for the former a rate of Re. 1 for a piece of land measuring 30 by 30 feet might do in the case of land situated by the side of the principal roads. We trust the municipality will give this subject the consideration it deserves.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
23rd February 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Foundation of the British rule in India: Discussion of the question whether the — rests on the strength of the sword or on the consent of the people 3
Judicial matters:
  Comments on the trial of Mr. Pattison at the Criminal Sessions of the Bombay High Court 6
  Expression of satisfaction with the result of the trial of Mr. Pattison at the last Criminal Sessions of the Bombay High Court ... 6
  Recommendation for the permanent location at Rájkot of the Court of the Judicial Assistant to the Political Agent in Káthiáwár ... 5
License-tax:
  Expression of opinion that the — may be readjusted on the express condition that the proceeds arising from its levy will be kept apart for forming the interest fund for capital borrowed by Government for public works 4
  Preference of the Income-tax to the — 4
Police: Disapproval of the order of Government recouping the expenses incurred by certain officers of the Bombay — in defending a charge of assault brought against them by certain Bohra shopkeepers ... 5
Political offenders: Expression of opinion that the power of imprisoning — without trial which is now enjoyed by the Viceroy should not be allowed to continue 4
Postal matters: Request to the Postal Department to keep receiving boxes at the stations on the B. B. & C. I. Railway 7
Public honours: Complaint that Natives have not been made Justices of the Peace in sufficiently large numbers 6
Public service: Suggestions in connection with the Government Resolution regarding the insolvency of Government servants ... 5
Queen's speech: Expression of regret at the circumstance that no mention of India was made in the — at the opening of the present session of Parliament 3

PART II.—Local Self-government —

Bombay District Municipal Act Amendment Bill: Approval of the — ... 7

PART III—Education—

Director of Public Instruction, Bombay: Disapproval of the way in which Mr. Chatfield — discharges his duties 9
Encouragement and spread of scientific education in India: Suggestions for the — 7
Relation of the State to private enterprise: Review of the position taken by the Education Commission in regard to the — 9

PART IV.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway: Complaint that some third class passengers by the — are made to travel in open waggons... 9

PART V.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Local Self-government at— 10

PART VI.—Native States—

Kolhápur:
  Disapproval of the delay in nominating a successor to the vacant throne of — 10
  Remarks in connection with the death of the Mahárája of — ... 10

PART VII.—Berár Affairs—

Local Self-government: Delay in the introduction of — in Berár ... 11
Municipalities:
  Comments in connection with the last report on the — in Berár ...
  Suggestions to the — of Amráoti regarding the grant of building 11 sites in that town 12

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 23rd February 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON. 1090

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mĭtra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that an equitable administration of justice will strengthen the foundation of the British rule in India more than anything else.

The Suryă Pràkásh (84) of the 16th February says:—The security of a Government rests chiefly on its equitable administration of justice. To this effect spoke our noble Viceroy while replying to a congratulatory address presented to him by the natives on the occasion of his arrival at Madras. As the representative of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress, as a clever and experienced statesman, as the first English gentleman now in India, our Viceroy spoke quite truly. In a country which is composed of so many races and so many creeds, and which is so remote from the principal seat of administration, British power, if the ruling class wish to base it on a safe and secure foundation, can be made firm as a rock, provided the rulers take care never to make light of the people's rights, or to trifle with their tender susceptibilities. What a stigma do those Englishmen bring upon the fair name of England, who, moved solely by race distinctions, take the natives of this country to task—natives who have always felt so great a respect for their present rulers that 'angreji rájno adal insáf' (the justice of the English rule) has ever been a proverbial expression on the tip of everybody's tongue. If Englishmen wish to live well here they should try to learn to love the natives, though the latter may not be able to boast of as fair a skin or as tall and robust a constitution as theirs. Should they however try to run counter to the just wishes and reasonable demands of the people, they would leave no noteworthy landmarks in the annals of this country, but would on the contrary risk the love and sympathies of the people.

Says that the natives of India cherish great love for their rulers.

The same, in an article headed "Are natives capable of feeling"? says that natives of India who have been vilified in vain had hitherto no opportunity to speak out boldly for themselves. Europeans formed a very low estimate of their feelings, thoughts and loyalty, and tried to stigmatize them as unwise, illiterate and rough. But they were not aware that a day might come when the whole of India, with its Native princes and nobles, savants, professional men and artisans, would manifest in various ways and with one heart and without the slightest inspiration from without its loyalty and love to the British crown. Notwithstanding the circumstance that the whole of India did not take part in the mutiny of 1857 and that many native potentates assisted the British at that juncture, though they were able to take part in the commotions, the occasion was sufficient to lead many an Anglo-Indian to form a very low opinion of the people of the whole country, and traces of that impression are visible at this day after a lapse of 27 years. But the subsequent good conduct of the natives has done much to altogether obliterate that impression. Not a year passes that does not bring to the public notice their appreciation of the British justice and honesty. It is undeniable that Europeans have not yet been able to discern one trait of native character. The natives are never willing to sing false praises. They show their appreciation of the merits of others when an opportunity offers. What have the Europeans not done in the matter of the Ilbert Bill? They showered abuses on natives and pronounced them unfit for the right of trying Europeans. Notwithstanding this natives have not vilified the whole class for the faults of a section of it. The Suryă Prakásh then refers to the hearty welcome given by the natives to Lord Ripon on the occasion of his recent visit to Madras, says that natives can know their real and false friends, and asks whether these things signify that natives do not cherish any love for their rulers.

Advocates a reduction in the duty levied on gold and silver ware imported into England.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 21st February says:—Since the time that India came in contact with the nations of the West she has been in a state of decline. Foreigners have monopolized all the trade of the country by the introduction of improved machinery, and the artisans of India have been reduced to a state of starvation. There is however no use of complaining against the tendency of Europeans to deprive India of her wealth by every means in their power. We must try to compete with them in the struggle for the maintenance of our original position. There is no doubt that if all the obstacles that are at present thrown in the way of native arts and industries are removed, they will flourish very rapidly. Among the Indian arts that have achieved a name in foreign countries, the chief is that of manufacturing gold and silver ware. But this art has met the fate which has been the common lot of all native arts and manufactures. England is the principal market for gold and silver ware from India, and the heavy duty levied on these articles in that country has served to give a serious shock to that trade. A duty of 1½ shilling per ounce is levied on all silverware irrespective of the country from which it is imported. Besides there are very inconvenient rules regarding the method of testing the quality of the articles. This duty was originally levied for the purpose of paying off the debt incurred by England in a war with a foreign nation. This led to a falling off in the imports of these articles, and the duty was therefore temporarily foregone. Another war however brought about its re-imposition. England may apparently profit by the imposition of the duty, but a close consideration of the subject will show that England has suffered much by the falling off that has occurred in the imports of these articles between the years 1855 and 1879. It is maintained by some that a reduction in the import duty on gold and silver ware will prejudicially affect the interests of English traders in those articles, but their position is not sound as will be seen by a calculation of the loss that England may have hitherto suffered by the importation of such articles from India. In short what we mean is that a reduction in the duty on gold and silver ware is calculated to give work to the Indian artisans and thus to ameliorate their impoverished condition without causing serious injury to any country. This duty acts as a check on the development of the trade and knowledge of the people of this country, and it is disgraceful that England should maintain it simply for the purpose of serving her own selfish ends. What can be more ridiculous than that England, preaching a free trade policy, should make herself liable to the application of the proverb of preaching philosophy to others and yet behaving oneself like a fool.

Disapproves of the rumoured employment of Indian troops in the war in the Soudan.

In an article headed "India and the war in the Soudan," the Native Opinion (10) of the 17th February says:—The war in the Soudan has now assumed such proportions that its effects might probably be felt in the farthest east, and it threatens to inflict upon India a financial calamity, which it will tax all the art and wisdom of Lord Ripon to avoid. From our past experience we know how much he can help us, and unless we try to help ourselves we confess we do not see how we can escape the great infliction which is looming in the near future. England embroiled herself in Egypt, and having very well succeeded in getting round her neck a pretty heavy dead weight called it triumphant policy, and for that folly we were made to pay. England, though she talked loudly of retiring from the country, has been unable to do so until now, and will never be able to take that step. It is her presence there that keeps Tewfik on the throne, and we are sure the moment she turns her back on Egypt he is sure to suffer the fate of Shahasujah of Afghánistan at the hands of his subjects. We may take it now that Egypt has fallen in that class of states which in India are called the Protected States. The same irony of fate which obliged England reluctantly to plunge into wars and be saddled with annexations of territory upon territory in India seems to pursue her in Egypt, and now she must fight the Mahdi in order to protect Egypt, and thus possibly to advance her protectorate up to the borders of Abyssinia. Had that first blunder not been perpetrated, and had she left Arabi and his fellaheens to reconstruct the constitution of Egypt, this complication could not have arisen. We cannot suppose that the present contretemps was not foreseen, though we are sure that Mahdi did not occupy that place in the mental vision of politicians which he does now. Even then there were loud warnings against interference. England has now got a wolf by the ears and must somehow or other silence him by giving him his quietus. The proposal of abandoning the Soudan to the prophet seems to have once suggested itself, but it has been given up as an impracticable proposal. Such an abandonment, we are sure, means future trouble without mitigation of the present. Had the true intention of this interference in Egypt been once clearly stated by the Ministry to the public of England, they would have avoided the frequent necessity of making very ridiculous excuses for the presence of English troops in Egypt. Whatever the Ministry may say, we cannot but see in this affair the sole purpose of protecting and finally annexing Egypt to the exclusion of France. When the question is seen in this light there is no difficulty in understanding the timid and half-hearted measures which the Ministry are pursuing. They do not like to take a resolve and pour troops in the Soudan all at once, because that would militate against their previous professions, and yet they cannot bring themselves to abandon Egypt altogether, as they would thereby lose the great advantage they have obtained over other European nations in general and France in particular. This desire for aggrandisement under the garb of no aggrandisement accounts for the present position of Mr. Gladstone's Government, which is certainly far from enviable. To relieve himself from it he will have now to conquer Soudan without touching the pockets of the British tax-payer, and that means saddling India with the cost of the war and giving the world, as Lord Hartington said on a former occasion, an opportunity of witnessing how great a support the Indian troops are to England in her Imperial policy. For our part we should like England to retract from Egypt bag and baggage and leave the people of the country to settle their own matters. The specious excuse of the defence of the Suez Canal does not at all exist, as has been abundantly proved. The canal is a venture which centres in itself the interests of the whole commercial world and will exist in safety without the officious care of England. From an Indian standpoint no other solution would, we think, be better than that we have suggested, and if England in pursuance of her Imperial policy determines to keep Egypt to herself, then we say let her do it and pay for it. India does not want Egypt, nor does she apprehend any danger to her commerce by the fact of England not being on the banks of the canal, and we trust the Ministry will rise to the justness of the position, and in the event of their undertaking a war in the Soudan will at least not make India pay for it. The march of events tends to show that the Ministry will have to enter upon a war in the Soudan. And what troops are better fitted for such a war than the native troops of India? It may be safely asserted that unless some unforeseen accident intervenes an expedition will within a few months be ordered from India, and that probably before the setting in of the monsoon. But that is not a grave matter for us. Our soldiers will have the glory of having fought, and though some lives may be lost England will have gained much. But the principal question is who should supply the sinews of the war. There is not the slightest doubt that it would be illegal to make India pay for the expedition. No less an authority than the Governor General himself has declared that this year especially our financial prospects will be none of the brightest. Our opium revenue has been said to show grave signs of a fall, and there is no money with the Government of India to carry out some of the most urgent improvements in the administration of our country. At such a time and in the face of the fact that we are obliged to postpone the most necessary improvements for want of funds, it would be the height of folly to inflict upon us the cost of any unnecessary Imperial expedition. We wish this fact to be kept clearly in view by the British Ministry in their deliberations about their action in the Soudan. Our past experience in such matters has made us very sensitive, and hence we have found it necessary to raise this alarm before the danger has actually presented itself. We have seen that our Government is powerless to protect us at such junctures, and therefore we exhort the whole public press and the associations of the country to be on the alert and when the time comes, which we are afraid is not distant, to raise a cry loud enough to reverberate in England and bring home to the mind of the British public the truth that if they ever lose India it will be from financial convulsions. [Several other Vernacular papers express similar sentiments. The Indian Spectator (1) of the 17th February says that the people of India should protest against the employment of Indian troops in the war in the Soudan.]

Condemns the permission said to have been granted to the Mahdi to carry on slave traffic.

The Káside Mumbai (109) of the 20th February, in writing on the war in the Soudan, refers to the proclamation issued by General Gordon, which states among other things that no restriction will be placed on the slave traffic, and remarks that this proclamation will not make a good impression on the wild Soudanese but will embolden them in their designs. By such a proclamation the celebrated General has brought a stigma not only on the name of Egypt but of the British Government. This permission to carry on traffic in slaves will be regarded by the civilized world as an act of cowardice. Moreover, the lákhs of rupees spent on the prevention of this traffic in Africa and other countries will have been wasted. It is a weakness on the part of England that her representative should permit such a thing. The Conservative party will make considerable capital out of this affair and the Ministry of Mr. Gladstone will become liable to severe censure.

Suggests the abolition of the License-tax and the re-imposition of import duties on European cotton goods.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 18th February revives the old complaint against the License-tax and repeats the oft advanced arguments against the abolition of the import duties on European cotton goods, and suggests to Government the advisability of abolishing the former and making up the deficit by re-imposing the latter. The question of railway extension in India is at present engaging the attention of Government and the public, but want of funds is the greatest obstacle in the way of a satisfactory solution of the question. If Government are in earnest about extending railways rapidly they may impose a light tax on the express condition that the proceeds of such a tax will not be misspent. [The Rást Gotfár (115) of the 17th February suggests that the License-tax should be so modified as to lighten the burden which at present bears heavily on the poorer classes at the cost of the wealthier people. The Gujaráti (101) and Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 18th and the Deshi Mitră (96) of the 21st February recommend the total abolition of the tax.]

Approves of the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Mandlik as a member of the Viceregal Legislative Council.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 18th February says:—We are glad that Ráo Sáheb Vishwanáth Náráyan Mandlik has been nominated a member of the Viceregal Legislative Council. A better and happier selection could not have been made, and Lord Ripon has shown his appreciation of the services rendered by the Ráo Sáheb by conferring on him the honour which he entirely deserves. The choice has given satisfaction to all classes, and doubtless Mr. Mandlik will be able to work in his new sphere in the interests of this Presidency even much better than he has been able to do in the local Council. [Several other Anglo-Vernacular and Vernacular papers express their approval of the nomination.]

Approves of the appointment of Messrs. Mandlik and Telang to the Supreme and Local Legislative Councils respectively.

In a paragraph headed "A good selection," the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 21st February says:—We hear from a reliable source that the vacancy caused in the local Legislative Council by the appointment of the Honourable Ráo Sáheb Vishwanáth Náráyan Mandlik, C.S.I., to the Viceregal Legislative Council has been offered to our esteemed friend Mr. Káshináth Trimbak Telang, M.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-Law. The selection is most excellent and unimpeachable, and we cannot but congratulate Sir James Fergusson upon the most happy selection that he has made. In the same way we regard the appointment of Mr. Mandlik to the Viceregal Legislative Council to be equally excellent and unimpeachable. Lord Ripon could not have made a better selection for the representation of Bombay in the Supreme Council. Mr. Mandlik and Mr. Telang are the jewels of the Hindu community in this Presidency, and by honouring them Government have honoured the Hindu community of this Presidency.

Notices an act of high-handedness on the part of a European officer in the mofussil.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 21st February, in an article headed "The tyranny practised by a European in the mofussil," says that it received by post on the 25th January last an anonymous communication setting forth certain acts of tyranny practised by a European. As the informant had not stated the name of the European nor indicated the scene of the oppression, it took much time to ascertain these particulars. At last after taking much trouble it has become known that the particulars communicated are literally correct. The following is a brief summary of the particulars. On the 18th or 19th of January last a European from this place, who is an officer high in Government service, went to Sánand on a shooting trip. He had with him a shikári (a hunter) who was ordered to meet the Sáhib at a certain place. The shikári falling in with a shikár on his way shot it. In the meanwhile he was beaten by some four or five men issuing from the neighbourhood who robbed him of his pistol and his shikár and disappeared. Such is the shikári's account. When matters were represented to the Sáhib in this light his temper was ruffled and he became very angry, and taking his servant and the shikári with him he proceeded to the adjoining village. (The Hitechchhu is not at present willing to publish the name of the village). There he issued a peremptory order, which by the bye he had no authority whatsoever to do, that all the villagers should present themselves before him. Thereupon about ten or twenty persons came forward. The shikári recognised two of them as being of the party which had attacked him. Without any further investigation or thought, and without informing the police or taking those persons before the nearest magistrate, the two villagers were caused to be tied to a tree and were severely flogged, one of them receiving one dozen and the other two dozen stripes. (It is said that one villager was flogged by the shikari or the servant of the European gentleman, while the other was flogged by the gentleman himself.) The European then demanded from the villagers the immediate production of his pistol, failing which he threatened to set fire to the village. The pistol was found out after a minute search and was handed over to the European. But this was not enough to pacify the heated temper of the Rája Báhádur Sáhib. He therefore ordered them to pay a fine of Rs. 20 either individually or collectively, and threatened the villagers with causing immediate harm to the village in case the fine was not paid. Out of fear the poor and ignorant villagers by some means managed to pay the fine to the Sáhib who was right glad at the payment of the fine. He then went to his bungalow, and set about the task of earning praises from such of his acquaintances as were of his stamp by himself narrating this creditable and heroic deed. In this affair the Sáhib was neither in need of the police nor of the magistrate. There is not the slightest exaggeration in this account. It is merely a description of the heart-rending oppression practised by this godly personage. The Hitechchhu has also learnt that the above-named European informed a magistrate of his acquaintance of the event but no further steps are known to have been taken. But this is certain that not a word has been publicly said to the European in connection with this affair. From this it will be seen what an amount of oppression celestial Europeans exercise in the districts!! Even a low-salaried loafer of their class is looked upon by the natives as a god. Poor natives cannot raise their voice against them even when they oppress them according to their sweet will. Even if the natives complain, before whom should they go to obtain redress? The natives have necessarily to appear before Europeans for obtaining justice. And when eminent vakils and wealthy gentlemen fail to get justice (look at the case of assault by Mr. Pattison on Mr. Gulábdás of Surat) what chances of success are there for these illiterate villagers? The Hitechchhu further expresses an opinion that though Government might institute a superficial enquiry into this matter no harm whatever would result to the said European, for the officers who will have to conduct the enquiry will in all probability turn out to be either the friends of this gentleman or such as stand in need of his favour. The public should therefore be satisfied with knowing the facts of the case and not hope for anything else.

Says that the policy of Government regarding forest conservancy has stopped the business of iron smelting in Shiral Mahál in Sátára.

The Pratod (54) of the 18th February says that the recent policy of Government regarding forest conservancy has proved a great obstacle to the development of the business of iron smelting which used to be carried on by certain hill tribes in Shiral Mahál, Táluka Válva, Zilla Sátára. The process of smelting iron-ores requires a great quantity of fuel, which was available before the forest policy of Government was introduced, but which it is now very difficult to get. The people are giving vent to all sorts of expressions of despair, and is it not very disgraceful to a Government that calls itself just that this should be so? It is to be hoped that Government will give the subject due consideration.

Finds fault with the nomination of the new Justices of the Peace.

The Yajdán Farast (127) of the 17th February observes:—The list of the new Justices of the Peace justifies the belief that the honour can be secured by resorting to flattery and similar tricks, no matter how worthless the recipient is. There are some names on this list which have never come to the notice of the public either in connection with some public movements or charities. It is inexplicable on what principle Government have conferred upon them the honour for which they are not fit. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments. The Káside Mumbai (109) of the 18th February complains of the injustice done to the large Mahomedan population of Bombay by the selection of very few members of that community for the honour, and expresses a hope that sufficient amends will be made hereafter. The Rást Goftár (115) of the 17th February says that though most of the persons that have been recently nominated Justices of the Peace are deserving of the honour, still some of them appear to have been selected for reasons which the public are not able to understand.]

His Excellency the Governor should not have accepted presents from Mulla Sáheb, the Head priest of the Borah community, as the latter is deeply involved in debt.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 17th February observes that Mulláji Sáheb, the Head priest of the Borah community, after a recent visit paid to him by His Excellency the Governor, presented about ten dishes containing green and dried fruit, silverware, silk articles, &c., to His Excellency and the same were accepted. Had His Excellency known that the Mulla makes wrong use of the money he gets from his followers and is largely involved in debt, he would not have accepted the present. Moreover it appears that His Excellency put several questions to the Mulláji which do not appear to have been directly answered by the latter. If the Mulla had made known all the particulars His Excellency would have rejected the present. But when His Excellency knows all the particulars, the publication of which we have deferred, he will have to repent of having paid the visit, and perhaps he will return the present which he has accepted. [The Deshi Mitră (96) of the 21st February expresses similar sentiments.]

Points out the advisability of furnishing mofussil newspapers with copies of proceedings in criminal and civil cases heard in the mofussil courts.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 21st February says:—No persons save those concerned in a particular suit can get copies of the proceedings of the criminal and civil courts in the mofussil. The mofussil papers are therefore unable to properly criticise the unjust acts of district officers. A short time ago a European asked an agriculturist near the village of Rakhial to give him water to drink. As the agriculturist did not give him water, an altercation arose between him and the European, and the former received a wound. As Mr. Morison, First Class Magistrate, was there on circuit, the agriculturist was immediately apprehended, tried and punished. He was acquitted on appeal by the Sessions Judge. We have been trying for more than a month to procure a copy of the judgments delivered by the Sessions Judge and the Magistrate in this case, but in vain. We offered money to the illiterate agriculturist to procure copies of the judgments, but he is afraid to ask for them. He also refuses to give us a mukhtyárnáma. Hence the public cannot know the grounds on which he was acquitted by the Sessions Judge. Now when the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Act will come into force, the way in which the jury, which will consist of a majority of Europeans in cases in which Europeans are concerned, arrives at its verdict cannot be known to the public unless copies thereof are furnished to mofussil newspapers on payment of the necessary fees. Several natives entertain a suspicion that European officers are partial to their countrymen. If the copies of proceedings were furnished to the mofussil papers, this suspicion would disappear and good feeling between the two races would increase. Moreover the mofussil papers are not so well off that they can resort to other means of getting them. Copies of the proceedings of civil courts should likewise be made accessible to newspapers. For the public and the Government can thereby sometimes come to know of the conduct of public officers. It is highly desirable that the Government of Lord Ripon should attend to this matter.

Comments on the decision of the High Court in the case of Gulábdás vs. Pattison.

Referring to the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Mr. Pattison of Surat, who was committed to that Court on a charge of attempting to murder one Mr. Gulábdás, the Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 17th February says:—The evidence adduced in this case was calculated to lead a man with ordinary legal knowledge to the conclusion that the accused would not go scotfree; and still the presiding Judge thought it fit to acquit Mr. Pattison. The result of this case was indeed somewhat strange. We do not feel so much for this particular case as for the precedent which such a decision is calculated to establish. The Hewett case and this are very similar, and we are much concerned at the tendency of the highest tribunal of justice to perversion. Now that all European accused will be tried by European Magistrates with the aid of juries, it is very natural that they should follow the example set by those in the principal court of justice. In view of these circumstances the Judges of the higher courts should set the best example to their inferiors.

Prays for the appointment of a stamp-vendor at Dehej in Táluka Vágra.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 21st February says that since the abolition of the post of stamp-vendor at Dehej in the Vágra Táluka four years ago, the people have been put to much inconvenience. As under the new rules it is necessary to write the names of purchasers on court-fee stamps, the inconvenience suffered by the mercantile classes has increased. This inconvenience will be removed by the appointment of a stamp-vendor.

Says that it is but just to allow the concession of trial by jury to natives.

The Arunodayă (14) of the 17h February says:—It is sometimes urged that the system of trial by jury is peculiarly appropriate to England and is not useful in India. But the truth is quite the opposite. The system of trials by juries has its origin in the fact that judicial tribunals are generally incapable of looking at the merits of a case with leniency and of examining the motives of the parties concerned. Looking from this standpoint the necessity for the existence of such a system is greater in countries where the judicial tribunals are presided over by foreigners than in those where justice is administered by the natives of the country. Such a system is indispensable in a country where the judiciary is composed of foreigners, who have no great chances of becoming acquainted with the manners and customs of the natives, their views, prejudices and languages. It thus becomes clear that if the system of trial by jury is necessary in England, it is much more so in a country like India, and it is erroneous to say that it is not useful in this country. What the natives demand is that in all sessions and warrant cases the accused should have a right to claim a trial with the aid of a jury. Such a right is enjoyed by the English and other foreign people, and it is simply unjust to deny it to the people of this country. It appears that even Russia, whose rule is generally represented to us as autocratic and tyrannical, has conceded this right of trial by jury to her subjects in Central Asia. As to the argument that it would be impossible to secure the services of a sufficient number of jurors who could intelligently examine the facts of a case, it must be admitted that very few jurors could be found who are conversant with the law of the country, and this state of things must continue so long as laws are enacted with the rapidity of the working of a mint. But what have jurors to do with law. It being an axiomatic truth that law never deviates from common sense and practice, it is sufficient if jurors are endowed with strong common sense. If a European Judge can weigh evidence satisfactorily, native jurors, being well-acquainted with the language of the people, can well discern the nicer points involved in the case. But even granting what the opponents of native jurors have to say, all that could be charged against native jurors would be the possible acquittal by them of an offender who might be really guilty. Even under the present circumstances several innocent persons might be unjustly punished by European judges on account of their ignorance of the manners and customs of the people, and it is therefore preferable that some guilty persons should escape than that some innocent persons should suffer. It is a well-known maxim of the English law that it is better that 100 guilty persons should escape than that one innocent man should suffer. A consideration of all these arguments makes it clear that the demand of natives for the right of trial by jury is not only unfair but that it is unjust to withhold it. The argument that the grant of such a concession would raise the conquered natives to the level of the conquering Europeans, which is brought forward by certain narrow-minded Europeans, is indeed irrefutable, and so long as those who are afraid of wounding the feelings of this class are in office, there is no doubt that all proposals of this nature will meet the fate of the Ilbert Bill. Some good may be expected to result either when we are favoured with a Governor General who would not fear to pursue the right path in spite of the opposition of the Europeans, or when, following the example of Europeans, we are prepared to force a Governor General to do us right. We hope we shall never be reduced to the necessity of following the latter course. [The Shubh Suchak of the 15th February also refers to the same question, and expresses a hope that the invidous distinction that has yet been allowed to remain between Europeans and natives in the matter of the concession of trial by jury will be removed during the administration of Lord Ripon.]

Recommends that jurors should be paid for serving upon juries.

The Yajdán Parast (127) of the 17th February recommends that the heavy list of jurors in Bombay should be cut down to about three hundred individuals, who should be selected for their education and general abilities. Jurors should also be paid for the days on which they are called to serve upon juries, as is done in England. When jurors find that they can claim pecuniary compensation for the time they are taken away from their own business, they will cease from evincing an unwillingness to serve upon juries, and will not try to evade the service of the Sheriff's summons.

Complains against the system of locking up juries in murder cases.

In a paragraph headed "Jurymen's Grievances," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 18th January says:—The rule that juries in murder cases should be locked up during the night so long as the trial is not finished is an instance of one of those freaks of law which the Legislature has sanctioned without laymen being able to understand either the reason or the practical value of the thing. It is incomprehensible that the rule should not be observed in other cases, where sometimes there is a chance of the jury being misled by what its members may hear outside the Court. It is ridiculous to lock up a jury in a case in which the public take no more than very ordinary interest and where all that is concerned is the life of a poor man who can never dream of buying its favour or influencing its verdict by anything in his power. The rule as to locking up should be enforced only where the trial is one of great public interest, and even then where there is some probability of a jury being influenced in its verdict by anything the members may hear outside the Court. It should not be difficult to alter the law on the subject. The Judges of the High Court are of course powerless in the matter. They can only enforce the law as it exists.

Complains of the delay which occurs in getting cash for currency notes at the Bombay Currency Office.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 22nd February states that there were formerly five shroffs in the Bombay Currency Office for cashing currency notes. Latterly their number has been reduced to three, and since then great delay occurs in cashing the notes that are presented by a large number of applicants for c ash

One has to wait for an hour to get cash for notes of such small amounts as twenty-five or thirty rupees, while applicants for larger amounts of cash have to wait for a much longer period.

Complaint of the barbers of the Sayadpura quarter of the city of Surat.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 17th February states that the barbers of the Sayadpura quarter of the city of Surat complain that when Military troops require the services of torch-bearers, they are apprehended and made to do the work. A larger number of persons than are actually required for the work are apprehended in the morning and given in charge of the Military authorities, who keep them under a guard and do not permit them to return home to take their meals. The complainants are thus kept under guard the whole day and night and suffer much from starvation and cold. Early in the morning of the next day those whose services are required are retained and the rest are discharged. Such of them as accompany the troops are dismissed soon after daybreak without being remunerated for their services. The Mitră requests the authorities concerned to afford relief to the complainants.

Points out the advisability of opening a village post office at Dehej, Táluka Vágra.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 21st February says that the people of Dehej in the Vágra Táluka are put to great inconvenience and trouble on account of the absence of a post office. 400 to 500 letters are posted from and received in this village in one month. Vágra is situated at a great distance from Dehej. The postman comes at present only twice a week; but Dehej is the largest village in the táluka, nay, it is even larger than Vágra. As the local merchants carry on transactions with those in Gogha, Bhávnagar, Verával, Pátan, Div, Navsári, Bulsár and other places, they find the present arrangement very inconvenient. If a village post office is established at Dehej, the postal income will surely increase. Moreover, as the services of rural messengers can be engaged for Rs. 5 a month, the maintenance of an office will not be very expensive. It is to be hoped that the authorities concerned will attend to this suggestion.

Points out the necessity of improving the new road near the Borwali station.

A correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 18th February regrets to observe that the improvement so badly needed in the new road near the Borwali station is yet allowed to remain in abeyance, while the necessity of commencing work in connection with the road is growing stronger. It is true that Government have long since recognised the advisability of extending the road. In order to give the trade of the island of Dhárávi a proper impetus, the authorities, it is agreed on all hands, must do justice to the communication referred to by incurring an expenditure on its account. If they should grudge the necessary outlay there can be no doubt that the amount already expended will produce no corresponding results. The island of Dhárávi, for which this road communication is intended, is just now displaying activity in the way of industries, which will, it is apprehended, receive a check if the work of improvement in the direction indicated comes to a standstill.

Local Self-government.

Appointment of Messrs. Jagjiwandás Khusháldás and Umedrám Anandrám as Chairmen of the Surat Municipal and District Boards respectively.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 17th February approves of the contemplated appointment of Ráo Báhádur Jagjiwandás Khusháldás as Chairman of the Surat Municipality and of Mr. Umedrám Anandrám as Chairman of the Surat District Board. The Mitră is much gratified to hear that the Bombay Government wishes to allow the municipalities of Poona, Ahmedabad and Surat a constitution made up of elected and nominated members in the proportion of two-thirds and one-third. Such an arrangement is not fraught with danger inasmuch as the Municipal and District Boards will remain under the strict control of the Collector-president. [The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 21st February is not quite satisfied with this arrangement. It desires the curtailment of the wide powers at present enjoyed by the District Collectors in connection with municipal affairs.]

Education.

Says that aborigines, low-caste Hindus and the poorer classes of society only and not the nobility and Mahomedans should be given special facilities for educating themselves.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 18th February reviews the suggestions of the Education Commission on the subject of the educational wants of the backward classes, and remarks :—The classes which according to the Commission require special encouragement are (1) the Nobility, (2) Mahomedans, (3) Aborigines, (4) Low-caste Hindus, (5) Poorer classes of society. The Commission thus take a comprehensive view of all classes of people who have until now been indifferent to the benefits of education. But if a scheme of special encouragement is to be applied to the classes named, we wonder where Government is to stop and from what source the necessary funds are to be got, unless the grants at present obtained by the advanced classes are curtailed. It is, we think, physically impossible that all classes of people should progress equally in education. Further if such progress is to be secured by artificial means it will require an amount of State patronage which Government can ill spare. There can be no two opinions as to the necessity of promoting education among the nobility of India. The responsible positions which the sons of our princes and Chiefs are called upon to fill, and the influence for good or evil they are likely to exert on others, make it highly important that their minds should be well cultured; and it is the duty of a parental Government to see that its feudatory princes are enlightened. This duty becomes all the more pressing when it is considered that our princes and Chiefs have been notably apathetic in matters of education, and have a traditional dislike for every form of culture. If therefore the princes and Chiefs will not move of their own accord, it is incumbent upon the Paramount Power to move and induce them to take delight in education. The Commission therefore recommend that special colleges or schools for the sons and relatives of Native Chiefs and noblemen should be established where such institutions do not now exist. We cordially approve of the suggestion. These institutions need not be a charge upon the Imperial revenues, and will not therefore interfere with the distribution of the educational grant. The plea for special protection for the Mahomedan community does not however seem equally plausible. But it was in regard to that community that the complaints were the loudest. The leaders of the Mahomedan community in the different provinces seemed bent upon moving heaven and earth to obtain a recognition of their claims to special treatment. A careful study of the facts and figures relating to the subject will however, we think, satisfy any reasonable observer that the grievances of the Mahomedan brethren were greatly exaggerated, and that there was no need for going into hysterics over their educational backwardness. The community as a whole has, it must be admitted, somewhat lagged behind in the race for education, but that is the fault of the community itself. The system of public instruction introduced by Government is no more answerable for it than it is for the backwardness of the lower classes of Hindus. It is the advanced portion of the community itself that must make an effort to induce the less advanced to educate themselves. It is, we think, unreasonable to ask Government to provide out of the public funds any special facilities for the education of Mahomedan youth. All that Government can in fairness be expected to do is to supply educational appliances for Mahomedans to an extent equal to that for other communities. But any special system of encouragement by way of separate scholarships and free studentships and all the variety of facilities recommended by the Commission is, we think, entirely unnecessary and unjust. Further, whatever reason there was for special treatment some years ago, none exists now. A reference to the statistical information on the subject shows that there is a steady increase in the number of school-going Mahomedans and that no further special facilities are necessary. The cases of aborigines and low-caste Hindus are slightly different. These classes have not only no relish for education, but are generally unable to help themselves. Their education is certainly necessary for the good of the nation, and some special provision should be made for them. With respect to low-caste Hindus the Commission suggest that the principle of their admission into all public schools should be affirmed. In regard to this we cannot dispute the reasonableness of the principle, but we venture to think that the prejudices of a large community, ignorant as it is, deserve to be respected. The Commission admit that the prejudices are strong and wide-spread and are not altogether unreasonable. We trust Government will not wound the susceptibilities of many for seeing abstract justice done to a few. The true remedy lies, we think, in the formation of separate schools and in the encouragement of missionary effort. Some inconvenience may perhaps be felt by a few lads advanced beyond their times. But in the long run it will be safer and more generous if Government respect the sentiments of high class Hindus by not forcing upon them unwelcome company. Such prejudices are not uncommon even in civilized Europe, and ignorant India may well be excused for indulging in them. At all events such unpopular measures may be allowed in extreme cases as a last resort. Any wanton disregard of popular prejudice should certainly be checked by Government. With regard to the last class the Commission do not make any specific recommendations. In our opinion also it is scarcely a proper case for special treatment.

Suggestions to the Bombay University regarding Sir Mangaldás Nathubhái Travelling Fellowship.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 18th February dwells at considerable length on the necessity of making an amount of travelling indispensable to qualify a man for a certain University status, and says that the object can in the present circumstances be partially attained by effecting certain modifications in the conditions under which the Mangaldás Nathubhái Travelling Fellowship is conferrable. The principal condition is that the person on whom the fellowship is conferred must travel in Europe. This condition, though good in itself, generally acts as a deterrent to Hindus, for whom alone the fellowship has been created, and thus the funds sometimes remain unavailed of, and the objects of the donors remain unaccomplished. If therefore this condition is a little relaxed in a manner to make a travel in India sufficient for the purposes of the fellowship, we do not think the result will be less beneficial. We admit that a soujourn on the European Continent is calculated to bring in a treasure of knowledge, but if this object is not generally accomplished, why should not the available funds be used in the direction indicated? We have another suggestion to make in connection with this subject, which is that persons taking advantage of this fellowship should be required after travelling either in Europe or India to give their fellowmen the benefit of their knowledge and experience by publishing an account of their travels in the form of a pamphlet written in a plain and agreeable style. It is to be hoped that the University will consider this subject.

Complaints regarding the inconvenience caused by the delay in paying the salaries of school-masters in Peta A'mbegaon, Táluka Khed, Zilla Poona.

A correspondent of the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 18th February complains that school-masters in Peta A'mbegaon, Táluka Khed, Zilla Poona, receive their pay in the second or third month after it is due, and that great inconvenience is thus caused to these generally low-paid servants of Government. The attention of the Educational authorities is requested to this complaint.

Railways.

Does not approve of the memorial prepared by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce on the subject of the extension of railways in India.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 17th February says:—That greater activity in the extension of railways in the country is needed cannot be denied. The want of more railways to open up the country has been keenly felt since the appalling mortality consequent on recurrent famines with which the people and the Government have become so painfully familiar. But it is when the ways and means are practically considered in connection with the economic consequences of railway financing that formidable difficulties present themselves to the view. Granted all the advantages which have been urged in the second paragraph of the Chamber's memorial, can it be truly said that it is possible in the existing condition of India to have railroads constructed at the rate of 2,000 to 3,000 miles per annum? The comparison with the railways of the United States is utterly untenable. The economic conditions of the two countries, except as far as the soil is concerned (and even then there is a difference) are almost wholly different. The most essential part of the question is the economic result of increased construction of railways. Now if these were to be considered per se it might not take an hour to convince even the veriest tyro in railway matters that they are an unmixed blessing. In our opinion the whole question of the construction of new railways ought to have been approached from one point and one only and that the financial one. All the members of the Chamber admitted that there was no accumulation of capital in the country for the desired object. Now it is one thing to wish for a boon and another thing to have or even to deserve it. It is one thing to urge the construction of 2,000 miles of railways per annum at a cost involving an outlay of 15 millions sterling at a reasonable computation, and another thing to raise that capital from year to year at least for the next ten years. Is the Chamber prepared to show to the authorities how that capital can be annually raised, how the interest thereon can be paid, how the investment may really benefit the State and the people, supposing that the State undertakes the construction? Or supposing that private enterprise is to be employed is the Chamber prepared with suggestions as to the conditions on which private capital can be had for the next ten years consecutively? It is easy to say that capital will be forthcoming. It may or may not be so. Very much will depend on the general condition of trade in the whole world in any given year, on the monetary condition of certain Continental States which are now demonetising the silver currency, also that of the United States, and on the annual production of silver in the world. The subject is so vast and so involved especially in connection with the economic results to the agriculturists at large, inclusive of the effect on prices of food and wages, that it is impossible to treat it in one article. But we cannot refrain from pointing out just now certain fallacies that occurred to us while studying the memorial and the speeches made thereon. First it may be fairly asked whether increased construction of railways necessarily means increased wealth in this country. What have been the economic consequences of railway finance and the trade developed by railways to the bulk of the population of India, we mean the agriculturists? We must not blink this vital question. The impoverished condition of the peasantry is now notorious. The attempt of the Supreme Government to grapple with this agrarian problem has been hitherto unsuccessful; at its root lies the whole policy of land revenue. Now the mercantile classes are on the one hand in favour of extricating the peasantry from their embarrassed condition and on the other they are in favour of increased railway construction. Do they perceive that the latter course will to a material extent reduce the agriculturists to the condition from which they now think of raising them? Admit that the State does all by loans and agricultural banks to relieve the peasantry. Admit that the land revenue will be so adjusted as to lighten the assessment. Will these two causes conduce to the prosperity of the agriculturist, if railway construction on an immense scale goes on in every part of the country at the same time? What is the practical experience of the past? Are any accurate statistics forthcoming to show that the 142 millions of capital expended on the 10,000 miles of railway since 1853 have led to the accumulation of capital in the country? Is it not a fact on the contrary that with all the profits now earned the net interest on the capital is only 3·9 per cent.? Government pays on an average 4¼ per cent. interest on its public loans. So that even now the State suffers a loss of ·35 per cent., apart from any so-called railway wealth accruing to the people at large. On this point, namely the accumulation of wealth, the Chamber's memorial seems to be inconsistent because it says that there is no capital in India to speak of. If so, the Chamber's assertion that increased railway construction will lead to increased wealth among the people receives its own quietus. But there is yet the other side of the same question. Have not the economic results of the existing railway system been mischievous to the country at large? The Chamber will say "no." It will cite the authority of Sir John Strachey and other empiric financiers to support its statement. But facts are hard things. And the facts which the powerful pen of Mr. O'Connell has disclosed in his book on "The Economic Revolution of India" show that India has suffered much from past railway finance. It has simply drained the resources of this country. Had the drain which has been going on by way of interest and remittances of railway profits to England for the last 30 years been stopped, had the monies lain in India, the people would have been more prosperous and the Government in a much better position to-day to borrow indigenous capital for increased railway construction. Foreigners alone have hitherto been benefited. Let us put this simple question to the Chamber— Would England have gained by borrowing all its railway capital from France and by importing French skilled labour and superior agency? How would England and the English have found themselves to-day by such a relation with France? Now apply the same principle to India and the reality of the disastrous economic result of 100 millions sterling of foreign capital invested for railway purposes in India will stand revealed. It must be understood that we are not against increased railway construction. We desire it as much as the Chamber. What we urge is that the question of ways and means should now be fully considered by the light of past results and the present condition of India. [The Native Opinion (10) of the 17th expresses somewhat similar sentiments. The Satyă Shodhak (60) of the same date says that extension of railways will not be beneficial to India unless effected with the assistance of native capital and unless indigenous labour and materials are used for the purpose. The Yajdán Parast (127) of the same date does not approve of the proposals of the Chamber of Commerce as being calculated to entail additional burdens on India which she is not able to bear.]

Comments on His Excellency the Governor's remarks about a misconception regarding the nature of the "tribute" paid by India to England.

Commenting on His Excellency the Governor's speech on the occasion of the opening ceremony of the Western Deccan Railway, the Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 17th February quotes His Excellency's remarks about the mistaken notions of the Indian press regarding the nature of the "tribute" that is said to be paid by India to England, and observes:—These remarks are apparently very plain and considerate; but they would have had the desired effect if they had been meant to beguile illiterate school boys. If, however, His Excellency labours under the belief that all natives are as good as school boys, then we take leave to say that it is wrong. Although natives may not be so conversant with logic as to represent things in other than their true light, still they can certainly distinguish milk from white water (in which corn has been washed). The charge of absurdity brought by His Excellency against natives was however perfectly justified. Because if they had not been foolish, how could they have been beguiled by the tricks of foreigners? But in charging them with wickedness of mind His Excellency acted in the spirit of the Bransons and Keswicks of Calcutta. Natives are not mistaken in calling the money that goes from India to England by the name of "tribute." To do so is foolish only according to the strange logic emanating from the heated brains of an extreme patriot like the Governor. His Excellency asks how the money that is taken by Europeans as the gains of their service can be called "tribute." We admit that Europeans toil very hard in this country and carry away money as the remuneration for their labour. But is India in need of those hardworking servants? Cannot persons be found in the population of 25 krors endowed with the qualifications necessary for the performance of the work done by these Europeans? If they are available, what is it but to levy a tribute to feed Europeans at the sacrifice of such qualified natives? If the English had not been ruling India, would anybody have sought their assistance in the solution of administrative and other difficulties? Of course not. Who then with quiet brains will say that the money that is drained to England in the shape of the salaries and pensions of these people is not "tribute," and that too a very heavy one? Secondly as regards the interest on borrowed capital. It is not the case that the people of India will not be prepared to advance large sums of money on light rates of interest, but it is to be considered whether the authorities will accommodate native money-lenders in the same way as they would accommodate people of their own caste, colour, and country. If then Government are determined upon utilizing English capital, what straightforward man will say that the money going to England in the shape of interest on that capital is not a sort of tribute? Thirdly as regards the articles of European manufacture purchased in England. Are these articles such as cannot be produced in this country? No. But would Government adopt the same measures in the case of natives as they do for encouraging their countrymen? Though the import duties on Manchester goods have been remitted, the duties on Indian goods stand. From this it is clear that Government are instrumental in forcing English goods on us and in making Indian goods dearer than the English. Looking from this standpoint all the money that goes to England is nothing else than a "tribute" levied in different ways. Of course it is true that all the trouble taken by a conquering nation would go in vain if it did not secure compensation in the shape of a tribute. All nations that have hitherto conquered others have not done so simply with the view of satisfying the cravings of their warlike propensities, and we would not charge England with having done anything unnatural if it took some tribute from us with or without our consent. But to be prepared to pass oneself as thoroughly innocent after doing everything is very strange. Such conduct only shows one's ingratitude. In conclusion we would suggest to His Excellency the Governor that in proving a strange belief which has taken firm ground in him, he should not like low-minded people make use of mean words. A sound assertion can be proved to be true by various demonstrations and does not require the use of bad words. [The Shiváji (63) of the 15th February expresses very similar sentiments. The Mahrátta (2) of the 17th February says:—His Excellency the Governor does not like that the annual remittance to England on account of the construction of railways should be called a tribute. If political economists like Mill and eminent financiers like Sir John Strachey have deemed it fit on principle to call it a tribute, we do not know what reasons His Excellency has to call it otherwise. Sir James is, we admit, a great man in the Presidency he rules, but the persons above-mentioned are greater still in the provinces specially assigned them, although he styled them grumblers in his speech. Tribute is a technical term of political economy and must be used in the sense attached to it. It is a pity that Sir James should interpret the term only as a burden upon India. If it really meant so we would never hesitate to say that it was all the same if capital were borrowed either in England or in India. As for the services rendered His Excellency says, "I hope that India gets her money's worth for these." This remark too is capable of calling forth no less adverse comments from the public. The absurdity of the remark becomes pretty manifest when it is seen that even among the natives there are persons who are capable of performing as worthy and as efficient service as any distinguished public servant of the angelic race.]

Comments on the terms of the contract entered into by Government with the Western Deccan Railway Company.

The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 19th February, while discussing the terms that have been agreed upon between Government and the Western Deccan Railway Company, remarks:—It is difficult to make out the lines on which Government intend to act in connection with the financial aspect of the schemes for the construction of new railways in India. On the one hand they have been declaring their firm resolve that new railways will not be constructed in India whether solely or partially with the aid of State funds, and that there will thus be no addition either to the national debt or to the taxes levied on the people; while on the other hand they are seen to follow a different line of policy. Our rulers having already resolved not to undertake any railways on their own responsibility have represented to the public their intention of entrusting all the work to private enterprise and of rendering only such assistance as they can without entailing an additional burden on the people. Having promulgated such views Government have given the contract of the Poona-Belgaon Railway on terms which render an addition to the public debt and to the taxes on the people imperatively necessary even in the current year. The authorities ought to settle once for all their line of policy, and should make it publicly known both in England and in India that they are not willing to grant any concessions in future of the nature of those allowed in this instance. When English capitalists know this for certain they will come forward to try their chance in this country without expecting any assistance from Government. It will not matter if some years elapse before any capitalists come forward. The progress of India will not be at a standstill in the absence of railways. The authorities must hold their own with firmness for some time and they will reap the good fruits of such a policy in a short time.

Municipalities.

Municipal affairs at Kaira.

The Kaira Vartamán (107) of the 20th February says that instead of abolishing or lightening the burden of house-tax on the people, the local municipality has levied a duty on carts laden with fuel and on tiles. These duties are very obnoxious to the people, for their means of livelihood are limited. The Municipal Commissioners are subservient to Government officials. The President knows that the inhabitants are tired of the house-tax and the imposition of these new taxes has increased their miseries. The municipal expenditure should be reduced to meet the deficit that would result from the removal of these odious levies.

Native States.

Comments on the silence of the Viceroy in regard to the restoration of Berár on the occasion of the installation of the Nizám.

The Maháráshtrá Mitrá (41) of the 21st February says that the history of the cession of Berár by the Nizám to the English and of the results of subsequent attempts of Sir Salar Jang to bring about its restoration, warranted the public in cherishing a hope that some light would be thrown on the question on the occasion of the installation of the young Nizám. But the studious silence observed by the Viceroy in regard to that question on the occasion of the investiture of the young ruler of Hyderabad with powers of administration has given food for various conjectures. Looking at this matter from a standpoint of justice it was necessary that the province of Berár should have been restored to the Nizám on the occasion of his installation in accordance with the word pledged by Her Majesty the Queen by virtue of the proclamation of 1857. The Nizám of Hyderabad rendered very useful assistance to the British Government in 1857, and it would not seem proper to repay his kindness by such a territory-devouring policy. The British Government should render an account of the receipts and disbursements of the administration of Berár ever since it was ceded to them, and should claim such balance as may still be due to them. But it would be an act of open highhandedness if they were to decline to render an account and at the same time to decline to restore the province. If the British Government had no desire to restore Berár to its original possessor, they should not have given expression to words that signified a contrary intention. Such a policy would have effectually stopped the mouths of the people who would have ranked this instance among others in which Indian States have been annexed to the British dominions. What does such a policy of duplicity mean? If the authorities had not replied to the representations of Sir Salar Jang to say that the province of Berár would be restored on the Nizám arriving at his years of discretion, we and our contemporaries would not have been under the painful necessity of indulging in animadversions upon the conduct of a Government that boasts of its justice. We maintain that if Lord Ripon had made room in his prolix speech for a couple of sentences regarding Berár, it would have served to soothe the suceptibilities of the people and enabled them to hold patience in the matter for a further length of time. The history of the Berár question shows clearly that the province was not seized by the British simply in liquidation of the expenses of the contingent force, but that the seizure was an act of as much highhandedness as injustice. Even granting that the former was the case, why should no account be rendered of the outstandings of the original dues? We suggest that Lord Ripon should consider the subject after fully acquainting himself with its past history. The treaties and covenants between the two Governments should be perused and the stain that has darkened the British administration should be removed. [The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 18th February expresses somewhat similar sentiments regarding the Berár question, and also comments on the omission of Her Majesty the Queen to allude to India in her speech on the opening of the last session of Parliament. The writer observes that both these incidents are significant inasmuch as they show what position India holds among the dependencies of the crown of England, and exhorts the native public to strive to make their existence felt by organizing movements that may show that the people of this country are not altogether wanting in spirit and pluck, and thus lead to a proper consideration of all their just demands. The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 17th February expresses sentiments similar to those of the Maháráshtră Mitră (41) and urges a prompt settlement of the Berár question.]

The present condition of the treasury of the State of Hyderabad.

In noticing the report that Government have resolved to depute the Accountant General of Bombay and the Deputy Accountant General of Bengal for the purpose of examining the accounts and the actual condition of the treasury of the Hyderabad State, the Rást Goftár (115) of the 17th February observes that this report leads to the presumption that His Excellency the Viceroy suspects that the condition of the Nizám's treasury is anything but satisfactory. The public have entertained a similar misgiving ever since the time of the late Sir Salar Jung not on account of the wretched condition of the State but on account of the extravagant expenditure of the administration. Of all the Native States in the country Hyderabad is the richest, the most extensive, and at the same time the most extravagant. Several State officials have grown rich at the expense of the State; several persons receive large salaries and annuities for rendering no service to the State; and large sums are spent in intrigues. It is desirable therefore that an enquiry should be instituted in this matter. Relations of noblemen and Jághirdárs also receive large annuities. This extravagance has been in existence since the administration of the late Sir Salar Jung and has been a dark blot on the administration of that statesman. It is true that some expenses have to be incurred to make the State wheel go on uninterruptedly, but this policy has been followed in Hyderabad in a manner to lead the State to the extreme verge of extravagance. It ought also to be ascertained how far English officials profit by this policy of extravagance over and above the charges incurred by the State on account of the supply of provisions, festivities and entertainments. Leaving these apart what is the remedy for the other secret expenses which are ruining the State like the disease of consumption? In these circumstances if the Viceroy has really formed the determination which is attributed to him of instituting a thorough enquiry into the financial condition of the State of Hyderabad, it is indeed a wise one and we wish that it is fully acted upon.

Mr. Cordery, the Resident at Hyderabad, should not be permitted to go on leave of absence without satisfactorily answering the serious accusations preferred against him by the Statesman.

In alluding to the telegram that Mr. Cordery, the Resident at Hyderabad, shortly proceeds on furlough, the Rást Goftár (115) of the 17th February observes that the charges preferred by the Statesman against the Resident are serious, and some Anglo-Indian newspapers have assured the public that a satisfactory explanation of them will be forthcoming. Some of these journals say that Mr. Cordery will prosecute the Statesman for libel: others assert that he is desirous to proceed against the libeller, but that the Government of India do not permit him to do so because the Viceroy has full confidence in him and will accept his defence against the accusations preferred against him. The public have been anxiously waiting to see this explanation; and since the report about the approaching departure of Mr. Cordery has been circulated, they are very desirous that in order to put a stop to a public scandal he should not be allowed to go before furnishing a satisfactory explanation. It is true that Mr. Cordery obtained leave to go home long before the accusations were preferred and that he enjoys the confidence of Lord Ripon; but that cannot be taken as a good ground for letting him go without proving to the public that the charges are unfounded.

Government are responsible for the mismanagement of the Morvi State by Mr. Fernandez.

The Gujaráti (101) of the 17th February observes that the explanation rendered by Mr. Fernandez about the alleged mismanagement of the funds of the State of Morvi during his administration is unsatisfactory. It is said that the Chief was unwilling to entrust the administration to Mr. Fernandez, but was obliged to appoint him on being pressed by Government to do so. If this be true, Government are responsible for the mismanagement complained of.

Retracts the charges brought against the Kárbhári of Janjira in the Kesari of the 5th February.

The Kesari (36) of the 19th February says that on further enquiry it finds that the charges brought against the Kárbhári of Janjira in its issue of the 5th idem, reported at page 16 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 9th February 1884, are unfounded. [A correspondent of the Sharabh (61) of the 20th February also contradicts the charges in question.]

Berár Affairs.

Disapproves of the reduction in the period of the vacation enjoyed by the Civil Courts in Berár.

The Pramod Sindhu (53) of the 18th February says that the change that has been recently effected in the period of the vacation hitherto enjoyed by the Civil Courts in Berár, by which the period has been reduced to one month from 15th May to 15th June, is calculated to cause great inconvenience to all concerned. The period is short and the dates are inconvenient. The heat in Berár is very severe and is at its height from April till the end of May. It is very troublesome for officers to work and for parties to attend at such a time. Besides this change has deprived those that are not inhabitants of Berár of an opportunity of visiting their native places. We are of opinion that the Berár authorities should reconsider the subject and arrange to allow a vacation of at least one and a half month from 15th April.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
28th February 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Appointments:
- Approval of the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Mandlik as a member of the Viceregal Legislative Council 6
- Approval of the appointment of Messrs. Mandlik and Telang to the Supreme and Local Legislative Councils respectively ... 6

Currency Office, Bombay: Complaint that great delay occurs in issuing cash for currency notes at the— 10

Duty levied on gold and silver ware imported into England: Advocacy of a reduction in the— 3

Forest conservancy: Expression of opinion that the policy of Government regarding —has stopped the business of iron-smelting in Shiral Mahál in Sátára 8

Foundation of the British rule in India: Expression of opinion that an equitable administration of justice will strengthen the —more than anything else 3

Highhandedness on the part of a European officer in the mofussil: Notice of an act of— 7

Impressment of labour: Complaint from the barbers of the Sayadpura quarter of the city of Surat 11

Judicial matters:
- Advisability of furnishing mofussil newspapers with copies of proceedings in criminal and civil cases heard in the mofussil courts. 8
- Comments on the decision of the High Court in the case of Gulabdás vs. Pattison 9
- Prayer for the appointment of a stamp-vendor at Dehej in Táluka Vágra 9

Juries:
- Complaint against the system of locking up — in murder cases ... 10
- Expression of opinion that it is but just to allow the concession of trial by jury to Natives 9
- Recommendation that jurors should be paid for serving upon — ... 10

Justices of the Peace: Comments on the qualifications of the new— ... 8

License-tax: Suggestion for the abolition of the —and the re-imposition of import duties on European cotton goods... 6

Loyalty and love of the people of India: Expression of opinion that the — are undeniable 3

Postal matters: Advisability of opening a village post office at Dehej, Táluka Vágra 11

Presents: Expression of opinion that His Excellency the Governor should not have accepted — from Mulla Sáheb, the Head priest of the Borah community, as the latter is deeply involved in debt 8

Roads: Necessity of improving the new road near the Borwali station on the B. B. & C. I. Railway 11

War in the Soudan:
- Condemnation of the permission said to have been granted to the Mahdi to carry on slave traffic 6
- Disapproval of the rumoured employment of Indian troops in the—. 4

PART II.—Local Self-government—

Surat Municipal and District Boards: Approval of the contemplated appointment of Messrs. Jagjiwandás Khusáldás and Umedrám Anandrám as Chairman of the —respectively 11

PART III—Education—

Bombay University: Suggestions to the —regarding Sir Mangaldás Nathubhái Travelling Fellowship 13

Delay in paying the salaries of school-masters in Peta A′mbegaon, Táluka Khed, Zilla Poona: Complaint regarding the inconvenience caused by the — 13

Special facilities for education: Expression of opinion that aborigines, low-caste Hindus and the poorer classes of society only and not the nobility and Mahomedans should be given— 12

Page.

PART IV.—Railways—

Contract entered into by Government with the Western Deccan Railway Company : Comments on the terms of the— 16
His Excellency the Governor's remarks about the misconception regarding the nature of the "tribute" paid by India to England : Comments on— 15
Memorial prepared by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce on the subject of the extension of railways in India : Disapproval of the— ... 13

PART V.—Municipalities—

Kaira : Municipal affairs at— 17

PART VI.—Native States—

Hyderabad :

Comments on the silence of the Viceroy in regard to the restoration of Berár on the occasion of the installation of the Nizám ... 17
Expression of opinion that Mr. Cordery, the Resident at —should not be permitted to go on leave without satisfactorily answering the serious accusations preferred against him by the Statesman ... 18
The present condition of the treasury of the State of—... ... 18
Janjira : Retraction of the charges brought against the Kárbhári of—in the Kesari of the 5th February 19
Morvi : Expression of opinion that Government are responsible for the mismanagement of the—State by Mr. Fernandez 18

PART VII.—Berár Affairs—

Vacation enjoyed by the Civil Courts in Berár : Disapproval of the reduction in the period of the— 19

BOMBAY : PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

INDIA OFFICE
25 [illegible] 1894

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 1st March 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Mahéráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Mahéráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 1092

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that England's glory and India's welfare are identical.

The Ahmedabad Samáchár (85) of the 27th February, in an article headed, "The glory of England consists in doing good to India," observes that all right-thinking men cannot help remarking that England's glory and India's welfare go hand in hand. India is not a small dependency of the British crown. It is much larger in extent than England, and is very much superior to the latter in respect of fertility, climate and other things. Even Englishmen have to admit that much of the greatness, splendour and civilization of England depends on this country. England has profitted not a little by Indian learning. Indian sepoys are not inferior to those of England in point of bravery, and this they have shown on many occasions. Moreover, they are free from those vices which beset English soldiers and can surpass them in heroism. How then can it not be glorious to rule over such a country? Though it is somewhat difficult to rule over a barbarous country, still the difficulty is not as great as in the case of a civilized one. And it is undoubtedly honourable to do a thing which is difficult. For this reason England is respected by other nations for her government of India. It is the duty of the sovereign to regard the welfare of his subjects as his own. If this view were always kept in mind and were acted up to what benefits would result? India would be blessed and England would be loudly praised. This thought dwells in the mind of Lord Ripon as is indicated by the reply His Lordship gave to the address presented to him by Sir T. Mádhav Ráo at Madras. The Samáchár here quotes Lord Ripon's reply and remarks:—If these thoughts dwelt in the minds of subordinate officers of Government, what an amount of good would be done. May God inspire those who hold authority in this country with these ideas!

Makes remarks in connection with the occupation of Merv by Russia.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 24th February observes that the admission made by Mr. Gladstone that Russia was sending an officer to Merv to administer the country, is confirmatory of the intelligence that the Muscovite has gained ascendancy in that country, and gives a practical lie to all the previous bland assurances of Russia that her policy in Central Asia would not affect British interests in that quarter. The establishment of permanent supremacy over the people of Merv means the possession of great facilities for menacing the British influence in Afghánistan whenever Russia may feel disposed to do so. In this way the advance now made is an acquisition of solid strength which is more valuable to Russia than all the gain secured to the British by their Afghan policy. It is time for the British Government to awaken from its sleep, to shake off its lethargy, and to try earnestly to understand clearly what Russia really means to do, and what step she proposes to take as the next move in her dubious course. The whole question of the state of affairs in Central Asia and of British relations with Persia, unless carefully watched and considered before long with a view to its proper adjustment, will probably not fail to prove in the end, and that at no distant date, to be one of serious inconvenience and anxiety, if not of positive annoyance to Great Britain and India. [The Káside Mumbai (109) of the 22nd and the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 26th February express similar sentiments.]

Necessity for reforming the Indian Civil Service.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 24th February says:—Facts are accumulating every day which go to prove conclusively the necessity of thoroughly reforming the Civil Service. It is members of this service that bring on evils; it is they that expose them, and it is they that at last cure them. Thus the whole work lies in the hands of the Civilians. Government do not see but through their eyes; Government refuse to listen but through Civilian ears; Government like not to be advised but by their district officers who are Civilians. If this service is improved, and if more conscientious and honest men are put in, we are sure that before the next few years contentment and happiness will once more begin to dawn upon the land. The latest evidence on the point is afforded by a letter published in the columns of the Pioneer. A Civilian friend of the correspondent writes to him and exposes the mischief of the Survey and Settlement Department. The mischief, so far as we can judge, is due to an honest mistake and inordinate desire for official Baháduri on the part of Colonel Anderson, a representative gentleman of the creed of military officers who claim for themselves a monopoly of sound sense and infallible reasoning. The correspondent clearly shows what Sir G. Wingate, the founder of the Bombay Revenue System, did and wanted to do; and thus exposes how Colonel Anderson perverted the whole system to the discredit of Government and to the lasting misery of the Bombay peasantry. Sir George Wingate first left sufficient to the Kunbi to live upon and then allowed the Revenue officer to put in his hand. But in doing so he also provided the utmost limit. He required the Revenue officer to proceed to a particular point and no farther. The limit thus placed upon the greedy Revenue officer was that assessment to be levied should be 50 per cent. of the surplus profits left after providing for the full living of the Kunbi. It was with the object of determining this surplus profit that Sir George classified the lands, but in doing the work of classification he never failed to consult the Patel and Kulkarni of the village which was being surveyed and settled. Colonel Anderson only took up the work of classification and left out the other operations which were the essentials of the success of the admirable scheme of Sir George, and we know the result. The Revenue officers do not care to go into the subject and nobody can therefore bring to light the untold misery of the Kunbi. Mr. Caird and the Famine Commissioners did notice the Civilian's apathy and ignorance but nothing appears to have been done. Nothing short of a thorough reform of the service can improve the state of things.

Points out the necessity of reforming the constitution of Indian Legislative Councils and approves of the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Mandlik to a seat in the Supreme Legislative Council.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 24th February says:—The scandal of the day is the work of the Legislative Councils. The constitutional principles on which the Councils were formed in 1861 were no doubt most admirably fitted for those days, but during the last two decades people have advanced so much in political education that the present Councils are looked upon as a mere farce. The appointments of non-official native gentlemen do not generally satisfy the people and the way in which the business of the Councils is conducted is regularly condemned. The officials form the majority and the non-officials are always in a minority. The President then and there sits in judgment on the performance of the members, discusses measures himself and thus puts an extinguisher on the independence, energy and public spirit that may occasionally be engendered in a member by the interesting nature or the importance of the subject. Those that have read the report of the proceedings of the meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council of the 6th January well know how the Honourable Ráo Sáheb Mandlik's opposition was snubbed while the mellifluent and apologetic speech of Mr. Badrudin was belauded. To continue a member of such a Council under such circumstances is to compromise one's position of independence and naturally a man of Mr. Mandlik's attainments, influence, position, and public spirit could not have long continued to remain in office, however willing and enthusiastic he may be to render service to the public cause. By his untiring energy Ráo Sáheb Mandlik had secured the confidence of the people; by his education and thorough knowledge of the law he had won respect for his opinions; by his clear and bold exposition of facts he commanded sympathy and co-operation from his colleagues; and it had therefore become almost impossible for him to remain in the Council on such disadvantageous terms. It is singularly fortunate therefore that he has been elevated from a seat in the presidential to one in the Imperial Council. We have not the least doubt that Ráo Sáheb Mandlik will show there what real Mahrátta Bráhman's intellectual abilities are and will thus pave the way for younger men. [The Indian Spectator (1) of the same date says:—The appointment is a significant departure in policy. To Lord Ripon's Government is due the credit of replacing sham by reality in the most important department of Government. To us it is peculiarly gratifying to see the Council Chamber purified of the vile imposture which has so long infested its atmosphere. Several other papers approve of the nomination of Mr. Mandlik.]

Recommends that Professor Dádábhái Nawroji should be appointed to the Viceregal Legislative Council on the next opportunity.

The Yajdán Parast (127) of the 24th February briefly describes the great knowledge possessed by Professor Dádábhái Nawroji of the wants, desires and requirements of the people of India, and the valuable political and other services rendered by the Professor; and observes that had he been appointed to the Viceregal Legislative Council in place of the Honourable Mr. V. N. Mandlik, he would have proved of great use to the Council. The Parast hopes that on a future occasion the claims of the Professor will not be overlooked and that his great experience of the country will be duly availed of.

Approves of the appointment of Mr. Káshináth Trimbak Telang as an additional member of the Bombay Legislative Council, and points out the claims of Mr. Raghunáth Náráyan Khote to the honour.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 24th February observes that the nomination of Mr. Káshináth Trimbak Telang as an additional member of the Local Legislative Council is by no means exceptionable. He possesses many qualities which render him worthy of the honour of representing the Hindu community of this Presidency. For several important reasons however the appointment of Mr. Raghunáth Náráyan Khote, C.I.E., would have been more advisable, especially when the Bombay Municipal Act Amendment Bill and other measures of commercial nature are likely to be brought before the Council for consideration and disposal. A consideration of these measures will require great experience of which Mr. Khote may be unquestionably held to be a store-house. [The Yajdán Parast (127) of the same date expresses similar sentiments. The Rást Goftár (115), the Kaiser-i-Hind (108) and the Gujaráti (101) of the same date heartily approve of the appointment of Mr. K. T. Telang. The Indian Spectator (1) of the 24th February thanks the local Government for the appointment, and observes that it shows that the nomination of Sayad Edroos, Aga Chungish Khán and other social ornaments as experimental legislators is not likely to be repeated.]

Says that some gentlemen with mofussil experience ought to be appointed members of the Bombay Legislative Council.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 24th February says:—There is one thing which strikes us in respect of the present constitution of our Council, viz., that the City of Bombay is being over-represented at the expense of the mofussil, which has no representative in the Council. The Honourable Sir Jamsetji, the Honourable Mr. Badrudin, and now the Honourable Mr. Telang are all more or less representatives of the City of Bombay. It is difficult to say what class, district, or opinions the Honourable Mr. Ráste represents. It would be desirable if some gentlemen of mofussil experience were chosen, and we suggest the names of Ráo Bahádur Bholánáth Sárábhái for Gujarát and Ráo Bahádur Gopálráo Hari Deshmukh and Ráo Bahádur Krishnáji L. Nulkar for the Deccan. (A correspondent of the same paper says):—Mr. K. T. Telang is talked of as the probable successor of Ráo Sáheb Mandlik in the Legislative Council of the Bombay Government. His abilities none can doubt. But he has evinced lack of decision on several occasions. He who fears not the displeasure of Government, who minds not the frowns of the President in Council, and who rises superior to his self, is the proper person to succeed Mr. Mandlik. Mr. P. M. Mehta may be nominated, and many other names may be suggested. But Sir James Fergusson will do nothing better than to leave the choice on this occasion to some well-known Municipal bodies in Bombay, Poona, &c.

Comments in connection with the policy of the Bombay Government regarding the assessment of improvements in land.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 24th February, in an article headed, "Assessment of Land Improvements," points out the advisability of exempting from assessment wells sunk by cultivators at their own expense, on the ground that it is expedient not only as a measure of State justice but as a direct encouragement to agriculturists to carry on improved cultivation, prefers the irrigation of land by wells to irrigation by canals and other waterworks, remarks at the same time that irrigation works taken in hand by the Bombay Government have hitherto been a failure and that neither the State nor the cultivator is better off for them, and observes:—Now when the Supreme Government has practically recognised the policy of encouraging improvements in land by means of State loans, when it is declared by high authorities that in the present impoverished condition of the peasantry and the generally exhausted condition of the soil and when pressure of population on that soil is daily increasing, extended cultivation is necessary and when a great portion of such cultivation depends on the extension of irrigation by means of wells, is it not unfortunate that our local authorities should tax for purposes of revenue wells that are the very resources which in years to come will bring about the results which we are all anxious to see? It must be remembered that the greater the accumulation of capital among the peasantry the better the prospects of improved agriculture. But according to the present notions of the Bombay Government is it possible that any accumulation can ever take place? The main principle that every improvement wisely and economically carried out leads to further improvement seems to be ignored. When the rayat can sink a well and be able in a certain time to enjoy the benefits derived from it, namely extended or improved cultivation, then alone is he in a position to save a small portion as capital. But just when he is in a position to save it, after the first cost of improvement and labour are recouped, the Collector pounces on his surplus saving. Enhanced assessment is demanded. If it is submitted to, all the small profits of his improvements are absorbed. There is absolutely no saving of capital which might enable him by degrees to make further improvements. Neither the State nor the rayat, or the country at large, can ever advance under such a system of exaction as is contemplated by our Government. They kill the goose that is expected to lay golden eggs in time. It is a suicidal policy and must be discountenanced. It is opposed to all economic principles. In short the divorce of capital, however small, from land is a loss to the land itself, to the cultivator and in the long run to the commonwealth. This is an important fact which the Government of Bombay ought never to lose sight of. The sooner the section 107 of the Land Revenue Code, which is inconsistent with section 11 of the Agricultural Loans Bill, is amended with a view to set at rest for ever all apprehensions regarding the levy of assessment on wells, the better. There should be no uncertainty in the matter on the part of Government so as to lead to future misconstruction as is unfortunately the case now. Let Mr. Peile profit by the sound views enunciated 20 years ago by Sir Barrow Ellis.

A suggestion in connection with the Court of Small Causes at Broach.

The Broach Vartamán (93) of the 25th February complains that great inconvenience is caused to the public by the present arrangements under which the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Surat is required to do the work of the Court at Broach, and suggests the advisability of abolishing the present Court at Surat and of appointing two separate Subordinate Judges for doing the work at the two places.

Point outs the necessity of securing uniformity in the weights and measures in the different districts of the Bombay Presidency.

The Vengurla Vritt (73) of the 21st February complains that great inconvenience is caused to the public by want of uniformity in the weights and measures in the different districts generally and particularly in the different parts of the town of Vengurla, and points out the necessity of resorting to legislation with the view of security the much-needed uniformity. Government generally recognise the Bengal maund as a standard weight and they should also direct the public to conform to that standard.

Necessity of establishing a dispensary at Roha-Ashtami in the Kolába District.

A correspondent of Dnyánodayă (7) of the 21st February, but received on the 28th idem, points out the inconvenience caused by the absence of a dispensary at Roha-Ashtami in the Kolába District, and requests the attention of Government to the matter.

Says that the postage on Vernacular newspapers should be further reduced before reducing that on Anglo-Indian papers.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 24th February, in referring to the memorial addressed to the Viceroy by Mr. Lawson, the Editor of the Madras Mail, on the subject of the advisability of reducing the Indian newspaper postage, observes:— The request of Mr. Lawson virtually means an amendment of the rules already passed so as to give the advantage of the lower rates to the English papers, thus making a uniform rate of newspaper postage for all India. Now we are of opinion that a uniform rate of newspaper postage in India will be an unnecessary loss of revenue to Government. For the purpose of postal charges the newspapers may be divided into two classes, those that are subscribed for by well-to-do persons and those that are subscribed for by the poor. In a country like England where the papers are conducted in the language of the country, it may be difficult to make such a distinction, as the same paper is subscribed for by the rich and the poor. But in India the case is quite different. The English papers here do not find their way to the masses and are generally subscribed for by well-to-do persons, while it is the Vernacular papers alone that go to the masses. It will be an evident anomaly therefore to charge the English and the Vernacular papers at the same rate. It must not however be understood that we object to the reduction of postage on Anglo-Indian papers. What we object to is a uniform rate of postage, as the tax will then fall unequally on the different classes of society. The Mahrátta here quotes an extract from Mill on the subject of taxes on communication and says:—After this exposition of the principles which ought to guide us in these matters it will be almost impossible to say anything more on that point. They clearly justify the distinction. What we have said must be kept up in this country and the Editors of English papers ought not to complain of the difference, as their subscribers can well afford to pay the charges. The rates of subscription for English papers fully bear us out. There is not a single English daily in India which is sold for half a penny or even a penny and we believe it can never be sold at so low a price, as the number of readers will always be limited. Not so with the Vernacular papers. With the reduction in postage and price their sale may in course of time extend almost indefinitely. Government therefore have to consider first, whether they can afford to reduce the postal charges on newspapers, and if they can whether a reduction cannot be more advantageously made in the charges on Vernacular papers in preference to those on English papers. We have no objection to the reduction in postal charges on English papers if it can be done consistently with further reduction of postage on Vernacular papers. We may add that in reducing the postage charges on Vernacular papers Government may well see that a reduction is made in the yearly subscription of these papers so as to bring them within the reach of the masses. This can be done by lowering the postage on cheap papers, thus offering an inducement to reduce the subscription. [The Indian Spectator (1) of the 24th February says:—Though by no means unmindful of recent reforms, we must say that the Postal Department has not risen much above those barbarous restrictions on public business so dear to the heart of the bureaucrat. Many a time have we groaned under these old-world restraints and striven hard to convince the authorities of their injustice, but to little purpose. What remains now is only to hope that the Viceroy may not send off the memorial to be departmentally considered. Between the Director-General of the Post Offices and the Secretary to Government the scheme will have a very poor chance indeed. We all know that the process of departmental consideration is interminable. The Director-General of Post Offices may take up months to prepare his table down to the infinitesimal fraction of a pie. And the Secretary may consume reams of paper, with proportionate amount of ink, red tape, sealing wax and stamps, in saving the State that terrible loss estimated by the Director-General.]

Says that the same arrangements as have been adopted for securing prompt distribution of paid letters should be followed in the case of bearing letters.

The Din Bandhu (5) of the 24th February says that although paid letters are under the new system of sub-deliveries distributed more promptly than before, still the same delay as hitherto takes place in distributing bearing letters. It is not clear why the public should suffer this inconvenience when the rates charged for bearing letters are double the rates for paid letters. The arrangements that have been recently adopted for the distribution of paid letters should be followed in the case of bearing letters, but if this cannot be done the Postal Department should absolve itself from the charge of injustice by stopping the levy of double rates for bearing letters.

Points out the necessity of making certain changes in the hours of delivering and despatching the post of the city of Kolhápur.

The Dakshin Vritt (23) of the 24th February complains of the inconvenience caused to the public of Kolhápur by the present arrangement for the distribution and despatch of letters from the City Post Office. The post for Poona and Bombay is despatched from the City Post Office at 5 P.M. while the post from Poona is delivered at 3 P.M. An interval of two hours is barely sufficient to admit of a reply being sent by the evening post to an emergent communication received by the afternoon post. Moreover those classes of people that generally have much to do with the Post Office are engaged in business until 5 P.M. The post that is despatched from the City Post Office at 5 P.M. is sent to Poona at 6-30 A.M. the next morning until which time it remains in the Head Post Office. The post from Rájápur, Miraj and other places is received about two or three hours before the mail leaves for Poona and is therefore despatched by that mail. In these circumstances it will tend to remove great inconvenience if arrangements are made to remove letters from the City Post Office very early in the morning. Again the mail from Poona is received at the Head Post Office after 11 A.M. and at the City Post Office from 3 P.M. We say that this delay of four hours is unnecessary. Is it not very strange that it should take four hours to carry the post to a distance of two miles, when it takes only eighteen hours to traverse the distance from Poona to Kolhápur? The authorities should arrange to make the necessary changes in the hours of delivering and despatching the post.

Complains of the late delivery of mails at Ahmedabad.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 28th February says that though the Rájputána and Káthiáwár mails arrive at Ahmedabad before 6 P.M., the letters are delivered the next day at 1 P.M. and sometimes even at 2 P.M. The letters received by the Bombay mails which arrive after 10 A.M. are also delivered at 1 or 2 P.M. By this late delivery of mails persons who have urgent business cannot avail themselves of the passenger train to Bombay, nor can they go to Káthiáwár save on the following day. The local post master ought therefore to employ more postmen if necessary, and see that the post is delivered more promptly than it is delivered at present.

Complains of the arbitrary conduct of European constables and inspectors employed in the Bombay Police Force.

The Káside Mumbai (109) of the 22nd February says that owing to the large number of European constables and inspectors employed in the Bombay Police Force, the police lords it over the people. The arbitrary conduct of European constables and inspectors wonderfully represents the wild oppression and coercion exercised in barbarous times. On enquiring of any respectable citizen, it will be found that these European heads of companies of 150 or 200 sepoys even surpass the Governor in pomp and dignity. No native, whether he be a Pársi, a Hindu, a Mahomedan, a Portuguese or a Dekhani, dare oppose a sepoy on a salary of Rs. 10 per mensem! These European heads of haváldárs and jamádárs who pass off under the garb of civilized preservers of the city, exercise so much power that they resemble plunderers of the days of corruption. They observe no difference whatsoever in the treatment of natives of high and low position. A long time will elapse before the Commissioner of Police comes to know of the great injustice done to natives by his European subordinates. When a misdeed of these subordinates is so much noised about that it is known to every one, then only Sir Frank Souter comes to know of it. Then the Commissioner holds an enquiry in the matter. But by that time the European officer rises so high that no one dares to oppose him. Several illiterate persons think it better to connive at the faults of such oppressors. As natives know for certain that a European miscreant is sure to be screened, they try as far as possible to avoid coming in his way. Mr. Collett has gone to the Parel Division after successfully achieving his object in the Fort. When he succeeded in his oppression and mismanagement in a thickly-populated and civilized quarter like the Fort, which is inhabited by brave men, he has comparatively done very little in having ventured to take money from 25 different blasters of mines in the Parel Division, which is half civilized and has been recently populated. An enquiry is being made in the matter but he is very likely to be honourably acquitted and he may even be rewarded for his sufferings. The season of the acquittal of Europeans from charges laid against them will never come to an end in India. Mr. Collett is not a new police officer and is of the stamp of other officers, an estimate of whose constant misdeeds cannot be made. Who can say that justice will be done when a brother officer is engaged in making an enquiry?

Education.

Comments on the educational policy of the Government of Bombay.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 24th February comments on the illiberal policy of Government regarding grants-in-aid of educational enterprise, and remarks:—The policy of the Educational Department under the administration of the Honourable Mr. Peile was very generous and we remember that the honourable gentleman once complained that the rules laid down by the Secretariat in the matter of educational grants were so stringent that they did not leave him any scope to inaugurate the various reforms that appeared to him necessary. This complaint was thoroughly justified by the educational policy of the Government of the day. However laudable the views profounded by the Home and Indian Governments in the famous despatch of 1854, the opinions of the local Government on matters of education were very narrow. The notion had gained firm ground that the Educational Department was not entitled to any funds as of right but that it was only an Eleemosynary Department, and therefore Mr. Peile did not find himself free to carry out the reforms contemplated by him. Under the administration of Mr. Chatfield however matters have come to a crisis. It was a very ill-advised step of Mr. Chatfield to have set about the task of reducing the expenditure of a department on the development of which depended the future regeneration of the country. With all the show of encouraging private enterprise he has curtailed the grants-in-aid of schools with an assiduity that as it were betrayed an intention of giving private enterprise its quietus. The most deplorable act of Mr. Chatfield's administration was that he united stinginess with the exercise of strictness in granting the benefit of the grant-in-aid rules. It was apprehended that such a state of things would lead to a severance of the connection between the Government Department of Public Instruction and the education of the people. Fortunately however we have been favoured with a Viceroy and a Governor who have given their serious consideration to the question of education and there are signs that the above-mentioned apprehensions will not be realised. Sir James Fergusson is in favour of State aid to private effort and this has been placed beyond doubt by His Excellency's remarks on the occasion of the ceremony of distributing prizes to the students of the New English School at Poona, and by the practical proof he gave of his views by promising to institute a prize to be competed for by the students of the school. This last act is very creditable to His Excellency, and we hope it will serve to disabuse the minds of our Director and others of the false impressions that have taken ground there.

Railways.

Is opposed to the extension of railways in India.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 24th February, in an article headed, "Railway extension in India," says that progress in the construction of railways does not necessarily mean progressive prosperity in the country, points out that railway finance in the United States has not proved quite a success, acknowledges that on the whole the progress of railways in this country is satisfactory and consistent with the state of Indian finances and the backward condition of the country, and observes:—May we ask if there are no financial dangers from increased railway construction in India? It will be considered as axiomatic by every economist that progress in any country is limited by its financial condition. By financial condition we do not simply mean the condition of the State revenue, but the capacity of the State for borrowing at reasonable rates of interest independently of indigenous capital. Lord Ripon very wisely accentuated the significance of this universal axiom of Statecraft by declaring to the Madras native deputation that railway construction and other matters must be limited by the funds at the disposal of the State. But the Bombay Chamber of Commerce proposes in a general way that what the State in this country cannot afford from the surplus revenues must be found by borrowing. That body lays down two broad propositions. (1) Railway construction must proceed at railway speed. (2) Funds must be found for it by some means. Now, if the capacity of the State was all that could be wished it might be fairly conceded that the two propositions admit of practical solution. But it is here that the economic results of American railway finance should be considered in order to arrive at a fair judgment. The first query then is whether it is practicable for Government to construct every year 2,000 miles of railway at the least for say 10 years by means of State loans or private enterprise partially supported by the State? Will the construction be considered excessive or how? Suppose that it is admitted that the construction is not excessive, judging by the necessity of opening up various parts of the country. The next question is about ways and means. This again leads to the third query, about the traffic. Will the 2,000 miles of railway per annum presuppose a probable paying traffic, or will that traffic have to be stimulated by artificial means as has been the case in the United States with the majority of the new railways that have been constructed there since 1870-71? Suppose it is shown that many lines may prove unremunerative, who will suffer? Suppose that these lines belonged to private companies. Will there not be a fall in their securities leading to financial disaster? Are there no lessons to be learnt from excessive construction of railroads in the United States? It will be urged that our hypothesis as to the non-paying character of many an Indian railway that may be hereafter constructed is untenable. We demur to this objection. Facts are conclusive. Even now facts show that save the Rájputána-Malva and the Eastern Bengal State Railways none of the other lines owned by the State are paying concerns. Nay more, it is after thirty years that the guaranteed lines have been able to earn something over and above 5 per cent. Much of these earnings owe their origin to monopoly rates of freight. These are already in the field and the Director-General of Railways has taken a very desponding view of the future earnings of railways in his report for 1881-82. It must also be remembered that even in England at the present hour many a railway (and they are all owned by private companies and not by the State) hardly pays its way in spite of the competition in fares and freight.

Questions the advisability of extending railways in India in the present circumstances of the country.

The Arunodayă (14) of the 24th February says that the capital that has been raised in England for the construction of the Western Deccan Railway will throw an additional burden on the revenues of India. In his speech on the occasion of the ceremony of opening the Western Deccan Railway His Excellency the Governor has tried to show that the twenty lákhs of rupees which India will have to pay annually on account of this railway cannot be properly called a "tribute," but a minute and impartial consideration of the subject will not fail to convince a person that all such measures are only calculated to impoverish India. There is no doubt that a rapid development of the different kinds of improved machinery is a sure index of the growing prosperity of a country, but everything has its proper time. Such development must follow an increase in the industries of a country and must be carried on with indigenous capital and agency. The present condition of India is however quite different. The people find themselves without employment as all their trades and occupation have passed into the hands of a foreign people; and in this state they find themselves so much burdened with a heavy debt by an extravagant and selfish administration that the anxiety of paying off the interest accruing on the debt has thoroughly absorbed their minds. And to add a new railway in these circumstances is tantamount to depriving a section of the people of the means of livelihood enjoyed by them. Doubtless the new railway would be of great use in the contingency of a famine in the Deccan, but why should not measures be adopted to prevent the recurrence of famines? Histories of the past tell us that this is not impracticable. Where are the stores of grain that existed in India before and in the beginning of the British rule? Have they disappeared because a sufficient quantity of corn is not reaped? If so, why is it so? Is it on account of the notion that has taken hold of the people that they have no ownership in the land cultivated by them under the survey and settlement system? If so, cannot this state of things be put a stop to? If a proclamation were issued guaranteeing the people against any future enhancements of land revenue and asserting their ownership in the soil, there would be no famines and there would be no necessity of resorting to preventive measures. Such a step would relieve the people of India from their various miseries. [The Native Opinion (10) of the same date refers to the same subject, and points out the advisability of Government undertaking the construction of new railways in India without entrusting it to Railway Companies and thus subjecting this country to the necessity of paying interest on the Company's capital.]

Comments in connection with the remarks made by the Governor of Bombay on the occasion of the inauguration of the Western Deccan Railway.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 25th February says :—Now we come to that part of His Excellency's speech from which we beg to record our dissent with due deference to so high an authority. India remits to England annually a large sum of money. This sum is denominated by "certain newspapers and persons who ought to know better" the tribute paid by India to England. It appears to us that His Excellency objects to the use of the word "tribute." When His Excellency with great vehemence denounced this "popular fallacy, absurd as it is," we thought that His Excellency would bring forward some arguments to do away with this popular fallacy. But alas! We must say we were doomed to be greatly disappointed. This tribute—we beg His Excellency's pardon—consists no doubt of the remuneration paid for services rendered, of the prices paid for the purchase of articles and of the profits realized on capital invested here. What person has been stupid enough to question the veracity of this statement? We are at a loss to know how His Excellency thought of dispelling the popular delusion, or to use His Excellency's word, fallacy, by such a specious argument. His Excellency will be kind enough, we hope, to bear in mind that those who call the remittances to England from India a tribute are not simple enough to use the latter as synonymous with nazrána or present. Viewed from an economical point of view it appears to us that the word is used to convey this idea. India is required to export commodities to England and in return she gets nothing substantial and therefore the sum represented by these exports is called a tribute. "As for the services rendered I hope India gets her money's worth for these" said His Excellency. Certainly good Government is essential to the advancement and prosperity of a nation. The time has however come when the costly European agency should be gradually dispensed with and the cheaper but equally efficient native agency should be substituted for it. There are various obstacles which stand in the way of the employment of natives. The civil service is full of highly-paid Englishmen. The service though open to all in theory practically excludes all natives. In order to avoid this result it is of paramount importance that the examination should be held here. When this takes place we may say that there is fair competition. What we want is even-handed justice and nothing more. "At all events" says His Excellency, "she (India) gets the result of open competition among the aspiring youths of England." Why should not the aspiring youths of India be allowed a fair trial in the competition? Why was the limit of age reduced? Does it not speak volumes against the sense of justice of these Englishmen? Why should not the examination be held here? If England is really serious and wants to do justice to India, she must begin in this direction. All the abuses complained of by natives should be swept away and there should be fair play. The substitution of native agency will lead to the reduction of the charges at present borne by the State. As for the two other charges on the Indian revenue, we need not write anything more. Lord Ripon has already taken the initiative and native industries will be greatly countenanced. The peace and tranquillity enjoyed by India under the British rule will foster the spirit of useful investments and native capitalists will come forward with their money. Peace and tranquillity bring in their train innumerable blessings and for these our everlasting gratitude is due to England. We sanguinely hope that Government will pay their attention to this complicated question of the civil service and earn the everlasting gratitude of the people of this country.

Does not approve of the Chanda Railway scheme.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 24th February says :—We are told that the Chanda Railway scheme has not been allowed to breathe its last but that efforts are being made by the promoters to put life into it. The disclosures that have been recently made about the scheme are so many, so disgraceful and so well-founded that anybody but an idiot can at once see that a strong case has been made out and interference on the part of the friendly British power can be justified. The case in point is stronger than was that of the arrears for military service; it is more urgent than that of the much cared for and expected death by poison of the Political Agent; it is more pressing than that of the State which was temporarily taken up under direct management on account of its maladministration by the Diwán. It is a case that threatens to ruin the interests of nearly ten millions of population; it is a case that involves the largest of Native States into speedy ruin; a case that casts obloquy and discredit on the rulers of a kingdom on which the sun never sets. Such being the nature of the case. Government would never have hesitated to interfere but the interests involved are not greater than those at stake and nothing but united public voice can succeed in compelling Government to make an inquiry into the matter. To be more plain, the case involves the interests of the Native State of Hyderabad, but an inquiry and an official statement of facts are likely to bring into disrepute the good name of the English nation. The facts will leave intact neither the Resident, nor the Secretary of State, nor the Government of India, which is the connecting link between the two functionaries. This will be the case no doubt but fortunately there are circumstances under which, as they say, the 'hornet can be robbed of its sting without touching the insect.' The State of Hyderabad can be saved as well as the reputation of the British Lion. The public, both of India and of England, should claim an inquiry and when Government are thus driven on to it, they can with impunity take upon themselves the responsibility of knocking the Chanda scheme on its head and exposing or punishing as need be anybody that may have anything to do with the ruinous enterprise. It is with the object of inducing the people to raise their voice in the interests of the young Nizám that we have taken up the subject of the Chanda Railway.

Native States.

Suggests that Government should try to secure a person of the Bhosle family for the throne of Kolhápur.

Referring to the decision arrived at by Government in the matter of the adoption of the eldest son of the Chief of Kágal by the Ránis of Kolhápur, the Maháráshtră Mitră (41) of the 28th February does not understand why the choice should have fallen on a person who does not belong to the family of the rulers of Kolhápur. It is not known whether this selection has been made on the supposition that there is no person in the Bhosle family worthy of being adopted. Sátára and Kolhápur families are branches of the same stock and we know for certain that it is customary to adopt from one family into another. When therefore there are two boys belonging to the Sátára branch who are in all respects qualified for adoption, the selection of a boy of 9 years from a different family is not intelligible. The adopted child ought to have been a scion of the Bhosle family and should have been from 12 to 14 years of age. When a boy of this age is selected his physical and mental capabilities can be judged by the public and no responsibility rests on Government. Moreover by adopting a person with the qualifications above-mentioned Government would extricate themselves from the delicate position which has caused them much trouble and the public would be satisfied. We suggest that before sanctioning the adoption of a person from the Kágal family, Government should institute enquiries as to whether a boy of the Bhosle family is available.

Is glad that Mr. Shámráw Náráyan Lád has been re-appointed Diwán of the Cambay State.

The Rást Goftár (115) and the Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 24th February are glad that Mr. Shámráw Náráyan Lád has been re-appointed Diwán of the Cambay State, and express a hope that his future administration of the State will satisfy both the Nawáb and the subjects of Cambay.

Disapproves of the re-appointment of Mr. Shámráo N. Laud to the Diwánship of Cambay and attacks the policy of the Bombay Government as one of irresolution.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 28th February says:—In these days when British justice is spoken of very highly, it is very surprising that the officers of the State should commit themselves to acts which are calculated to bring to mind the old days of Mogals, Peshwas and Gáikwáds; and when such acts are directly attributable to officers of the rank of Governors and Governors-General the public do not fail to watch them with astonishment. It does not appear to us that since the establishment of the British rule in this country, the people of this Presidency have ever seen so irresolute a Governor as Sir James Fergusson. In the early days of the Gáikwádi and other regimes administration was carried on by a system of contract and nomination and those that could offer the highest nazrána (presents) to the State carried the day. Many of the officers that secured their object used to tyrannize over the people, but were left unmolested in their posts so long as they secured the favour of the Rája and his Diwán. But no sooner did they incur the displeasure of their employers than they were deprived of their offices and put in prison. They were however subsequently released on payment of a heavy fine and sometimes even reinstated in their former position. A policy similar to this has been followed in this Presidency during the last five years under the auspices of Sir James Fergusson. The Jám of Navánagar was laughed at for his irresolution in having reinstated with pomp and éclat Raghavji Khavás who was exiled from the State with dishonour. But we see Sir James Fergusson reinstating Mr. Shámráo Náráyan Laud in the office of the Diwán of Cambay, who was nearly a year ago declared by Government to be incompetent for the office as he lacked prudence and was not sufficiently gifted with the art of making himself popular with the subjects of the State. Had Sir James been an officer of a Native State we would have satisfied ourselves by believing that his action was influenced by presents or bribes. But as the custom of receiving presents and bribes does not exist under the British rule, people have reasons to be astonished at his conduct. The old proverb that "Money answereth all things" creates the greatest astonishment among the people on such an occasion. But we have not the slightest suspicion in this matter and we are inclined to think that this act of His Excellency has been the result of indiscretion and simplicity. That the administrators should be simple-minded and easy of belief is in no way calculated to prove beneficial to the country or to the State. Even supposing that Sir James, seeing the mistake of his first decision, reversed it, we do not understand what advantage to the subjects he contemplated by reinstating Mr. Shámráo among a people that were dissatisfied with his administration and that lodged a complaint against him after leaving the State. Was there no other appointment available for him that he should have been re-appointed at Cambay? We think that the people must be laughing as much at the display of his thinking powers made by Sir James Fergusson as at the folly of Mr. Shámráo in accepting his former post. Again we do not think that Mr. Shámráo will deal justly by those who organised the exodus from Cambay. We therefore do not think that this appointment is calculated to prove beneficial either to the State of Cambay or its subjects, or to Mr. Shámráo himself. From this objectionable policy of the Governor we apprehend that he may now reinstate Messrs. Sala Hindi and Bápálál in the Junágad Darbár. It is in accordance with the same policy that he has sent Mr. Fernandez back to Ahmedabad. Such strange views of the Government of Sir James Fergusson remind the British subjects of this Presidency of the old days of the Mogals, Peshwas and Gáikwáds, and even this we consider as a turn of the good fortune of the people! [The Yajdán Parast (127) and Gujaráti (101) of the 24th February also express their disapproval of the re-appointment of Mr. Shámráo].

Affairs at Junágad.

A correspondent of the Ahmedabad Samáchár (85) of the 27th February says that orders have been issued for the demolition of houses situated on the sides of the Giranchowk at Junágad and for the construction of splendid mansions in their place. The municipal officers are taking active steps to carry out the orders. Notices are issued to house-owners asking them to pull down their houses within a certain time and to re-build them according to the plans prescribed by the State and intimating that in case they failed to do so, the State would demolish and re-build them at the expense of the owners. This has caused consternation among the poor as well as the well-to-do classes of the city. The people are unable to maintain themselves. Whence can they procure the means for reconstructing their houses? It cannot be understood why the services of Mr. Bápálál should have been still retained on the plea of assisting the new Diwán Mr. Haridás. It is very much to be regretted that the State of Junágad should thus oppress its subjects. How could the new Diwán have permitted the issue of the oppressive orders above referred to? The people are also treated unjustly in matters of succession. The State is very anxious to acquire the property of its subjects though there may be real heirs. The new Diwán ought immediately to adopt remedial measures.

Scarcity of water and want of a dispensary at Tharád.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 28th February reiterates the complaint regarding the scarcity of water at Tharád in the Pálanpur State, and says that no effective measures have yet been taken to supply the want. The Bombay Government ought to persevere in their attempt to have this complaint removed. The correspondent also complains of the want of a dispensary at Tharád. If a well-to-do person falls sick he goes for medicine to the Deesa Camp, which is at a distance of 60 miles from Tharád; but the poor suffer very much. Sick prisoners are not well attended to. It will be better if the Thákor supplies these wants instead of spending large sums of money on the construction of new works. It is very much to be regretted that the Thákor should have incurred debts. It is to be hoped that the case in which one Párekh Ambáidás has been charged with embezzlement of public money and which has been pending for about 5 or 6 years will be soon disposed of. The editor in a note supports the complaint regarding the scarcity of water and the want of a dispensary at Tharád, and requests the Political Agent and Government to have these wants speedily supplied. As the people will have to suffer in the approaching hot season owing to the scarcity of water, speedy measures should be taken to supply the want.

RAOJI BHAVANRAO PAVGI,
Acting Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
3rd March 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

- Advance of Russia in Central Asia: Remarks in connection with the occupation of Merv by Russia 3
- Civil Service of India: Necessity for reforming the— 3
- Dispensaries: Necessity of establishing a dispensary at Roha-Ashtami in the Kolába District 6
- England's glory: Expression of opinion that—and India's welfare are identical 3
- Judicial matters: A suggestion in connection with the Court of Small Causes at Broach 6
- Land revenue assessment: Comments in connection with the policy of the Bombay Government regarding the assessment of improvements in land 5
- Legislative Councils:
  - Approval of the appointment of Mr. K. T. Telang as an additional member of the Bombay Legislative Council and the claims of Mr. Raghunáth Náráyan Khote to the honour 5
  - Expression of opinion that some gentlemen with mofussil experience ought to be appointed members of the Bombay Legislative Council 5
  - Necessity of reforming the constitution of Indian—and approval of the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Mandlik to a seat in the Supreme Legislative Council 4
  - Recommendation that Professor Dádábhái Nawroji should be appointed to the Viceregal Legislative Council on the next opportunity 5
- Police: Complaint regarding the arbitrary conduct of European constables and inspectors employed in the Bombay—Force 8
- Postal matters:
  - Complaint regarding the late delivery of mails at Ahmedabad ... 8
  - Expression of opinion that the postage on Vernacular newspapers should be further reduced before reducing that on Anglo-Indian papers 6
  - Expression of opinion that the same arrangements as have been adopted for securing prompt distribution of paid letters should be followed in the case of bearing letters 7
  - Necessity of making certain changes in the hours of delivering and despatching the post of the city of Kolhápur 8
- Weights and measures: Necessity of securing uniformity in the—in the different districts of the Bombay Presidency 6

Part II.—Education—

- Educational policy of the Government of Bombay: Comments on the—. 9

Part III.—Railways—

- Chanda Railway scheme: Disapproval of the— 12
- Extension of railways in India:
  - Expression of doubt regarding the advisability of the—in the present circumstances of the country 10
  - Opposition to the— 9
- Remarks made by the Governor of Bombay on the occasion of the inauguration of the Western Deccan Railway: Comments on the— ... 11

Part IV.—Native States—

- Cambay:
  - Disapproval of the re-appointment of Mr. Shámráo N. Laud to the Diwánship of—and an attack on the policy of the Bombay Government as one of irresolution 13
  - Expression of satisfaction with the re-appointment of Mr. Shámráo Náráyan Laud to the Diwánship of— 13
- Junágad: Affairs at— 14
- Kolhápur: Suggestion that Government should try to secure a person of the Bhosle family for the throne of— ... 12
- Pálanpur: Scarcity of water and want of a dispensary at Tharád in the State of— 14

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS

PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 8th March 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly ...	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly ...	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly ...	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Mahárásthră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Mahárásthră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly ...	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
*62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti) ...	Monthly	400
63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 1100

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	400
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	814
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,225
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	, Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berar papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Disavows any sympathy with those who run down the British Government of India.

A correspondent of the Suryă Prakásh (84) of the 1st March says:—We do not at all sympathize with those public writers or speakers who revile a good Government without having sufficient grounds to justify their conduct. We know that such procedure not only tends to bring them into bad odour with Government, but it likewise declares that they lack that spirit of independence and that love of truth which should always characterize the opinions of such persons. Posterity, moreover, holds them responsible for their partiality. Many of our native writers, forgetting the manifold blessings which the British rule has bestowed upon us, regard it a part of their duty as patriots to publish, when an occasion occurs, something to the disadvantage of Government. Every right-thinking person will agree with us that this practice is altogether wrong. Government, in exacting obedience from their subjects, whom they have vanquished by the prowess of their arms or reduced to submission by their superior skill in arts and sciences, may adopt measures which may appear to some inconsistent with reason and justice, but which may nevertheless be not the less justifiable. India, which has been for ages past disunited by numerous religious factions and has been sadly enervated by the evil influence of caste and other bad customs, has now to be thankful to God for His Mercy in bestowing upon it a good Government. Our European rulers, who would in obedience to the salutary precepts of their religion always befriend us at the time of difficulty and who would endeavour as far as it lies in their power to elevate us, are little understood by the generality of our countrymen; while their well-meaning intentions are sometimes misconstrued into acts of downright partiality and class distinction. The people forget that it is their own weakness, their own customs and their own religious views, handed down to them from generation to generation with apparently little or no modification, that make them look upon the Europeans as their ill-wishers and as inimical to their country's advancement. To a jaundiced eye everything appears yellowish. If the people were to strive hard with one accord to free themselves from the many restrictions which a selfish priesthood has imposed upon them in the name of religion, we are sure that they would then certainly see very little in their rulers' behaviour towards them which they would condemn as unjust and inconsistent with reason. On the contrary they would see in their behaviour much to be thankful for.

Says that the British Government should take notice of the advances of Russia in Central Asia.

In noticing the recent advances of Russia in Central Asia, the Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 2nd March trusts that the British Ministry will not be lulled into sleep by the old trick of the Russians that is now being resorted to by them to again hoodwink England. It is said that General Tehernaieff is to be replaced by General Rosenbach in the office of the Governor-General of Turkistan. This change has been made as a concession to English susceptibilities with respect to Russian action in Central Asia. But those who know what Russian doings have been during the last twenty-five years and upwards, will need no reminding that a change of its agents or tools can be no guarantee of a change of the grasping and aggrandizing policy of the Muscovite, or of the systematically fraudulent advance of the Northern Collossus towards Afghánistan with all its attendant dangers to the British supremacy in the East. On the present occasion as on all previous ones a Russian Agent has been temporarily removed, but his accomplishments will remain good, permanently serving Russian purpose. Nothing has been done to retrace the advance made and to abandon the ground secured, of which the British have reason to complain. It is not Russian Agents in Central Asia, but the Russian policy and the duplicity with which it is carried on to the inconvenience and future danger to the British interests that British subjects, especially in India, are concerned with. The British Government ought to insist upon Russia making a candid, distinct, and trustworthy declaration of her true policy, aims and proceedings in Central Asia as affecting directly or indirectly the British interests especially in the direction of India. The English authorities ought to be on the alert if they at all wish to avoid trouble to themselves in future. [The Yajdán Parast (127), the Gujarát Mitră (80) and the Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the same date express somewhat similar sentiments.]

Advocates the imposition of an income-tax on the classes now exempted from direct taxation.

In a paragraph headed "Direct taxation and the forthcoming budget," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 3rd March says:—It is a good sign that the feeling in favour of direct taxation and against the present system of taxation in India, which falls almost wholly on the poor, is slowly but surely gaining ground. The Times of India of Saturday last calls attention to a letter in the Economist, in which the writer correctly points out that a low income-tax, such as was repeatedly advocated by the late Lord Lawrence, would redress the inequality of the existing taxation, which presses on the poor. We have always thought that the cry against an income-tax is unreasonable and succeeds just because the classes from whom the cry proceeds are able to make themselves heard, while the classes on whom the present taxes fall are not. If it is possible to collect the license-tax easily without the inconvenience and difficulty of ascertaining the incomes of commercial men being seriously felt, why should it not also be possible in the case of an income-tax to ascertain the incomes of other men? In fact it is absurd to contend that an income-tax creates vexation and discontent. It seems to us that there is no chance of the financial condition of India being subjected to proper supervision and arrangement as long as the classes most able to bear the weight of taxation and to make their voices heard in the Government of the country escape untaxed. It is only by touching the pockets of these classes that the financial administration of the country can be made to improve. But to do that Sir Auckland Colvin will have to brave a good deal of opposition and encounter strong prejudices. His position, however, is not quite so difficult as was that of Sir Richard Temple, when the latter was the Finance Minister of Lord Mayo and was roundly abused for his income-tax. The merchants then made common cause with the officials because both disliked the tax. But now the question is not between no taxation or an income-tax, it is between the license-tax and the income-tax. The merchants, if at all interested in the question, would unhesitatingly declare for the latter. The officials will stand alone in their opposition, if at all they are minded to it.

Says that when the scheme of local self-government is in good working order, it will furnish individuals who will in every way be qualified to take part as members of the local Legislature.

In an article headed "Our Legislative Councils," the Native Opinion (10) of the 2nd March says:—The representation of the people of India in the Supreme Legislative Council is a subject which deserves the best consideration of our rulers as well as of ourselves. The present Governor-General has been doing in this matter as in many others besides all that he can do by himself, leaving the more general development of the principle in the hands of the people themselves. He nominated one member quite recently on the recommendation of an influential public association in the Presidency of Bengal and he now has taken another from the Western Presidency. In doing this, it is true, he has not made any great departure from and innovation over the acts of his predecessors; but he has differed from them in putting into exercise the powers he possessed more freely. Though the nomination of Mr. Mandlik is not without a precedent, still the precedents have been so far and few between that the present instance has struck the public on this side of India as something new and has evoked an unusual amount of gratitude and delight. It has become, we think, quite a maxim with the best well-wishers of India that unless our Legislative Councils are more or less representative, the country will have no really good Government. Hitherto as a general rule the nominations to the Council have been what we should not hesitate to call quite ridiculous. Indeed at times the greater the incapacity of the individual in the public eye, the more has he been considered a fit legislator by the Government. We have known gentlemen nominated additional members of Legislative Councils who not only had no knowledge of the language in which the debates were conducted, but, what is more, who were utterly incapable of understanding anything said there. This stupendous sham was repeated year after year notwithstanding the cry raised by the public generally, and we are afraid that unless the public take the matter properly in hand, a dunce or two will continue to disgrace our Council boards for many years to come. It must be admitted however that in recent years the majority of the nominations have been good, quite as good as one could wish. But yet they are not free from one or two of the other sort, made purposely, one may think, as monuments of the beaurocratic discernment. Our own Council even as at present constituted is not exactly what it should be. We have been at a loss to imagine why the Honourable Ráo Bahádur Ráste is there. No doubt he is a Sardár of the Deccan and many other things besides; but his place is not where he is placed now. He might form a fitting ornament at a levée or a darbár, but where laws are to be made for the welfare of the people, is not the place for him. We hope that in future such dummies will never be chosen to fill so responsible a position. As regards the other members we have not much to say against them, while some of them, we have no hesitation in declaring, are the best available. But yet we have to suggest that in future in nominating members to the Council care should be taken that the person chosen is really a representative man. There are persons in the mofussil who are quite equal to the work in point of ability and who would be a great acquisition on account of their intimate knowledge of the mofussil. Further it is also to be hoped that the selection will be extended over a larger area and not be confined in most part to the town and Island of Bombay. Gujarát and the Deccan might each be allowed to put in an appearance through a proper representative. But in saying this we do not at all mean to convey any disapproval of the Bombay members who are at present in the Council. They are all that can be desired, except perhaps that a deficient knowledge of the outlying districts makes one or two of them a little less satisfactory than what they otherwise would have been. Now that local self-government is launched abroad though not in the best trim we could have wished, the responsibility of our future Government in making these nominations will be made less onerous. The scheme when in full swing will turn out many persons who by intelligence, ability and experience will form as picked a body of political and administrative volunteers as could be desired, and then you can at one glance without the possibility of mistake find out the proper men. The better the principle of self-government is understood and administered in this country, the greater will be the chance of many of our Governmental shams disappearing and in properly popularising that scheme we recognise a true statesman in Lord Ripon.

Makes suggestions about selecting members of the Supreme and Local Legislative Councils.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 3rd March, in a paragraph headed "Legislative Councils," alludes to the nomination of Ráo Sáheb Vishwanáth Náráyan Mandlik to a seat in the Viceroy's Legislative Council, and observes:—One cannot see why the representation should be restricted to one Presidency at a time, instead of all the Presidencies being treated equally in the matter. The fact is the time has arrived when the constitution of the Legislative Councils of the country should be remodelled. The non-official members have been selected hitherto more on the principle that occupying a seat in the Legislative Councils is an honour conferred on the occupier by the Government for some good act of his than on the principle that he is selected because he is fit to represent the interests of the non-official public. The first end has been more looked to than the second. So also, by allowing one Presidency alone to be represented in the Supreme Legislative Council, and leaving the others unrepresented, the Viceroy only fosters the idea that selecting a gentleman for a seat in his Council is meant more in the light of an honour to that gentleman than as enabling the Presidency from which he comes to have a voice in the deliberation of the Council. The law on the subject, as it stands now, leaves the whole thing to the discretion of the Viceroy; but it is high time that it should be changed and it should be made compulsory on the part of the Viceroy to select a native from each Presidency to represent in the Supreme Legislative Council. Another change, which seems to us to be equally called for, is that it should be enacted by law that none but those who are educated and are able to fully understand the proceedings in the Councils should be elected non-official members. This latter change may not seem desirable under the regime of a Viceroy like Lord Ripon or a Governor like Sir James Fergusson; but the principles of the Indian administration change with its administrators and in these two matters at least we do not see what purpose is served by leaving them to the discretion of those at the head of the Government. Our public bodies could not do better than take up these questions and agitate for the changes required. Some amongst us are now seriously considering whether we should not propose that the Council of the Secretary of State for India should be remodelled and natives ought to be selected to represent India at the Council. But the wants nearer home are more crying and ought to be more immediately looked to.

Makes remarks in connection with the recent Resolution of the Bombay Government on the sinking and working of wells for agricultural purposes.

In noticing the Resolution recently issued by the Bombay Government about the sinking and working of wells for agricultural purposes, the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 8th March observes that the Engineers who were consulted on the subject have expressed an approval of the native leather bag and the Persian wheel as the best and cheapest means of drawing water. But the bag and the wheel as worked by the native farmers raise very little water and cause great exertion to the cattle yoked to them. If the wheel is made of iron instead of wood and constructed on mechanical principles, the labour required for working it would be considerably diminished. The slope on which bullocks drag the leather bag is not constructed at a proper incline, while a single rude pulley is used for drawing up the bag. Improvements in them can be easily made. It is to be regretted that the officials consulted by Government have failed to make adequate suggestions on this subject. The officials have given preference to the chain-pump used on the Government Model Farm in Khándesh, but it too has its defects. Compared to the quantity of water raised by the pump, the animal power required to work it is considerable. Moreover, the pump does well for shallow wells, but in the case of deep wells the leather bag is preferable. In working this pump some water returns to the well, and if the well is deep very little water is raised, compared to the animal power required to work the machine.

Suggests means for reducing the abnormal mortality prevailing among the native convicts in the Indian jails.

The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 3rd March observes that the normal death-rate among men is found to be 20 to 25 per thousand, but the mortality among the native convicts in Indian jails is said to range from 100 to 600 per thousand. This abnormal death-rate among the prisoners seems attributable to their defective keeping. The cost of maintaining native convicts in the jails of the Madras Presidency is Rs. 77 per head per annum, while that of the European prisoners in the jail at Ootacamand is Rs. 570 per head for the same period. The vast difference between the cost of the two classes of prisoners makes it apparent that if the expense incurred for European prisoners is not lavish, the very small cost of the feeding of the native convicts is the cause of the abnormally great mortality prevailing among them. It has been frequently complained that the native prisoners of most of the jails present a wretched appearance, and Sir James Caird has mentioned in his travels through India that the convicts in the Agra district appeared half-starved and wretched. It is desirable that the native convicts should be provided with a larger quantity and better kind of food than that with which they are served at present, and that sufficient means should be taken to preserve their health. These means if adopted will not fail to lessen the abnormal mortality prevailing among them.

Disapproves of the way in which circuits are undertaken and the way in which poor villagers are made to supply provisions for insufficient payment.

In an article headed "The Circuit Season," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 2nd March observes:—Will our Government kindly publish a return of the cost of these official tours? Are they satisfied that they have got their money's worth? It is high time to inquire into the efficiency and utility of our circuit system. We do not for a moment doubt that Government have sanctioned this system with the very best intentions; nor do we doubt that some of the officers on tour really make valuable use of their time and acquire a more intimate knowledge of the character and capacity as well as the wants and wishes of the people than is otherwise possible. Of all such officers we desire to speak with the utmost respect, and our remarks are not intended to apply to them. But, exceptional cases apart, it seems to be that of all the various instances of waste of public funds none is nore glaring than this circuit system. We are quite willing to admit the educational importance and usefulness of circuits. What we deny is that the majority of officers who go out on periodical tours at all care to learn anything during their travels. True they become experts in all the sports of the field, and experienced in all the hazards and pleasure of pig-sticking and deer-stalking. But may we ask how many spend their time in familiarising themselves with the condition of the people? May we ask how many, if now called upon by Government, will be able to write an instructive account of what they have seen and heard on tour? We do not want a repetition of information stolen wholesale from the Gazetteer. We want additions to this information—and something more. We want a comprehensive and intelligent grasp of the actual condition and requirements of the subject population in every district and táluka. Can the officials truly reflect at first hand this condition and these requirements? We are afraid not. Government attach a great deal of fictitious weight to the opinion of their district officers, but we know also what weight the public attach to this opinion of Government. Last year we had occasion to write strongly about the official circuits in Sind. This year the same story reaches us with fuller details. The Commissioner and the Collectors are content to receive and correct the notes made by the Daftardárs, with the assistance of their low-paid Munshis, on the records of the Mámlatdárs (the Assistant Collectors' records are never examined). What is not on the record can thus never be known—and how many things are done and not recorded the country people know but too well to their cost, while the responsible officers of Government remain callously ignorant of them! Do the Commissioner and the Collectors, for example, know that months before their arrival many Tabdárs, Head Munshis and Mukhtyárkars, expecting their visit, commence to lay in a stock of provisions and fodder by compulsory levies on Zamindárs and traders? Do they know that this stock is sometimes so large as to survive even their visits? Do they know that some honest táluka officers, rather than resort to these compulsory levies, set apart one month's pay to meet the expenses consequent on a high functionary's tour? Do they know how many perquisites these officers supply gratis? Do they know that their butlers and Náiks are more dreaded and more soothingly appeased than perhaps the Hindu goddesses of small-pox or cholera? Do they know what a relief it is to these officers when they at least leave their táluka for another? Do they know why, instead of increasing trade in petty villages, they smother it by their visits—that they contract the ordinary law of supply and demand—that the prices charged to them are not regulated by the principles of free-trade—that a tariff is sanctioned especially for them by the Mukhtyárkar—that their tents are never pitched without resort to compulsory labour—that the villagers avoid their camp as they would avoid a plague—that their camelmen let loose their camels to wander at their own sweet will among fields of oil-seeds to the utter consternation of the ruined peasantry—and that their huge establishments, ministerial and menial, receive pitchers of milk and dozens of eggs and ducks and goats and kids for the asking? That habit of running up an account with the Mukhtyárkar or his Head Munshi is a source of much abuse. The butler takes twenty rupees worth of things when he wants only five rupees worth. He, of course, dare not charge more than five rupees to his master and is not expected to pay the remaining Rs. 15 from his own pocket. Can our heaven born officials guess who pays the remaining Rs. 15? We ask them not only to guess, but to inquire. We ask Government to call upon their officers—as one test of their work—to submit in future diaries of their periodical travels showing what extra business they transacted and what new things they learnt on circuit. Government will then be able to some extent to judge whether they get their money's worth for all the heavy allowances, mileage and tentage so punctually drawn and cheerily pocketed.

Expresses a hope that Mr. Nánábhái Haridás will be confirmed as Judge of the Bombay High Court when Mr. Melvill takes his seat in the Executive Council.

In a paragraph headed "Native Judges in the High Courts," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 3rd March says:—The Allahabad High Court once more witnesses the accession of a native lawyer to its Bench in the nomination of Mr. Mahmood to act for Mr. Justice Tyrrel, who has gone on furlough. Mr. Justice Mahmood has sat more than once on the Allahabad Bench and his decisions, which are found in recent volumes of Law Reports of that Court, are written in such a remarkably clear and vigorous style and show such a wide acquaintance with law that in the legal world he deservedly enjoys, we believe, the reputation of an able and conscientious Judge. The nomination of Mr. Mahmood to the Allahabad Bench necessarily reminds us of the permanent vacancy which will next month be created on the Bench of our High Court by the promotion of Mr. Justice Melvill to the Council of His Excellency the Governor. Mr. Justice Nánábhái Haridás has held a seat on the Bench so often and for so many years that the native community is naturally anxious to see him confirmed on the Bench. One need hardly doubt, however, that Sir James Fergusson will avail himself of the opportunity, which is shortly to present itself before the Government, of recognising the just claims and high ability of Mr. Justice Nánábhái and meeting the most eager wish of the native community to see him occupying a permanent seat on the Bench.

Approves of the appointment of Mr. M. G. Ránade to the Small Cause Court Judgeship of Poona, and hopes that Government will give him a still higher judicial post.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 2nd March says:—We note with extreme satisfaction the appointment of Mr. Mahádev Govind Ránade to the Small Cause Court Judgeship of Poona. No doubt Dr. Pollen will miss his able second-in-command, but the present post is one of the highest of those open to natives in the Judicial line, and no one had claims to it at all equal to Mr. Ránade. We do not think, however, that Mr. Ránade has yet reached his highest appointment. There are higher places still in the Judicial service which up to this time have been kept as a close preserve for the Covenanted Civilians. Lord Lytton attempted for the first time to break it open in favour of old and tried servants of Government. But no one since then seems inclined to repeat the experiment. None the less we hope it will be tried over again, and Mr. Ránade's claims considered with reference to it. The high powers and untiring energy which every body knows Mr. Ránade to possess, no less than his past service, deserve some such recognition from Government.

Pársi divorce suits should not be heard with closed doors except when both parties to the suit agree to the procedure.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 8th March observes that it is not right to allow important Pársi divorce suits to be heard with closed doors. The newspapers publish the accusations brought against the parties by their respective opponents, and if the public remain ignorant of the evidence which is brought forward to prove or disprove the charges, the parties are likely to be judged unjustly by public opinion. There are some reasons for allowing divorce suits to be conducted with closed doors; but it would have been better had the Pársi Divorce Act prescribed that this procedure should be followed only when the two parties to the suit agree to adopt it. All over the world divorce suits are heard in open courts and this procedure produces a wholesome effect on public morals. If a suit is allowed to be conducted with closed doors at the desire of one party alone, it is an injustice to the other side. It is still more surprising that the Pársi Matrimonial Court should deliver its judgments also with closed doors, and thus keep the public ignorant of the censure passed upon the guilty and the justice dispensed to the innocent party by the Court. The present procedure gives encouragement to low characters who try to get rid of their partners by wrong means, as they see that they can escape censure from the public. It is desirable that appropriate changes should be made in the Pársi Matrimonial Law on the two points mentioned above.

Says that a wrong person sat on the jury which was convened to try Mr. Pattison at the recent Criminal Sessions held in Bombay.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (115) of the 2nd March states that the Mahomedan gentleman who sat on the jury which tried Mr. Pattison at the recent Criminal Sessions of the Bombay High Court was not the person whose name is borne on the Jury List. He bears the same name as that of the gentleman whose name is published in the list of Jurors. He does not know English. He imagined that the summons to attend the Court which was served upon him by mistake was meant for him and in this belief he attended at the High Court.

A search for contraband liquor under the A'bkári Act should not be made recklessly.

In alluding to the search made by the A'bkári Inspectors of Surat at the houses of certain parties to see whether any contraband liquor was concealed in them, the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 8th March observes that no contraband goods were found in any of the houses searched. The provision of the A'bkári Act empowering a search of a house in which it is suspected that more than a gallon of liquor is kept is objectionable, and the A'bkári Inspectors ought to be very cautious in proceeding upon this provision. If this is not done respectable people are likely to be subjected to unmerited annoyances. The A'bkári Act is not so objectionable as the mode in which it is worked, and hence it is to be hoped that the authorities concerned will exercise due check over the subordinates of the department against their making the Act an engine of oppression.

Complains that the Government Resolution on the controversy about the reward for the apprehension of Káku Wádiá was not forthcoming on the Editors' table.

The Akhbáre Sodágar (86) of the 7th March complains that the Government Resolution on the controversy between the Commissioner of Police and the Anglo-Indian Spinning and Weaving Company on the subject of the reward advertised for the apprehension of Káku Wádiá was not placed on the Editors' table though the Resolution bore superscription that it should be placed there. The absence of the Resolution from the Editors' table was the cause of the native newspapers not being able to publish it the same day on which it appeared in the local English dailies. It is to be hoped that the Governor will enquire and ascertain what parties gave this slight to the native newspapers, and punish them appropriately.

Says that the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, was not justified in refusing to grant indemnity to the Directors of the Anglo-Indian Mill against all future demands by alleged informers.

In a paragraph headed "A tempest in a tea-pot," the Native Opinion (10) of the 2nd March says:—We are sorry a little disagreement should have taken place between the Directors of the Anglo-Indian Spinning and Manufacturing Company and our worthy Police Commissioner on the score of the reward proclaimed some time since for the arrest of Káku Wádiá. The cause of the disagreement is in a nut-shell and could have been amicably settled without going to Government for a decision. Though we are not encouragers of the trade of informing, yet we consider that Sir Frank Souter's refusal to give the Company the names of the informers was justifiable. Leaving this apart, the whole burden of the protest of the Directors is that in handing over to the Police Commissioner the sum of five thousand rupees they asked for an indemnity from him against their being sued by any other parties for the same amount as reward. It seems on legal grounds that the demand above referred to on the part of the Directors was not unreasonable and the Commissioner of Police would have done well in acceding to it. We regret that Sir Frank Souter should have thought fit to lay before the public the whole correspondence rather too early. If Sir Frank Souter, as the Commissioner of Police, has a right to be placed in possession of the amount proclaimed by him as reward, the Directors have an equal right to be given an indemnity against all future demands by any alleged informers, real or pretended, about Káku Wádiá's whereabouts to the Bombay Police.

Education.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 2nd March is rejoiced that His Excellency the Viceroy has sent for Professor Wordsworth of the Elphinstone College to advise him on certain matters mentioned in the report of the Education Commission which His Excellency has under his consideration. The Professor, observes the Goftár, strongly advocated the cause of higher education in his evidence before the Commission, and will not, it is hoped, fail to plead specially for that cause in the Viceregal presence. There is every hope that the coming educational policy that is being hatched by Lord Ripon will lend due encouragement to primary education without at the same time curtailing the funds required for higher instruction.

Is glad that Professor Wordsworth has gone to Calcutta to advise the Viceroy on certain educational matters.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 2nd March observes that the appointment of Ráo Bahádur Ránade to the Small Cause Court Judgeship of Poona does great credit to the Government of Bombay. This appointment is exactly in keeping with two other recent appointments of natives to high offices. These nominations show that the Bombay Government appreciate native worth and talent. It is however to be regretted that the same discrimination is not shown in making appointments of Europeans to posts of trust and responsibility. In appointing Mr. Oliver to act first as Principal of the Elphinstone High School and subsequently as Professor of English Literature in the Elphinstone College, the Government have failed to appreciate the qualities which are required for the performance of the duties of those posts. In nominating Mr. Oliver to the post of Principal and to the Professorship of English, the interests of the students have been sacrificed.

Disapproves of the appointment of Mr. Oliver to the Principalship of the Elphinstone High School and to the Professorship of English Literature in the Elphinstone College.

Railways.

In noticing the recommendations made by the different Chambers of Commerce in India and England for the rapid extension of railway works in India, the Rást Goftár (115) of the 2nd March observes that natives should beware of joining in this cry for more railways. The European merchants need not think deeply about the matter, because the early extension of railroads will benefit them, whereas they have nothing to lose by an increase in the public debt of India. The cry raised in this country and in England at the same time is set up in the interests of English capitalists, speculators and merchants, without giving the least thought as to the dire effects of the extension from which India will have to suffer. The Ministry appears to have been led away by the cry. The Government of India seem to realize the exact condition of the country and are against the too rapid extension of railways. They are about to send an experienced officer from each of the departments of Public Works and Finance to give evidence before the Parlimentary Select Committee which will be shortly appointed to enquire into the matter. The political associations of India ought to warn the Ministry and Parliament against launching the country into a position that is sure to increase the burden of public debt. [The Suryă Prakásh (84) of the 1st March disapproves of the extension of railways in India in the present circumstances of the country.]

Disapproves of the rapid extension of Indian railways as advocated by the Chambers of Commerce in India and England.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 6th March, in referring to two recent accidents near the Abu Road Station of the Rájputána-Malwa Railway, by which six oxen were run over and killed, remarks that there is a sort of fencing in some parts of the line, which cattle do not find difficult to cross or break through. But in some parts the railway line has no fencing. The Railway authorities appear to be quite careless of the loss of life of dumb animals and do not appear to be afraid of the higher authorities. How is it that the authorities do not attend to this complaint, when accidents that deprive men and cattle of their lives frequently occur? When a Government Railway is thus managed, the people cannot be blamed for thinking that Government is partial. It is said that the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company was compelled by the Government of India to construct fencing on some part of their line which was not properly fenced in and a fine of Rs. 100 was imposed for every day that the whole fencing was not completed. As the Rájputána Railway is a Government line, cannot this complaint be redressed at once?

Necessity of erecting fencing on both sides of the Rájputána-Malwa Railway line.

Municipalities.

Necessity of storing inflammable articles at a distance from the city of Ahmedabad.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 29th February points out the necessity of storing inflammable articles at a great distance from populated quarters, and says that though the Municipal Act forbids the storage of these articles in populated places, the Municipal Commissioners of Ahmedabad do not attend to the complaint. After the disastrous fire in the store of kerosine oil and fireworks in the vicinity of the three gates which occurred some eight years ago, it was thought that the storage of such inflammable materials in the spacious bázár at three gates would be forbidden, but nothing of the kind has happened. As long as merchants are not prohibited from storing inflammable articles in their shops, they will not sacrifice their interest and cease ruining other people. The local Municipality stores up kerosine oil required for lighting street lamps in a lonely meadow near Ráyakbad. In the same manner, it should compel merchants to store such articles in solitary places. The storage of stubble in populated quarters of the city is fraught with great danger and has frequently caused harm. Nobody can say anything to those who store up hay in the city, for many of these are well-to-do persons and are Municipal Commissioners or are their relatives or friends. The inspectors and other officers of the Municipality must be winking over these things, for they cannot afford to incur the displeasure of the Commissioners and their acquaintances.

Native States.

Disapproves of the action of the Indian Government in treating as unimportant the accusations published against the Hyderabad officials in the columns of the Statesman newspaper.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 3rd March observes that it is not easy to divine the object of Government when it takes to praising individuals against whom complaints are made in public prints. Not only did the Government pay no heed to the accusations which appeared in the Statesman newspaper of Calcutta against the Hyderabad officials but actually it has been praising its own officers. The Statesman newspaper exposed the high-handed proceedings and questionable doings of Messrs. Cordery and Trevor, and hence it is quite an enigma that they should form the subjects of praise in a despatch by the Government of India to the Secretary of State. Mr. Robert Knight, the Editor of the Statesman, is not an ordinary man. He possesses immense experience of public affairs. When Government treat the writings of such an individual as of no value, then it is quite clear that newspaper publications are simply useless. It is certainly a matter of surprise that newspaper utterances proceeding from men of position and experience should be so ill-appreciated in the administration of a truth-loving Governor-General like Lord Ripon.

Takes exception to the adoption of the young son of the Chief of Kágal as the future occupant of the throne of Kolhápur.

The Arunodayă (14) of the 2nd March says that the appointments of Messrs. Mandlik, Telang, Apte and Ránade have given satisfaction to the public, but the same cannot be said of the adoption to the gádi at Kolhápur. From the manner in which the future ruler of the Kolhápur State has been selected, it would seem as if Government were determined to ignore public opinion. From the peculiar and unhappy fate of the last two Rájás of Kolhápur, it would have been proper for Government to have sanctioned the adoption of a grown up lad but instead a small boy of nine years of age has been selected. For this course there was no necessity whatever. It is true that since the father of the child is the Regent of Kolhápur, there is every chance that every possible care will be taken with respect to the education and bringing up of the former, and it is also true that there is hardly any fear of his being pronounced mad. But on general considerations the selection of the young son of the Regent of Kolhápur as the future ruler of that State has not been a happy one. The Rájás of Kolhápur are descended from the family of the Bhoslays, and therefore it was incumbent on Government to have made enquiries whether any living member of that family was fit to be adopted. If no fit individual was forthcoming, then the public would have had no ground of complaint against the present selection. The present Rája of Sátára, who is descended from the Bhoslay family, has more than one son. They are both grown up and intelligent. Their just claims ought not to have been set aside. The present house of Sátára is popular among the Hindus, and it was therefore the duty of Government to have done all in its power to enhance its prosperity. By selecting the son of the Chief of Kágal as the future ruler of the Kolhápur State an opportunity will be given to the people to think that Government wished the extinction of the Bhoslay family of Sátára. According to Hindu Law adoptions should be made of persons having the same gotra (family or lineage) as far as possible. Government have practically ignored this maxim. If a boy from the Bhoslay family of the Sátára branch had been selected, he would have become fit to undertake the conduct of administration in the course of a few years, and the condition of the fallen royal house of Sátára would have immensely improved. Such a policy would have been popular with the people and would have redounded to the credit of the British Government. The Chiefs of Kágal are the feudatories of the Rájás of Satára, and hence it was the duty of Aba Sáheb Kágalkar to have done everything in his power to enhance the importance of the ruined family from which his own greatness is derived. There is no wisdom in feathering one's own nest when there is the power and opportunity. The present Chief of Kágal would have risen in public estimation if he had on this occasion done nothing to benefit himself or his family. [The Shubh Suchak (64) of the 29th February and the Maháráshtră Mitră (41) of the 6th March in writing on the same subject disapprove of the adoption, and state that a grown up lad of the Bhoslay family should have been selected.]

Some remarks in connection with the adoption of a successor to the Kolhápur gádi.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 3rd March alludes to the selection of the son of the Chief of Kágal as the future ruler of the Kolhápur State, and observers that the festivities in honour of the adoption should be conducted with due regard to economy and too much pomp should not be exhibited on the occasion. The manner in which the administration of the Kolhápur territory is to be carried on in future should now be settled once for all in consultation with the British authorities so as to prevent any contentions hereafter. Proper arrangements should also be made for the education of the young Mahárája. The Indu Prakásh is of opinion that the time when the Mahárája is to be entrusted with full powers for managing his kingdom should not be fixed solely with reference to his age. If he shows capacity for the performance of administrative work at the age of sixteen, he should be at once invested with plenary authority. Some persons believe that when the adoption actually takes place, the Regency will be broken off and the management of affairs will be entrusted to a single Kárbhári as formerly. The Indu Prakásh considers the present arrangements satisfactory and any departure from them undesirable.

Approves of the re-appointment of Mr. S. N. Lád to the Diwánship of Cambay.

The same paper says :—A correspondent calls attention in our columns to the reinstatement of Mr. Shámráw Náráyan Lád to the Diwánship of Cambay from which he had been abruptly dismissed some time ago. The correspondent considers this unjust, and takes the Government of Bombay to task for undoing now what it had done before. To all appearances the act of the Government may be said to present this feature; but we think that there is another and a better point of view from which the question must be looked at. Sir James Fergusson has changed his opinion admittedly because His Excellency thinks the rage of popular discontent which prevailed in Cambay against Mr. Shámráw was not the result of any deliberate attempt on his part to annoy the people or of any wilful design to fatten himself at their expense. All that he was guilty of was indiscretion in introducing municipal and other reforms, which are not particularly agreeable to a people accustomed to a different sort of Government altogether. Sir James thinks so and Mr. Spry's opinion supports the view taken by His Excellency. It seems to us repairing a wrong is a greater and more valuable virtue in a ruler than adhering to the wrong, when once perpetrated, out of regard for consistency, even though convinced ultimately that a wrong had been done. As for the probability of the dismissed officials of Junágad being reinstated in office once more, the Government of Bombay can do nothing in the matter, it having been finally disposed of by the Secretary of State. The case of these latter officials is quite different, and public opinion, which has already pronounced itself against them, would certainly stand aghast if it should find them restored to the places for which they have been declared incompetent. [The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 29th February approves of the re-appointment of Mr. Lád to the Diwánship of Cambay, and says that the Nawáb has done an act of justice in reinstating him in office.]

Mismanagement of the Cambay State during the Diwánship of A'gá Mahomed Nabikhán.

The Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 2nd March states that in the month of January 1883 A'gá Mahomed Nabikhán, a brother-in-law of the Nawáb of Cambay, took charge of the Diwánship of the State, and from that time till he recently made over charge of the office to Mr. Shámráw Náráyan Lád, the sum of Rupees twenty-one thousand was misappropriated by him. This discovery was made at the time of Mr. Nabikhán's making over charge of the treasury to Mr. Lád. The former gave considerable annoyance to the latter when he fell into disgrace and had to leave Cambay in connection with the exodus of a large number of the subjects of the State. Mr. Lád was not revengeful and therefore permitted Mr. Nabikhán to leave the State unmolested, after passing to the State a bond for the amount misappropriated by him. When Mr. Nabikhán took charge of the Diwánship in January 1883 there was a balance of Rupees seventy-five thousand in the treasury, but not a pie out of this large amount was left when Mr. Lád received the charge of the treasury the other day. The amount was wasted in paying exorbitant salaries to several newly employed officials. The pay of the servants of the State is in arrears for three months. The land revenue of the State is also in arrears to the amount of about eighty lákhs of rupees.

Affairs at Morvi.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 2nd March says:—A correspondent writes to say that the Thákor Sáheb of Morvi has put into prison a number of his servants for alleged mal-practice in the building of a palace under Mr. Fernandez's direction. This, if true, is vicarious visitation. The Political Agent, who is winning golden opinions in Káthiáwár, will perhaps look into the matter and fix the blame on the proper parties. We dare say this is Thákor Wághji's object.

Berár Affairs.

Says that Government should give more money for primary instruction.

In noticing the review of the report on Education in the Berárs for 1882-83 by the Resident of Hyderabad, the Pramod Sindhu (53) of the 3rd March 1884, says:—We see that scarcity of funds has been complained of as an impediment to the free and speedy extension of the educational operations. We are surprised to read that classes attended by 40, 50 and even 60 pupils are made over to the tender mercies of masters on a mere pittance of Rs. 6 or so. We are told by the Director of Public Instruction that the results might have been better if we could have provided, where necessary, an adequate staff of assistant masters. His application for appropriating a larger portion of the cess funds has not been complied with and the expenditure on the primary schools has been restricted to a limited amount. We confess that we were scarcely prepared to discover that the administration of the Berárs, which is so rich, compact and prosperous, whose revenues have increased by leaps and bounds until they have doubled and trebled within a short period under the British administration, should find it hard to meet the legitimate demands for a mere elementary education of the people that have contributed to swell the receipts. The Resident has been pleased to remark that the proportion of the Government grant to the local cost is in excess of the percentage borne by provincial revenues in other parts of India. It may be so. But it will be more correct and equitable to see what proportion of their provincial revenues the different Governments and Administrations in India have been devoting towards popular education, and whether that proportion has been already reached in the Berárs, and whether under the educationally backward condition of the province some deviations could not be made. Unless the Government is willing to spend funds on elementary instruction adequate to the demands and consistent with the prosperous state of the revenues as well as with reference to the backward condition of the people, this province will not keep pace with the other and surrounding provinces under British administration. What has yet been accomplished with regard to the spread of elementary instruction in this country seems to be too little in proportion to what remains to be done if fifteen per cent. of the total population of a country be taken as the population fit to go to school as decided by the Education Commission. The Berárs contains a population of 2,672,673 souls. Fifteen per cent. of this is 400,000 in round number, which ought to be at the school. But we have only 36,287 boys and girls at schools both Government and Indigenous put together, that is to say, one in eleven boys and girls together is to be found under instruction. But if we deduct the attendance at the Indigenous schools, which are only nominally supported by Government, the proportion would fall still lower. At any rate it can generally be said that of the responsibilities that have naturally devolved upon them as regards national education our Government have been able to discharge only about one-eleventh part of them. In going into these details we only mean to show to our readers how great is the responsibility of Government and what gigantic measures will have to be devised to come up to the standard of national education as recommended by the Education Commission. The present financial prospects of the local educational department as shadowed forth by the Resident are not very reassuring or bright. The Resident in considering the financial aspect of the report under consideration is pleased to tell us that the proportion contributed by the provincial funds is much in excess of the percentage borne by provincial revenues in other parts of India. Besides being unwilling to increase the educational cess from Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. to Rs. 2, which latter is the rate levied in Bombay—a comparatively much poorer country than the Berárs—on the ground that the percentage borne by the local rates to the total expenditure on education is already a little in excess of that of Bombay and much more so than what obtains in India generally. Thus if one cannot be disturbed without disturbing the other, and the disturbance be neither justifiable nor desirable, then the conclusion amounts to this that there will be no hope of getting more or adequate funds. This is rather a discouraging prospect. While we admit the difficulty to some extent we still hope that the Resident will be able to see his way in view of the policy to be inaugurated in pursuance of the recommendation of the Education Commission to provide adequate funds in future. If he be so minded, he can find very good grounds for urging the claims of this province to special consideration by the Government of India.

Does not approve of the rumoured transfer of the Court of Judicial Commissioner from the Berárs to Hyderabad.

The Pramod Sindhu (53) of the 3rd March says that it has heard on good authority that the Resident of Hyderabad being heavily pressed with political work intends to relieve himself of the Judicial duties which are now exercised by him as the Highest Court of Appeal for the Berárs. It is said that the Judicial Commissioner is to be invested with the powers of a High Court and that he is to be removed to Hyderabad. It is also proposed to give one Judicial Assistant to the Commissioner, who is to perform the duties pertaining to the office of Judicial Commissioner. The Commissioner is to exercise the powers of a Sessions Court in such cases only as are punishable with death. The Pramod Sindhu is of opinion that Revenue officers should have no hand in Judicial matters. A complete separation of Judicial and Revenue duties is desirable. Tahsildárs should be relieved from the performance of work of Courts of Civil Jurisdiction. The Pramod Sindhu does not approve of the transfer of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner to Hyderabad. The Editors of newspapers in the Berárs and gentlemen of position and respectability unconnected with the public service should be called upon to give their opinions on this subject. The transfer of the Chief Appellate Court from the Berárs to Hyderabad would be extremely inconvenient to appellants. The location of the Chief Court in the midst of Courts subordinate to it is likely to increase the efficiency of the latter.

Requests Government to make public the documents relating to the negotiations about the Chanda Railway.

The Varhád Samáchár (70) of the 3rd March, in an article headed "The Chanda Railway scheme," says:—It seems to us that the Government of the Nizám and the Government of India should agree between them to publish for public information the whole of the documents bearing upon the scheme, and the negotiations which have accompanied the attempt to carry it through. What are the calculations of those who hold that the line will pay? They ought not to be kept in a pigeon-hole. Is it true that pressure of any kind was brought to bear upon the Peshkar to overcome his reluctance to the scheme? We are quite certain that if any pressure of the kind was brought to bear, the Government of India had no part in the proceeding. Nevertheless it is alleged that pressure was used. The allegation may be baseless, but it should be authoritatively met. The public have a right to be put in possession of the real state of the facts connected with this mysterious business. If the scheme be a boná fide one, similar to that for opening the Southern Marátha Country by a system of railways, it must gain by the fullest publicity.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
11th March 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Expression of opinion that a search for contraband liquor under the — Act should not be made recklessly 9
Advance of Russia in Central Asia: Expression of opinion that the British Government should take notice of the— 3
Agriculture: Remarks in connection with the recent Resolution of the Bombay Government on the sinking and working of wells for agricultural purposes 6
Appointments: Approval of the appointment of Mr. M. G. Ránade to the Small Cause Court Judgeship of Poona, and expression of a hope that Government will give him a still higher judicial post ... 8
British Government of India: Disavowal of sympathy with those who run down the— 3
Circuits: Disapproval of the way in which — are undertaken and the way in which poor villagers are made to supply provisions for insufficient payment 6
Income-tax: Advocacy of the imposition of an — on the classes now exempted from direct taxation 4
Jails: Suggestion of means for reducing the abnormal mortality prevailing among the native convicts in the Indian— 6
Judicial matters:
  Expression of a hope that Mr. Nánábhái Haridás will be confirmed as Judge of the Bombay High Court when Mr. Melvill takes his seat in the Executive Council 8
  Expression of opinion that Pársi divorce suits should not be heard with closed doors except when both parties to the suit agree to the procedure 8
  Statement that a wrong person sat on the jury which was convened to try Mr. Pattison at the recent Criminal Sessions held in Bombay 9
Legislative Councils:
  Expression of opinion that when the scheme of local self-government is in good working order it will furnish individuals who will in every way be qualified to take part as members of the local Legislature 4
  Suggestions about selecting members of the Supreme and Local—... 5
Police: Expression of opinion that the Commissioner of —, Bombay, was not justified in refusing to grant indemnity to the Directors of the Anglo-Indian Mill against all future demands by alleged informers. 9
Vernacular Press: Complaint that the Government Resolution on the controversy about the reward for the apprehension of Káku Wádiá was not forthcoming on the Editors' table 9

Part II.—Education—

Appointment of Mr. Oliver to the Principalship of the Elphinstone High School and to the Professorship of English Literature in the Elphinstone College: Disapproval of the— 10
Summoning of Professor Wordsworth to Calcutta to advise the Viceroy on certain educational matters: Approval of the— 10

Part III.—Railways—

Extension of railways in India: Disapproval of the rapid — as advocated by the Chambers of Commerce in India and England 10
Rájputána-Malwa Railway line: Necessity of erecting fencing on both sides of the— 10

Part IV.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Necessity of storing imflammable articles at a distance from the city of— 11

Page.

Part V.—Native States—

Cambay:

Approval of the re-appointment of Mr. S. N. Lád to the Diwánship of— 12

Mismanagement of the — State during the Diwánship of A'gá Mahomed Nabikhán... 13

Hyderabad: Disapproval of the action of the Indian Government in treating as unimportant the accusations published against the — officials in the columns of the Statesman newspaper 11

Kolhápur:

Objection to the adoption of the young son of the Chief of Kágal as the future occupant of the throne of— 11

Some remarks in connection with the adoption of a successor to the gádi of— 12

Morvi: Affairs at— 13

Part VI.—Berár Affairs—

Chanda Railway: Request to Government to make public the documents relating to the negotiations about the— 15

Primary instruction: Expression of opinion that Government should give more money for— 13

Transfer of the Court of Judicial Commissioner from the Berárs to Hyderabad: Disapproval of the rumoured— 14

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 15th March 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
*13	The Aranyă Pandit	Bombay	Fortnightly	100
14	„ Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
15	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
16	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
17	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
18	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*19	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*20	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
21	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
22	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*23	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
24	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
25	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
26	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
27	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
28	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
29	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
30	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
31	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
32	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
33	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*34	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*35	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
36	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
37	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
38	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
39	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
40	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
41	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
42	„ Málika	Poona	Monthly	100
43	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Weekly	150
44	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*45	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
46	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
47	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
48	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*49	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
50	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
51	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
53	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
56	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
57	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
58	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
59	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
60	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*61	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
62	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*63	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
64	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
*65	„ Srishtidarpan	Bombay	Do.	200
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 1115

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
71	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Lok Mitră	Bombay	Do.	800
83	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
84	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
85	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
86	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
87	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
88	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*89	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
90	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
91	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
92	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
93	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
94	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
95	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
96	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
97	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*98	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
99	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
100	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
101	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*102	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
103	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*104	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
105	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
106	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
107	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*108	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
109	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
110	„ Kusum Guchchhă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	350
111	„ Nágar Udayă	Do.	Do.	300
112	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
113	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
114	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
115	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
116	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
*117	„ Saras Sár	Do.	Monthly	200
118	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Weekly	400
*119	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
120	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*121	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
122	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*123	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
124	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
125	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
126	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
127	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
128	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*129	, Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
*134	„ Dabdabe Islám[3]	Do.	Do.	200
135	„ Khádam-e-Hind	Do.	Daily	200
136	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Weekly	160
	PERSIAN.
137	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*138	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[3] This paper is received gratis with the Armagán.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1831.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Recommends the abolition of the Indian Council.

In noticing the letter recently addressed by Sir William Wedderburn to the Bombay Gazette, the Gujaráti (101) of the 9th March observes that the Indian Council has done no good to India and ought to be abolished. The Government in this country should be subjected to the direct control of Parliament in which a few representatives of India should be admitted. The Gujaráti exhorts the political associations in India to memorialise the Home Government on the subject and to obtain this valuable concession.

Disapproves of the policy of the American Government towards the Fenian leaders in America.

The Suryă Prakásh (84) of the 8th March says:— America seems to have usurped the place of Ireland in molesting the innocent population of England. The rebellious spirit of the Irishmen is there as much at work as it was in their native country. Alas! that a few bloodthirsty individuals should succeed in inducing to their standard of rebellion unconscious souls with the express purpose of dragging them to ruin. The Fenian leaders would not only not rest themselves but would not allow others to rest, though all that they say and do is reported by them to be done for their country's welfare! Truly sapient fellows those American Irishmen must be, who say they serve their country's interests when they by their very acts appear to mar them materially. For instance, who would propose burning London? Who would advise the people to call the London Bank their own, and as such to apply to it for supplies of money—as if there was not the slightest fear of a refusal—wherever their wants required them to do? None but those at their wits' end. Those unthinking men, not satisfied with only reports that are calculated to throw a stigma upon their civilization, appear now to have gone the length of using secret means of destruction, a cowardly mode of vengeance. The British Government has, now that words have come to blows, drawn the attention of the American Government to this display of brutality on the part of the Fenian leaders. Is it not strange that the American Government should so long have been ignorant of the dark nature of the proceedings of these men? Can it be possible that the American Government has connived at them? Had that Government in any way shown that the Fenian views were not its views, the rebellious Irishmen would have easily seen that the day was against them and would therefore have remained silent. Anyhow it is the American policy that has allowed the rebellious spirit of the Irishmen to work so much ruin and to create discord between the governors and the governed. It is however high time the British Government thought seriously of the matter, else the crouching wolf will some day make a spring too dangerous to be avoided. The Fenian leaders appear from the late exhibition of their ferocious conduct to be incapable of nothing dreadful, so long as they are not checked in adopting measures for the purpose of wreaking a terrible vengeance on the people of England. And it must be through the American Government that a successful blow should be struck not so much for the security of the British Government as for the safety of its people, who are unconscious of perils that may come at any time and from any direction.

Expresses a hope that in case of a change of Ministry in England another Lord Lytton may not be sent to India to undo the work of Lord Ripon.

In a paragraph headed "Lord Ripon's successor," the Native Opinion (10) of the 9th March says:—Even our well-informed contemporary of the local Gazette seems in a way to think that the so-called rumour about Lord Ripon's resignation is not far from realization. If that be so, one may naturally be led to ask who will be the coming man. If the Conservatives gain the day at the next general election, of course the Governor-General cannot but be their man unless Lord Ripon's rumoured retirement takes place before the elections. No doubt the difficulties of the present Cabinet are increasing, but we do not yet see any positive signs of an approaching dissolution and an appeal to the country. Whosoever succeeds to the office, our prayer to Parliament is that another Lord Lytton may not be sent out to India to dig at the very foundations of the empire by ill-considered and ill-judged deeds. India has to some extent gained some advanced position in the British party politics, but that is not the standpoint in reference to which an appointment, on which hinges the welfare of a great dependency, ought to be made. The foundations of the empire are not to be laid anew, now that Lord Ripon has made them firm and sunk them deeper. What we want is a person to conserve them, draw the bonds of relationship closer, and give the country an increasing number of popular and free institutions. It cannot be that the mother-country of Lord Ripon cannot give us another Ripon; but party-fury, and an ardent desire to undo the work already done by way of showiug their originality, should not guide the party which may come into power in making their nomination.

Advises the British Government to make their position in Central Asia so secure as to be independent of Russia's good graces and friendly promises.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 9th March observes that though it is not necessary to take the least alarm at the discovery of the plans of General Tehernaieff, till recently the trusted Agent of Russia in Central Asia, for carrying out the Russian policy of aggrandisement and intrigue in that region, yet it would not serve the British Government to be at all satisfied with such mere eyewash as the ostensible change of Russian Agents in Central Asia, made by way of the so-called concessions to English susceptibilities. It is by this time as plain as daylight, that English susceptibilities are held of no account by Russia as long as her plots promise to prove easy of accomplishment without being discovered. It is only when an exposure of any of them becomes imminent or a fact accomplished, that Russia shows signs of deferring at all to English susceptibilities. The discovery made respecting the plots with the carrying out of which General Tehernaieff had been busy for a considerable time past, has been found too significant to be explained away by any other means short of the ostensible dismissal of the General, so as to save the rest of the authors of this Muscovite perfidy from the moral consequences at least of their doings. But England must now cease to be satisfied with this sort of scape-goat making dodges peculiar to the fashion or want of Russia. A vigorous and unmistakable effort should be made to render the British situation in Central Asia independent of Russia's good graces and friendly promises. Nothing short of extreme watchfulness, based on utter disbelief in the friendly protestations on the part of the Muscovite would serve the British cause; and any diplomatic arrangement or policy devoid of such watchfulness as its basis, must end in disappointment and disconcert, if not disgrace and disaster in the long run. General Tehernaieff is by no means the first scape-goat made to appease the offended feelings of the British people on the discovery of Russian perfidy in Central Asia. Nor is the position acquired in Merv the first advance made good in the steady progress of Russia towards India. Those who have eyes to see and intellect to comprehend things as they actually appear, can no longer afford to be blind to the real purpose of the dubious doings of the wily Muscovite Government during the last quarter or near upon half a century. [The Yajdán Parast (127) and the Kaiser-i-Hind (108) of the same date express similar sentiments. The latter at the same time shows that there are insuperable and natural and political hindrances in the way of Russia invading India. Russia more than England will have moreover to fear from the evil effects of the threatened invasion. The Suryá Prakásh (84) of the 8th March urges the construction of a railway from Sibi to Quetta for the safety of India. It is true that lákhs of rupees will have to be spent on it but the money so spent will prove very beneficial in future. Government ought to take preventive measures against the advance of Russia.]

Remarks in connection with the question of maintaining an extremely costly Civil Service in India.

In a paragraph headed "Reform in Administration," the Native Opinion (10) of the 9th March says:—Of course those who are in the enjoyment of fat berths under the present form of administration will not appreciate the idea of a reform which is likely to touch their pockets. To such people Rámji bin Ráoji's sensible writings in the Bombay Gazette cannot but prove a very unpalatable cud to chew indeed. However the time has arrived, the Civil Service and its supporters notwithstanding, when an over-hauling of all the departments, particularly the heaven-born close bureau, has become a necessity, if the Government really desires to give some relief to the already over-taxed Indian people. The Covenanted Civil Service is making encroachments upon the other State departments which requires a careful looking after. With a limited annual indent upon England for Civil servants and with the confinement and eligibility of such to the Revenue Department only, the filling in of the Judicial, Engineering, Forest, Customs and other departments by a cheaper agency will curtail to some extent our present administrative extravagance. We cannot over-estimate the services which Rámji bin Ráoji is doing, if not to the Civil Service at least to the people of India. The cry against such reform is self-interested and that can deserve no consideration whatsoever at the hands of a responsible Government when the interests of a whole people are at stake.

Complains of the dearness of British justice.

The Suryă Prakásh (84) of the 8th March says that truly speaking justice is dear under British rule. Not only has time to be sacrificed while suits are proceeded with but court fees and fees of vakils and barristers are very heavy. The people of India are not rich. It is unwise to form a standard for the poor from the wealthy classes. Government do not know of the expenditure incurred in a suit from beginning to end. Many a time suitors have to mortgage their property for carrying on their suits. If the decision is favourable, it is well and good for the suitors who anyhow pass their days; but if unfavourable, their condition is pitiful. Many a time poor persons do not seek redress against the unlawful and oppressive conduct of rich men owing to the heavy expenses and loss of time involved in so doing. Government would lose nothing by lessening court fees. On the contrary the reduction would prove profitable, for many cases which are not taken before judicial tribunals would be brought before them. Delays in the administration of justice should also be prevented. This complaint perhaps owes its origin to want of time at the disposal of officers. In that case fresh suits should not be entertained before the decision of old cases or otherwise assistants should be appointed to help the judges. Perhaps Government may not like to incur additional expenditure. At any rate the Government of Lord Ripon should undertake this reform. It is necessary that the fees of advocates should also be reduced.

Suggests the substitution of a low income-tax in place of the license-tax.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 9th March, in an article headed, "License-tax or Income-tax," approvingly refers to two articles in the London Economist of the 2nd and 9th February last on the subject, condemns the abolition of the duties levied on English cotton goods imported into the country and the declaration made by Sir Evelyn Baring that salt-duty should be a financial reserve in times of emergency, and remarks:—We have uniformily maintained that a low income-tax alone ought to be considered a financial reserve. You may call it another way a license-tax if you please. But what we have said over and over again is that the income-tax has never had fair play. Owing to the clamour of the selfish aristocracy no Government has been hitherto found strong enough to try the experiment. Almost the same arguments, which we advanced two years ago in these columns, have been cogently urged by the Bombay correspondent of the Economist. Each attempt at levying an income-tax has been ushered in by agitation which has never had time to settle. A good deal of nonsense has been invariably talked about extortion and oppression, apart from the inquisitorial character of the tax. But has this assertion, which has now been a stereotyped argument with the classes who are most able to oppose it, ever been calmly surveyed? Has any attempt been made to prove its hollowness? Of course not. Why, because the non-official classes have been supported in this insensate cry by the officials who never like being touched in their pockets. Give the tax a fair trial, adjust its incidence so as to exclude all incomes under Rs. 1,200 per annum, appoint honest assessors and equally conscientious informers, and we have not the least doubt that a sum four times that derived from the present inequitable license-tax can be easily collected, without any oppression, with as low a rate as 1½ per cent. It is observed that the political opposition, which the upper classes could excite, would become more dangerous than the proceeds of the tax would warrant. We doubt this very much. It is our strong conviction that the selfish upper class are simply trading on the credulity of a timid Government. Let our rulers take heart of grace and devise an income-tax or license-tax on a graduated scale, which after deducting cost of collection, may add from two to three millions at the least to the coffers, and our assertion may be tested. The fact is that no statesmanlike policy of a continuous character has ever been adopted in India. And hence the lack of experience and confidence essential to a Government like ours. It is high time that the Government of Lord Ripon thought about a permanent income-tax for the purposes of ordinary revenue and as a financial reserve to fall back upon in times of emergency. Let him not be deterred from the consideration of this problem which is not so difficult of solution as represented by one section of the community, the most selfish and influential. Knowing as we do the sympathy of the present Government for the wrongs to which the masses have been subjected in the shape of heavy direct and indirect taxation, we earnestly call for some such scheme as we have sketched above. It will no doubt be cried down by the rich when about to be introduced. But the cry will not long survive its passage. We are old enough to know what agitation from the richer classes of Indians means. Every sentence of the writer in the Economist in his article of 26th December deserves consideration. All parties are agreed in the condemnation of a fiscal system whose whole weight rests upon the heavy laden masses, and they believe that a direct tax upon the well-to-do classes would equalise the burden. Viewing the question of direct taxation from all sides, we must come to the conclusion that it is the poorest who suffer most under it. Further on, the writer says "the pampered monopolists of exemption would be disaffected, and having the native press at their command, would agitate public opinion against the tax." This is only partially true and in a very limited sense. The income-tax will have to be made permanent in the country. When placed on an equitable basis it might yield a sufficient revenue to enable the Government by and bye to further reduce the heavy salt-duty. There is yet a good deal to be said on the subject, and as it is not quite certain that no fiscal changes are to be introduced in the new budget, it is necessary that the press should ventilate the question, if any practical reform, based on sound economic principles, is to be attempted next year. The question is perfectly ripe for decision and ought to be taken in hand at once.

Government should take immediate steps to divest the license-tax of its glaring inequalities and anomalies.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 9th March observes that if practicable the license-tax should be abolished; but looking to the special purposes for which it was been imposed and considering the state of the Exchequer together with the many pressing and evergrowing demands on the Finance Minister, for funds to meet admitted public wants, it would be out of question to think of the abandonment of any existing source of public revenue. Again, seeing that Lord Ripon is opposed to the imposition of any additional tax upon the people, it would be useless to suggest, especially on the very eve of the publication of the annual financial statement, any modification of the license or any other tax that may have the tendency of imposing any fresh burden on any class of the people. However, the bitterest complaint about the license-tax is against nothing so much as its iniquitous incidence. There is, for instance, no reason for excluding the official classes from its operation. And there is not the shadow of excuse for excluding the most thriving portions of the community—the professional classes—from the liability to pay a fair share of the tax. There is, again, hardly any justice in making the wretched pedler and the well-to-do trader or the small shroff and a limited liability bank pay the tax according to a scale that presupposes their equal ability to contribute to the needs of the State. Again, one of the most absurd feature of the tax is that which allows the maximum levy in the different provinces to vary from 200 to 500 rupees. If Government would take up this subject of their own accord and try to do away with the inequalities of the tax, the task would be much pleasanter and easier for them to perform than when compelled to do so by the force or pressure of irresistible public demand.

Complains that the orders of the Supreme Government for the purchase of indigenous articles for use in Government offices are not strictly complied with.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 10th March observes that the Resolution issued some time ago by Lord Ripon's Government that as far as possible indigenous articles should be used in Government offices and for State purposes, was intended for the encouragement of indigenous arts and industries; but it seems that several wilful officers have not paid due attention to the wishes of Government in this matter. During the nine months ending 31st December Government stores of the value of eighteen millions and two hundred thousand rupees were imported from foreign countries; and compared to the stores imported during the same months of the previous year, in the current year the purchases of foreign articles exceeded by about two millions and four hundred thousand rupees. This is really to be regretted. Excepting iron India can produce every article of consumption, and why should articles be imported? India can and does produce as much paper as is required by Government and yet it is purchased in the English markets. During the first nine months of 1881 paper for use in Government offices of the value of 4¾ lákhs was imported; during the same months of 1882 paper of the value of 9 lákhs was imported; and during the same months of 1883 the importations were of the value of 12½ lákhs of rupees. Thus the Resolution of the Supreme Government for the purchase of native articles has been grossly overlooked. The Supreme Government ought not to allow this flagrant disregard of their orders, and should issue stringent instructions requiring strict compliance with their wishes in the matter.

Native officers drawing two-thirds of the salary paid to a European officer while holding the same post ought to get the same batta as is paid to the latter.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 11th March observes that Government have ruled that a Government officer drawing a monthly salary of Rs. 500 while travelling by rail or steamer should be allowed to travel first class, or should be paid batta at the rate of eight annas per mile while travelling by ordinary carriage; and that officers drawing less than 500 rupees per month should be allowed second class passage while travelling by rail or steamer or four annas per mile while using the ordinary carriage. This rule is applicable to Europeans and natives alike and no objection can be taken to it. But by a recent Resolution this rule has been made applicable to such natives as draw two-thirds of the pay given to a European while holding the same post. Thus a European drawing a salary of Rs. 500 per month is paid first class batta; but when the same post is held by a native who is paid according to the two-thirds rule; he is paid only second class batta. This is an injustice to the native officers who properly speaking ought to get first class travelling allowance. It is therefore to be hoped that the Supreme Government will not fail to redress the wrong consciously or unconsciously done to their native officers.

Says that European Judges inflict unnecessarily severe punishments on native culprits irrespectively of the nature of the guilt of the latter.

The Poona Vaibhav (50) of the 9th March says that recently a case was reported in the newspapers which illustrates in a fair way the manner in which justice is administered in India by European Judges. A reckless Musalmán a short time ago attempted to take away forcibly the wife of a Bráhman in Sylhet. This outrageous conduct so incensed the respectable inhabitants of the town that they took the law into their own hands and beat the man soundly, which ultimately resulted in his death. About thirty-five persons were prosecuted for joining in the affray and committed to the sessions. The Judge who tried them sentenced one man to death, thirty-three to transportation for life and one to an imprisonment for a year and a half. The Indian Penal Code is noted for its severity. When in addition to this the Judge is very severe in inflicting punishments, the result can be easily conceived. Those Europeans who administer justice in India know only one principle; namely, that of passing severe sentences irrespectively of the circumstances of the case. Of course how could Europeans be expected to know the feelings of Hindus when the honour of a woman of their own caste is outraged by a low Mahomedan? Among Europeans if one man carries away the wife of another, the utmost punishment to which the former is subjected is a fine of a few hundred rupees by a Civil Court. The case is otherwise in Hindu society. The crime of adultery is looked upon in such a serious light that death is considered preferable to this kind of injury. It is impossible to understand the principle on which the Judge justified his conduct in visiting with extreme severity the guilt of those who chastised the man who had dared to carry away forcibly the wife of another. The only principle which European Judges have in view is to inflict the severest punishments on natives irrespectively of the nature of their guilt.

Makes certain suggestions in connection with the International Exhibition to be held in Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 14th March is extremely glad that the Government of Bombay have resolved to hold an International Exhibition in Bombay, but is much concerned that Government should have decided to incur no pecuniary cost or risk on account of the exhibition. The Samáchár observes that Government have directed that the necessary funds for the exhibition should be raised by a public subscription and that the profits realized from the concern should be distributed among the subscribers; but this arrangement is not likely to prove satisfactory. If the proposed exhibition was a small affair the arrangement suggested by Government would work well. It has been estimated that the exhibition will cost about four lákhs of rupees, and it is doubtful that whether such a large sum will be forthcoming without a guarantee from Government. Government have made the suggestion for a public subscription on the precedents of the exhibitions held in England in 1851 and 1862, but the people of Bombay are not conversant with exhibitions and are not accustomed to do the things done by the public in England without any aid from Government. Again M. Joubert has publicly stated that he has had to suffer a pecuniary loss from the Calcutta Exhibition. For these reasons it is doubtful whether the public will freely come forward for subscribing for the exhibition, and hence Government should bear a portion of the cost of the exhibition. At least Government should announce that they will make up the amount of the estimated cost should the public subscriptions fail to realize the required sum. [The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the same date is also glad that an exhibition is to be held, and makes the following suggestions :—That an estimate should be made of the probable cost of the exhibition; that the mills and other factories in Bombay and the mofussil municipalities should be called upon to state what aid they can give towards the undertaking; that one hundred rupees debentures should be issued plainly stating that their purchasers will be entitled to any pecuniary profit or will be put to a loss that may result from the exhibition; that the exhibition buildings should be raised in the oval in front of the High Court which is a very charming spot; that a building should be erected at the bandstand end of the oval which would serve as a permanent art gallery; that a zoological garden and extensive pleasure garden should also be provided in the oval. If the subscribers do not get back at the close of the exhibition the sums they have paid, they should be given a lien on the income derived from the art gallery until they have received in full what they paid.]

Justifies its unfriendly tone towards the Bombay Government.

With reference to the remark that the Gujaráti (101) and the Hitechchhu (81) newspapers were "unfriendly to Government," made under the head "Literature and the Press in the Administration Report for the Bombay Presidency for the year 1882-83," the Gujaráti (101) of the 9th March observes that the report does not state that the unfriendliness complained of was shown to the Supreme Government or to the Bombay Government. The writer of the report however cannot mean the Supreme Government since every Vernacular newspaper has been praising the merciful and beneficent rule of Lord Ripon. The remark then must apply to the policy of the Bombay Government, and the question is whether there were any acts of the local Government which justified the unfriendly tone adopted towards it? The reply is that there were such acts, and this fact the Bombay Government itself cannot deny. It does not become the local administration to find fault for blaming it when it was guilty of such acts as, for instance, the enforcement of the Revenue Survey system, the Forest Rules, the A'bkári Rules, the Contagious Diseases Act, the injustice done to the Bombay Municipality in pecuniary matters, the persistence shown in introducing the Madras time in Bombay, the improper minutes recorded by Sir James Fergusson and the Honourable Mr. Peile in the matter of the massacre of Maiyás, the unbecoming appearance of the opposition made to the Viceregal scheme of local self-government, the appointment of Messrs. A'gá Alisháh and Ráste to the local Legislative Council, and many other equally objectionable measures. According to the saying "your enemy is your best friend," the Gujaráti is the true friend of the Bombay Government, and advises it to follow closely the beneficent policy of Lord Ripon's administration.

Comments in connection with the remark made in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency that the Hitechchhu newspaper is unfriendly to Government.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 13th March says:—Wise and large-minded persons remember with gratitude those who point out their errors. But narrow-minded men and those anxious to follow their own inclinations always look upon opponents as their enemies. In those countries where the will of the king is law, the people cannot criticise the policy of the State; such countries are not governed with a due regard for the happiness and feelings of the people in them. When disturbances arise in them they are attributed to the disloyalty of the subjects. But the reverse is the case with those Governments which think that their good is comprised in making their subjects happy in all respects. It is proper to regard remarks made against those measures of State which cause needless harm to the people and which result in producing disaffection and discord amongst them as directed against the officers who originated them than as directed against the State. We have neither heard nor remember a word being ever said against the British Government either by ourselves or by any native paper. We found it necessary to make some remarks against the policy of the Government of India in the time of Lord Lytton. But after the appointment of a new officer in his place and the consequent change of policy, we do not remember having even said a word against the present policy of Government. On the contrary we have taken numerous opportunities of praising the just measures of Lord Ripon. We find a sort of satisfaction in being considered one of the opposite side in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Government. For this reason that even in such a vast empire as England, the opposition is not less regarded and is considered to render as much service as the party in power. The Compiler of the Administration Report must have seen that we have rendered service to the country to that extent to which the Bombay or Supreme Government cared to attend to the remarks which we made on different occasions on those measures which we thought were opposed to the interest of the people. Perhaps self-willed and arbitrarily inclined persons may for this reason look upon and act towards us with displeasure. Notwithstanding the angry attitude of such persons, we think it much more befitting to render some service to the people as well as to Government by duly criticising such measures as appear likely to produce estrangement between the rulers and the ruled.

Contrasts the conduct of the Collectors of Kolába and Ratnágiri under similar circumstances to the prejudice of the latter officer.

The Vichárshil (76) of the 3rd March, in a communicated article, compares the conduct of the Collectors of Kolába and Ratnágiri respectively under similar circumstances. The writer says that when the houses in the village of Morbe were burnt down about two months ago, the District Collector instantly went to the scene of the disaster and gave every possible help to the inhabitants in their distressed condition. He immediately started a relief fund and himself headed the subscription list with the sum of Rs. 100. He invited the rich people of Bombay to afford pecuniary assistance. Now contrast the conduct of Mr. Wilson under similar circumstances. About the same time when the conflagration happened at Morbe, about twenty houses in the village of Murúd in the Dápoli Táluka were burnt down. The event happened late in the night and consequently owing to want of assistance all the property within the houses was destroyed. The occurrence of a conflagration at Murúd was known the next day at the Dápoli Táluka Kacheri, but the local Mámlatdár does not appear to have done as much as the Mámlatdár of Mamedgaum did when a similar occurrence took place at Morbe. When Mr. Wilson, the Collector, visited Murúd in January, the inhabitants of that village brought their distressed condition and the destruction of their crops by locusts to his notice, but not only did he not give or promise any help but did not even visit the scene of the calamity. He did not listen calmly to their grievances, but told them that they must sell the ornaments worn by the women of their household and meet the land revenue demand of Government. This shows how little Mr. Wilson cares for the interest of the people committed to his charge.

Criticises the Government review of the Police Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency for the year 1882-83.

In criticising the Resolution of Government reviewing the Police Administration Reports of the Bombay Presidency including Sind for the year 1882-83, the Mahrátta (2) of the 9th March says :—A consideration of the strength of the Police force in the different districts leaves an impression on the mind that our present Police force is inadequate taken as a whole but very much so in the case of some particular districts, especially when it is remembered that the whole Police force is not engaged in Police work proper, but some proportion is always employed on duties which can by no stretch of meaning be considered the legitimate duties of the Police. The force of 18,035 men, moreover, includes officers of all ranks. If the number of Police Superintendents, their Assistants and Inspectors are deducted from the above figure as they ought to be, the remainder will represent the sepoys who are available for Police duty. To expect proper protection of life and property from such a small body appears to us to be unreasonable. The inadequacy of the Police force in some districts is admitted by Government who have expressed their willingness to consider moderate proposals for an increase to it in the districts of Hyderabad and Ahmednagar. The Commissioner, C. D., complains that the Police are undermanned in the districts of Násik and Sholápur and to these we may add Kaládgi and Dhárwár, both which districts like the first two are contiguous to Native States and therefore require a comparatively stronger Police force. We are strongly of opinion that our Police requires to be numerically strengthened in many districts, but especially in those above specified, if it is to be a really useful body. A complete re-organization is a necessity which sooner or later, must be faced. An addition to the Police force of course means more money and how that is to be provided for is the problem to be solved. We are confident that a judicious re-organization of the department will enable the necessary additions to be made without extra cost, and we shall briefly indicate how. The salaries at present allowed to Police Superintendents and their Assistants are unnecessarily large and might well bear a reduction of at least 20 per cent. all round. The recent appointments of Police Probationers would seem to show that Government consider the augmentation of the supervising staff to be more necessary than an increase in the number of policemen. The truth, however, seems to us to lie in the opposite direction. We maintain that if the funds made available for the salaries of the Police Probationers had been utilized in strengthening the rank and file of the Police force in the above-mentioned districts, the money would have been more profitably spent. The charges of some Chief Constables are so heavy that it would be obviously advantageous to split them up and place them under separate Chief Constables. We fail to see that any benefit is derived from the appointment of a dozen Police Probationers. Whe object to the Police Probationer scheme on other ground also. When the Police Department was organized on its present basis, it was understood that meritorious natives would be allowed to rise to the posts of Assistant Superintendents, if not District Superintendents of Police, for there is nothing in the law to forbid such appointments. But what are the facts? During the long time that has elapsed since, not a single native has been appointed to the post of Assistant Superintendent and distinguished Native Police Officers who have grown grey in the service and who might have creditably filled the coveted posts, have had to be content with Inspectorships of Police the maximum salary of which is the comparatively small sum of Rs. 250. Within the last few years several Native Police Officers have been rewarded for their distinguished and meritorious services, but how? Not by promotion to the post of Assistant Superintendent of Police, but with the empty title of Ráo Bahádur or Khán Bahádur and a sword, just for the sake of variety we suppose. The hopes of Native Police Officers having been so grievously disappointed in this matter, it would have been very proper for Government to have promoted some Native Police Officers in the highest class, the Inspectors, to the rank of Police Probationers. But what are the facts? We find that inexperienced European youths, whose only qualification would appear to be that they had failed to pass any examinations in England, but who must be provided with some appointments here because forsooth their fathers belonged to the services in India—we find that such men, ignorant of the languages, ignorant of the manners and customs, ignorant of the inner life, ignorant, in fact, of everything relating to natives, a knowledge of which is essential to make an efficient Police Officer—are put over the heads of tried and grey-haired Native Police Officers as Police Probationers—only to draw handsome salaries and travelling allowances and to write weekly diaries and nothing more. We maintain that the money spent on them is so much waste. In paragraph 23 of the Government Resolution it is said that Government concur with the Commissioner in considering that it is very desirable that Police Officers in the Southern Marátha Country should be acquainted with Kánarese. Government have already determined upon keeping a Police Probationer at Belgaum and another at Dhárwár. All we would say anent this is that giving a Police Probationer to a district to learn everything ab initio is not quite the right thing to do, when competent natives possessed of all the requisite qualifications are available in abundance. You may keep one dozen Police Probationers in each district in lieu of one, but matters will not be a whit better for it. We are glad to find that the remissness of certain officers has not escaped the censure of Government although the more serious instances deserved severer punishment than a mere severe reprimand. We cannot conclude without asking why the good services rendered by deserving native superior officers should not likewise be mentioned in the Resolution. An honourable mention of their services made in a review of the Police Reports, which is communicated to the Government of India and to the Secretary of State, will undoubtedly stimulate them to greater exertion and we fail to see why this mode of expressing appreciation of their services, which costs nothing, should be grudged.

Complains of the delay occurring in the removal of persons injured by accidents to hospitals by police sepoys.

The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 13th March complains of the want of presence of mind displayed by police sepoys at the time of accidents and of the practice of taking injured persons to their superiors instead of taking them at once to hospitals, and says that it is no wonder that sometimes injured persons die on their way to or soon after admission into hospital. On the morning of the 9th instant, a male child two or three days old was found exposed outside the Sárangpara gates at Ahmedabad. It was not immediately taken to the adjoining Ranchhodlál dispensary, but was kept awaiting the arrival of the mukhi near the police station that enquiries might be made. The child appeared to be hungry and was growing cold, when a woman taking pity on it suckled it at her breast. If it was necessary to take the opinion of the Panch, it could as well have been done after its admission into hospital. It is necessary that injured persons should as soon as possible after an accident be taken to hospital and if, in addition, police peons are instructed in the art of taking remedial measures at such junctures, many lives would be saved. Government should order the immediate removal of injured persons into hospital and the enquiry into the case should be ordered to be made in hospital by police officers.

Increase in the number of thefts at Ahmedabad.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 7th March says that thefts are increasing in number at Ahmedabad. How can the inhabitants remain fearless when thefts are committed near public roads and near the beats of police sepoys at night. The Inspector of Police ought to go about the city at night in disguise and detect sepoys who may be asleep.

Complains of an increase in the number of thefts at Umreth.

A correspondent of the Kaira Vartamán (107) of the 12th March says that thefts are increasing in number at Umreth. Within the last six months robberies have been committed more than twenty times. A theft of about Rs. 400 was committed on the 2nd instant from the house of the Taláti of Garmála but the police has not succeeded in finding out the thieves. Moreover, a murder has been committed at a place six miles from Umreth and the police has apprehended some persons on suspicion. Where robbers are rampant, the police force must be inadequate for the proper performance of its duties. The authorities concerned ought to attend to this complaint. [The Umreth Samáchár (124) of the 9th March says that the people have become much afraid of thieves within the last eight or ten days, for thefts from one or two houses are reported every morning. The police ought to make arrangements for the safety of the people.]

Prays for a reduction in the rate of the newspaper postage.

The Gujarát Mitră (80) of the 9th March joins the Madras Mail in praying for a reduction in the rate of the present newspaper postage. The usual arguments in favour of the proposed reduction are advanced, and a hope is expressed that Lord Ripon will make this valuable concession.

Says that the road from the Borwali station to the Sempoli Bandar requires immediate repairing.

A correspondent of the Native Opinion (10) of the 9th March says that he does not know whether there is any one responsible for the conservancy of the recently constructed road leading from the Borwali station of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company to the Sempoli Bandar, the landing place for the famous island of Gorai. Complaints have been so frequent about its damaged condition, that people cannot understand how it is allowed to remain in its present disgraceful condition. It is a serious matter, the negligence of which inflicts undue hardships on the public who frequent it. The correspondent trusts that immediate steps will be taken to remove every cause of complaint regarding the badness of the road.

Want of repairs to the new Bharoli road, Thána District.

A correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 10th March says that it is a matter for regret that the new Bharoli road, Thána District, should be in such a neglected condition that holes, deep ruts and other inequalities should disfigure its surface and render travelling over it a source of danger both to pedestrians and vehicles. Even the rough country cart-tracks might put this road constructed by the Public Works Department to shame, as in travelling over it one has to endure in addition to other nuisances, the serious annoyance of having the eyes filled and garments covered with dust. There is no reason why the repairing of this communication should be put off sine die or until some serious accident demands its early repairs. The authorities ought to attend to this matter.

Censures the Jáme Jamshed newspaper for publishing certain names in connection with a Pársi divorce suit, the trial of which was ordered by the Court to be conducted with closed doors.

The Rást Goftár (115) of the 9th March observes that the Pársi Matrimonial and Divorce Court of Bombay ordered that the trial of the case in which Mr. Dhanjibhái Bamanji Kalfáti accused his wife Hirábái of adultery should be conducted with closed doors, and yet the Jáme Jamshed (105) published the names of the Pársi families against whom false accusations were made in the said suit. By doing this the Jáme has not only committed contempt of Court, but has spread libel anew, and broken the wise rule of the Court prohibiting the publication of the alleged immoralities exposed in a divorce suit.

Legislation.

It would not be objectionable to arrive at a compromise in the matter of the Bengal Rent Bill, provided its vital principle is preserved.

In alluding to the report mentioned in a recent issue of the Pioneer that a compromise is likely to be arrived at in the matter of the Bengal Rent Bill between the Government and the Bengal Zamindárs, the Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 11th March observes that a settlement would be gratifying, provided the original principle of the Bill is preserved as was done in the case of the concordat with regard to the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. The vital principle of the Bengal Rent Bill is that the Bengal rayats should be freed from the condition of something like serfdom in which they are and made independent tenants of the Zamindárs. If this element is preserved in tact there would be no objection to some of the minor provisions of the Bill being made more favourable than they are to the Zamindárs. The rumoured compromise may have been the result of the exercise of uncommonly great pressure upon the Viceroy; but it would not fail to do some good to the Bengal rayats, if the precaution recommended above is taken. Hitherto Government followed the course of enacting such laws as it thought best without caring in the least for public opinion; and hence the new course of arriving at a compromise in the case of laws considered objectionable by the people cannot but become beneficial to the public. Government should however take care not to submit to pressure brought to bear on it by any particular party, but to arrive at a compromise according to the wishes and desires of the public.

Railways.

Disapproves of the recommendation made by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce on the subject of rapid extension of railways in India.

The Arunodayă (14) of the 9th March says that it seems to be the opinion of English statesman that the trade of India can be stimulated only by the rapid extension of railways in it. The Bombay Chamber of Commerce has recently addressed a memorial to Government on the same subject in which they maintain that the rapid extension of railways is the only means by which the volume of the export trade of India can be increased. It is alleged that an expansion of the volume of the trade of India will benefit the population as well as Government whose revenues will increase with the prosperity of the masses. The Arunodayă thinks that these sanguine anticipations are not likely to be realised from the rapid extension of railways. India is a poor country. It is moreover governed by foreigners. The people are unable to bear the existing burden of taxation. The capital required for the construction of new railways is not to be found in the country which is already burdened with the payment of interest on a sum of twenty-five crors of rupees incurred on account of railways already constructed. There is little likelihood of this debt being wiped off. Under such circumstances, it is not right to incur additional pecuniary liabilities to promote railway construction. The Bombay Chamber of Commerce suggest to Government the advisability of doubling the debt in order to promote the rapid extension of railways in India. This suggestion, if acted upon, will ultimately prove detrimental to the interests of India. Again the Chamber propose that the capital required for building railways should be raised in England. If this proposal is carried out, the present remittances to England on account of India will swell from twenty millions to about twenty-seven millions. The Chamber justify their recommendation for the rapid construction of railways on account of the immense impetus which the trade in wheat has received during the last few years. But railways have had hardly anything to do in increasing the volume of the export trade in wheat. Although the building of railways has been going on since 1852, yet the wheat-trade began to expand rapidly only since 1876. If the capital required for constructing railways had been raised in India, the sum which has now to be remitted to England in the shape of interest will have become available for building new rail-roads. The payment of the interest of the capital required for railway purposes will have to be met directly or indirectly by the people of India, and hence Government should beware of doing anything against their interest. [The Ahmedabad Samáchár (85) of the 12th March approves of the extension of railways in India.]

Government ought to publish all important facts concerning the Chanda Railway project.

In noticing the recommendation made by the Bombay Gazette of the 6th instant that now that Colonel Hasting Fraser is on his way home, and Mr. Cordery and Major Trevor are to follow, they should be all three asked to give their evidence as to the inception, growth and real merits of the Chanda Railway project, the Bombay Chronicle (79) of the 9th March observes that if the suggestion is acted upon it will serve to show whether the omnipotent influence of British Agents at Native Courts is ever used for other than the legitimate purposes of upholding the British supremacy in the interest of the Native Chiefs and their subjects. It is, besides, high time that the public in England and India should understand beyond a doubt the real merits of the Chanda Railway, that is, with regard to the value of that railway to the British Government and the Native State, the bonâ fide concern and desire of the heads of that State for carrying it out, and the property of the investing public abroad for sinking any capital in an undertaking for making which a financial success the Hyderabad Treasury will be mainly held responsible.

Native engine-drivers and guards on railways should get two-thirds of the salaries paid to their European professional brethren.

The Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 11th March observes that a native railway guard named Harkisan having committed a theft of jewellery worth about fifty thousand rupees from a railway train that was bound from Amritsar to Sealcote, the Civil and Military Gazette has recommended that no natives should be employed on railways either as engine-drivers or guards. But it must be remembered that every guard on the B. B. & C. I. Railway is a native and native engine-drivers are being gradually employed, and they have been discharging their respective duties most satisfactorily. Most of the serious accidents were the result of the negligence by European engine-drivers. The G. I. P. and other Railway Companies have commenced to employ native engine-drivers and guards in larger numbers. This policy has made the European servants of Railway Companies jealous of natives, and hence they have begun to magnify their faults. On the Sind and Panjab Railway native guards on the small salary of Rs. 25 or 30 are employed. If such low-paid servants commit thefts or other crimes, the same may be traced to the miserable allowances doled out to them. Native engine-drivers and guards should be paid two-thirds of the salaries given to their European professional brethren doing the same work.

Recommends the appointment of female officers on railways for giving tickets to female passengers and for receiving the same from them.

The Bombay Samáchár (91) of the 14th March heartily approves of the suggestion made by the native inhabitants of Meerut to the Railway Conference recently assembled at Calcutta, that on the big railway lines women should be appointed to collect tickets from female passengers, and observes that booking clerks for issuing tickets to female passengers should also be women. Tickets are usually issued only a few minutes before a train leaves a station, and hence a great rush of passengers takes place. The females who are accompanied by their male relatives or acquaintances secure tickets in time; but those who are alone have to implore strangers to obtain tickets for them and sometimes miss the train. At the time of delivering back the tickets, male and female passengers are made to go out by the same passage and here the latter are subjected to a good deal of inconvenience and annoyance before the tickets are collected from them. It is desirable that females should be employed on all railway lines for issuing tickets to female passengers and also for receiving the same from them.

Municipalities.

Advises Government and municipalities to prohibit the washing of dirty clothes by the sides of rivers and wells.

The Samsher Báhádur (116) of the 7th March refers to the labours of the German Cholera Commission in India, and says that though much has been said on the subject of the fearful results of the use of polluted water, and though the people have been frequently warned against the pollution of water, it is much to be regretted that the natives of India do not abstain from washing clothes by the sides of rivers and wells. They have no idea that this evil habit causes infinite harm. When the people are so very careless. Government and municipalities ought to take cognisance of the matter. But they also appear to connive and to wait for a strong outcry being raised against it. It is true that orders are issued for the non-pollution of water but no care is taken to see that they are enforced. Are the municipalities and the police unaware of the landing places by river sides being turned by the people into places for washing clothes? The work is carried on before their very noses, some of the clothes washed are those of persons suffering from cholera and other diseases, and the polluted water is again taken into use. The Samsher strongly condemns the prevalence of this evil habit and the apathy of the natives in connection therewith and after exhorting them to discontinue it remarks that as long as the custom is not given up, cholera and other dread diseases will not disappear from the land. Prevention is better than cure. The public ought to aid Government and municipalities by preserving cleanliness instead of taking preventive measures at the time of the outbreak of cholera and other diseases. The news of the appearance of cholera with the beginning of the hot season is being received from various cities. If due precautions are not taken and if washing clothes by the sides of rivers and wells be not prohibited, cholera might appear at Ahmedabad. Government and municipalities ought therefore to prohibit the washing of clothes by the sides of rivers and wells. Perhaps a cry will be raised at first against this prohibition, but when the people come to know the benefits arising from such an order, they will praise the action of Government. Government and municipalities ought to speedily attend to this matter.

Says that the present deadlock at the meetings of the Bombay Municipal Corporation is chiefly attributable to the highhandedness of the Municipal Commissioner.

In an article headed "the Deadlock at our Corporation Meetings," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 9th March says:—The Corporation is divided into two factions, the official and the independent. The former constitutes the majority. It contains not only friends and acquaintances of the officials, but many officialised non-official members, who more or less have their selfish interests to serve. The independent members are few and in a minority. Under such a constitution it is natural that the chief executive authority should attempt to rough-ride the minority. Examine Mr. Ollivant's three years' administration. Search into records. And what will you find? That it is generally with the help of the servile majority that he has been able to get sanction for large sums of money for so-called improvements which are at least problematical. Immense sums are voted away without a thought. This has been the case under almost all previous Commissioners. Trained to autocratic mode of administration in the mofussil, whence they are imported, strong believers in their own infallibility, which is the failing of the whole Indian bureaucracy, impatient of control, and intolerant of criticism, they fret and fume when independent members of the Corporation stand in their place and make enquiries. Commissioners are in hot haste to drive a coach and six through municipal budgets and other matters involving consideration and criticism. It is this ardent desire to have everything their own way to stifle all reasonable discussion, and to make the Corporation simply their tool, that is at the bottom of the present cry. The Commissioner seems to ask that he should be allowed to carry on municipal administration in his own fashion. And when he finds that some of his pet schemes are closely criticised, he is in a passion and then he is exhibited to the public gaze as an official martyr. We are convinced that there would be less of idle talk were the Commissioner more frank with the Corporation. Bombay is not Surat, and if the District Committee is entirely subservient, the same cannot be the case with our City Corporation. The majority of the civic fathers no doubt are so many refined johukums, but there is a small element of righteousness and independence which will never bend. He must be prepared to measure strength with them. The deadlock to a great measure is of his own creation. And so long as we have autocratic Commissioners the cry will be heard again and again. Mr. Ollivant is certainly honest and energetic. But these are not the sole requisities. Candour, patience, and tolerance of outside criticism are essential to a really successful Commissioner. Above all he must be conscientious, working with a single eye to the true interests of the mass, and from their point of view, now from his own. The mistake lies there. The funds of the city must not be expended according to his whims, but as may be best dictated by the prudence of the independent representatives of the city. The opposing elements which are now so actively in operation must be reconciled. And then all deadlock will cease, and nobody will again make a grievance about long speeches. Prolix speeches are unfortunately common. But they are not the sole cause of the deadlock. Irrelevant speeches and irregular attendance are minor causes. Both could be easily controlled. But who will curb the highhandedness of the chief executive supported by his official and officialised henchmen?

Makes some suggestions for overcoming the quorum difficulty experienced at the meetings of the Municipal Corporation of Bombay.

In alluding to the quorum difficulty experienced at the meetings of the Bombay Municipal Corporation and to the practice of leaving the meetings soon after their arrival followed by some members, the Jáme Jamshed (105) of the 13th March observes that the disregard shown by the members to the concerns of the Corporation may be traced to the certainty that they will not lose their seats for three years after election or nomination for whatever delinquencies may be committed by them. It is desirable therefore that the existence of the Corporation should be limited to a year or two, at the end of which there should be a new election. The Corporation is composed of 64 members. To require 25 from among them to form a quorum is rather hard. The House of Commons is composed of 658 members and 40 out of them form a quorum. The number of corporators for forming a quorum at the Corporation meetings should be reduced to 15 and those members who are the earliest comers to form this number should be paid a fee of rupees ten each. If this suggestion is adopted the quorum difficulty would be removed and the work of the Corporation would not get into arrears. If this suggestion cannot be adopted, the number of members of the Corporation should be raised to 100 and then the present number for a quorum, namely, 25 may be allowed to remain. It is also desirable that there should be provision in the municipal law ruling that a corporator who remains absent from four consecutive meetings of the Corporation should lose his seat. Before taking up these suggestions Government should address the Corporation severely censuring the negligence of some of the members for not attending to their duties.

Native States.

Remarks in connection with the restoration of the Berárs.

In an article headed "Restoration of the Berárs," the Native Opinion (10) of the 9th March says:—The understanding at the time when the district was taken over by the British Government was that it would be restored after a period of three years, the revenue arising from it in that time being then considered sufficient to pay off the liability. Here we must record the fact that in the course of the negotiations which were proceeding regarding this matter, Major-General Fraser, then Resident at Hyderabad, in a letter to the Government of India threw out a suggestion that the British Government should take charge of the whole of the Nizám's territories and pay him an annual pension. But we are glad to say that better counsels prevailed and the enormity was happily not perpetrated. But even as to the transfer of certain districts and their remaining in the hands of the British, it is very hard for us to realise fully the keenness of the feeling of the Hyderabad Court, a slight but pregnant indication of which we find in some expressions of the then Nizám in one of his conversations with the Resident on that subject. He is reported to have then said "Gentlemen like you who are sometimes in Europe, and at other times in India, sometimes employed in Government business and at other times as soldiers; sometimes sailors and at other times even engaged in commerce. . . . You cannot understand the nature of my feelings in this matter. I am a sovereign prince, born to live and die in this kingdom, which has belonged to my family for seven generations. You think I could be happy if I were to give up a portion of my kingdom to your Government in perpetuity; it is totally impossible that I could be happy. I should feel that I was disgraced." And again he said "you too do not comprehend the nature of my feelings as a sovereign prince; for instance you talked of my saving eight lákhs of rupees per annum by making this treaty as something that I ought to like! Now I tell you, that if it were quite certain that I could save four times eight lákhs of rupees, I should not be satisfied; because I should lose my honour by parting with my territory." Such were the moans of the man evidently forced to transfer a portion of his patrimony whose helplessness, no doubt, was aggravated by the presence of that very contingent for the support of which he had incurred so much debt. In the light of these words of the Nizám we can in some degree understand the zeal, the ardour and the tenacity of the late Sir Salar Jang regarding this matter. The restoration of the Berárs was not with him a question of some square miles of territory. It was the question of honour to be restored back to the name of his master's house that was ravished of it by the stern realities and political exigencies mainly springing from a certain advantage which is always given by great unsuspiciousness of watchful aggrandisement. The great Minister bowing to the necessities of the times acted all along with this end in view. His early struggles, his chivalrous loyalty which at times exposed him to great and fatal risks, his diplomatic conflicts, his reforms, his journeys and his domestic struggles were all undertaken with this one view. In fact whatever he did appears to have been done by him mainly for the purpose of pleasing the British Government and to induce them to give back to the Nizám the brightest jewel of his crown. This question had so far absorbed him that he at times forgot his usual caution and was led in the ardour of conflict to go to lengths disagreeable to the thunderers of the Foreign Office and brought upon his head the dreaded wrath of the Political Department. But through thick and thin he always stuck to this one passion of his life and at last departed it without witnessing the one wish of his heart realised. The refusal to restore the Berárs was not in his time based on any tangible arguments. During the time of possession of those districts the debt for liquidation of which they were applied was probably paid off. But even if it was not so, the great Minister offered to pay off the balance on the accounts being shown to him. To such a point-blank demand the Foreign Office had no answer to give, but the subterfuge that his master was then a minor and that such questions could not be mooted until he came to take the care of his Government into his own hands. Surely by the bye that was a question of minor importance to the Nizám's Government than the Chanda Railway scheme. Well now the Nizám is placed on his musnad and where is the burning question of the restoration? The Foreign Office must now surely be at its wit's end as to what answer to give in case the demand be renewed and must have deemed it prudent that the disagreeable subject should not at least be brought on the tapis by the British Government themselves. In this plight the London Times now comes to their rescue and has surely earned their gratitude by showing them the way in which they can lay the salve to their conscience and indefinitely shelve the restoration question. "Whether Berárs is ever to be returned to his (Nizám's) jurisdiction," says the Times, "it is impossible to say; but clearly much will depend on the manner in which the Prince and his Minister acquit themselves of their new and difficult duties." We have no doubt that the Foreign Office will catch at the suggestion as a drawing man does at a straw. But it is after all a mere straw. It will none the more save their credit from sinking. We wish such miserable makeshifts will at once be set aside and the British Government will be bold enough either to restore the Berárs to the Nizám or tell him plainly that might is right and upon that mighty principle of politics he shall never have the district. Such a course would at least have the advantage over the other which courage, good or bad, always has over cowardice. What was done when the helm of Government at Hyderabad was in the steady hand of Sir Salar Jang? He indeed had acquitted himself of his difficult duties. And what greater wisdom and tact can be shown by his son and the young Nizám now. If it depend upon fitness we might take it that the restoration will never take place because the Nizám and his Minister can never be more fit than Sir Salar was. We wonder our Government are not ashamed of such meanness. It lowers their prestige in the eyes of the people and does more harm than the loss of two such territories as large and as rich as the Berárs. As Mr. Bright has said, faith and morality are the same in private as in public affairs, and an eminently moral man like Lord Ripon, we hope, will not leave India before he removes from the fair fame of England this great blot which tarnishes it.

Berár Affairs.

Complains of the severity of rules regarding the native legal practitioners in the Berárs.

The Pramod Sindhu (53) of the 10th March in a communicated article says:—Rules regarding legal practitioners were published in April 1883. By section three of these rules those who have been admitted as barristers in England, or Ireland or as members of the Faculty of Advocates in Scotland, can alone be admitted as advocates of the Court of the Resident at Hyderabad. The privilege is denied to the advocates of the several High Courts in British India, who are admitted as such in the several High Courts, only after going through half a dozen and more tests, harder than the comparatively fewer tests to which the above-named barristers and advocates have to submit. The privilege is equally denied to the vakils of the several High Courts in India who have passed severer examinations than these barristers and advocates. The High Court vakils can, as such, be neither advocates nor vakils in Berárs. In strict justice such inhabitants of the Berárs and others who become High Court vakils in other Presidencies ought to have the privilege of being admitted as vakils of Berárs, as was impartially recommended by the then Resident at Hyderabad. By section two, no doubt, the vakils of the several High Courts, can practice as such in Berárs, but they cannot be enrolled as such. Under the third section all barristers and advocates of England, Ireland and Scotland can get themselves enrolled as advocates in the Courts in the Berárs without any qualification as to age or as to a knowledge of Maráthi and Urdu such as exists in the case of those sons of the soil who aspire to be pleaders under the rules (vide section X). In section 13 it is provided that the Judicial Commissioner may reject any candidate, without being bound to specify the reasons for rejection, and in the eighteenth section it is stated that any candidate who may have been considered qualified by the Committee of Examiners may be rejected by the Resident whose order shall be final. The Legislature could not and would not have placed any such hard restrictions in the way of the conquerors of the land. The rules are highly favourable to British subjects and very harsh to natives. It is perhaps an oversight. Rule XXII. requires every pleader to be furnished with a certificate, to be renewed every year which is to be written upon stamped paper of the value of Rs. 50 or 25. This is certainly a tax on the profession. The rules are miraculously silent as to the advocates admitted under Chapter III. being furnished with any such certificate. There is no express provision on the point and the few who have been admitted as advocates under Chapter III., do not as a matter of fact pay the tax, though sections 29, 36 and 38 would seem to contemplate the reverse. In every case of opposing interests between natives and their conquerors, there is one law for natives and another, less harsh, and more favourable for the British born subjects. It is the same in commercial matters, in civil and military services, in pay, pension, in fact, in everything. The above illustration is one of the most insignificant, but therefore the more clearly does it demonstrate how things are done for us. Before sanctioning these rules, if the Government had taken the trouble to ask for the opinions of some educated natives, the rules would have been better framed. It is worthy of notice that the rules in question were sanctioned after Lord Ripon became Viceroy of India. But perhaps it is a small and insignificant matter which would hardly attract his notice.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
18th March 1884.

12

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Advance of Russia in Central Asia: Advice to the British Government to make their position in Central Asia so secure as to be independent of Russia's good graces and friendly promises 4
Allowances: Expression of opinion that native officers drawing two-thirds of the salary paid to a European officer while holding the same post ought to get the same bátta as is paid to the latter 7
Civil Service: Remarks in connection with the question of maintaining an extremely costly — in India... 4
Fenian leaders in America: Disapproval of the policy of the American Government towards the— 3
Indian Council: Recommendation for the abolition of the— ... 3
International Exhibition to be held in Bombay: Suggestions in connection with the— 8
Judicial matters:
- Censure on the Jáme Jamshed newspaper for publishing certain names in connection with a Pársi divorce suit, the trial of which was ordered by the Court to be conducted with closed doors ... 12
- Complaint regarding the dearness of British justice 5
- Expression of opinion that European Judges inflict unnecessarily severe punishments on native culprits irrespectively of the nature of the guilt of the latter 7

License-tax:
- Expression of opinion that Government should take immediate steps to divest the — of its glaring inequalities and anomalies ... 6
- Suggestion for the substitution of a low income-tax in place of the— 5

Police:
- Complaint regarding the delay occurring in the removal of persons injured by accidents to hospitals by police sepoys 11
- Criticism on the Government review of the — Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency for the year 1882-83 10
- Increase in the number of thefts at Ahmedabad 11
- Do. do. at Umreth 12

Postal matters: Prayer for reducing the rate of the newspaper postage... 12
Public Service: A contrast between the conduct of the Collectors of Kolába and Ratnágiri 9
Purchase of indigenous articles for use in Government offices: Complaint that the orders of the Supreme Government for the — are not strictly complied with 7
Roads:
- Expression of opinion that the road from the Borwali station to the Sempoli Bandar requires immediate repairing 12
- Want of repairs to the new Bharoli road, Thána District ... 12

Vernacular Press:
- Comments in connection with the remark made in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency that the Hitechchhu newspaper is unfriendly to Government 9
- Justification of the unfriendly tone of the Gujaráti newspaper towards the Bombay Government 8

Viceroyalty of India: Expression of a hope that in case of a change of Ministry in England another Lord Lytton may not be sent to India to undo the work of Lord Ripon 3

Part II.—Legislation—

Bengal Rent Bill: Expression of opinion that it would not be objectionable to arrive at a compromise in the matter of the — provided its vital principle is preserved 12

Page.

Part III.—Railways—

Appointment of female officers on railways for giving tickets to female passengers and for receiving the same from them: Recommendation for the— 14

Chanda Railway project: Expression of opinion that Government should publish all important facts concerning the— 13

Extension of railways in India: Disapproval of the recommendation made by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce on the subject of rapid— ... 13

Salary of native engine-drivers and guards: Expression of opinion that the — should be two-thirds of that paid to their European professional brethren 14

Part IV.—Municipalities—

Bombay:

Expression of opinion that the present deadlock at the meetings of the — Municipal Corporation is chiefly attributable to the high-handedness of the Municipal Commissioner 15

Suggestions for overcoming the quorum difficulty experienced at the meetings of the — Municipal Corporation 16

Washing of dirty clothes by the sides of rivers and wells: Advice to Government and municipalities to prohibit the— 14

Part V.—Native States—

Restoration of the Berárs: Remarks in connection with the— ... 16

Part VI.—Berár Affairs—

Severity of rules regarding the native legal practitioners in the Berárs: Complaint against the— 17

BOMBAY : PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

C.
13
INDIA
7 APR

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 22nd March 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
13	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
17	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
20	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*22	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
23	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
24	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
25	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
26	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
27	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
28	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
29	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
30	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
31	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
32	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*33	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*34	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
35	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
36	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
37	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
38	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
39	„ Mahárásthtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
40	„ Mahárásthtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
41	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
42	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
44	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*47	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
48	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
49	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*50	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
51	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
54	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
55	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
56	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
63	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
64	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

C. R.
14219
INDIA OFFICE
15 APR 1884

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 1242

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*65	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
66	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
67	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
68	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
69	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
70	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*71	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*73	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*74	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
75	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*76	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
77	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
78	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
79	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
80	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
81	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
82	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
83	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
84	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*85	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
86	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
87	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
88	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
89	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
90	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmeđabad	Monthly	600
91	„ Dátarđun	Bombay	Weekly	525
92	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
93	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*94	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
95	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
96	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
97	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*98	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
99	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*100	„ Hitopađeshak Ratnă	Ahmeđabad	Do.	200
101	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
102	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
103	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*104	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
105	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
106	„ Lok Mitră	Do.	Weekly	800
107	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmeđabad	Monthly	300
108	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
109	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
110	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
111	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
112	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmeđabad	Do.	200
113	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*114	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiáđ	Do.	200
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*124	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that the British Government is preferable to all other Governments and gives reasons for its opinion.

In an article headed "Is the British Government preferable to all other Governments or not?" the Din Bandhu (5) of the 16th March says:—Who will deny that this Ráj affords liberty to all irrespective of caste, colour and creed? This was not the case under previous rulers. It is the British administration that has suffered the free distribution of education among all castes and thus emancipated them from the thraldom of ignorance. It is untrue that though the people possessed great riches in past times yet they had not the same means and liberty to enjoy them. Besides every sort of oppression was exercised upon the subjects. But what made the people then possess something substantial was that the various professions of this country were in a flourishing state, while at present they are fallen because they have been taken up by foreigners in consequence of their skill and industry. Our people should now give up their lethargy and be as industrious as foreigners are, and then we are quite sure that our professions will undergo many beneficial changes and thus afford a severe blow to foreign competition. But mere industry will not aid them sufficiently unless it be accompanied by capital, which the working people do not at all possess. Our rich Shetias, most of whom spend thousands of rupees unnecessarily, should devote a little of their money towards these purposes, and of course the Government would then be necessitated to contribute something. Unless this is done India will never be restored to her former prosperity. It is said that our people have not that scientific education which is absolutely necessary to enable them to effect modifications in the professions, but are they precluded from acquiring it? If not, why should not a few of them proceed to foreign countries with the aid of their countrymen and gain the necessary knowledge? We advise our countrymen to acquire scientific knowledge and thus become the laudable means of ameliorating the dilapidated condition of their country. But if they cannot do this, they should certainly not blame foreigners but their own lethargy or indolence. It is however the duty of Government as mábáp of their subjects to do something towards the improvement of the decayed professions by counselling the people to acquire scientific education, because the happiness of the Ráj depends upon the happiness of the subjects. As regards the complaint said to be made about the heaviness of taxation imposed upon the people, we are of opinion that Government cannot help doing this on account of the large area of the empire. It will however be admitted that the surplus is perhaps pocketed by them, but may we ask if any other ruling power would not have done the same? If it would have, why should we blame the British? But perhaps the people are finding fault with Government because they are kind and just to their subjects. We cannot however help saying that India is being impoverished, and we look therefore to our kind Government to do something for her. But there is no doubt that this Ráj is far preferable to all other Rájs, and this fact was evidenced by the genuine loyalty displayed by the people towards the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. It is said that Russia is an apparently oppressive power, and who can therefore prefer her to our kind and just England? Certainly no one. There are other aspects of the subject which conclusively prove the superiority of the British Ráj over any other power in the world, but the space at our command is very limited.

Advocates the abolition of the Council of the Secretary of State for India.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 16th March says:—We are glad to notice that the position and duties of the Council of the Secretary of State for India are going to be the subject of a discussion in Parliament at an early date. The credit of this is due to Mr. Slagg, who has already given expression to his views on the subject in the current number of the Contemporary Review. It no doubt deserves to be considered whether the Indian Council is still of any use or whether it has not become an antiquated institution which we can now safely dispense with. As at present constituted, it can only give advice and not control the action of the Secretary of State. We have had instances of occasions when it has been overruled. It is again a body of retired Anglo-Indians, generally animated by that bureaucratic spirit which characterized them when they held their places in the Indian bureaucracy. They can neither generally speaking extricate themselves from the views and traditions which they petted during their Indian career, nor do they easily admit of any fresh light. An appeal to such a body from the decision of the Government of India is very much like a review of its own proceedings by the body which initiated them. We are not insensible to the good counsel which this body can give to the Secretary of State on occasions when a Viceroy like Lord Lytton breaks completely through the lines of a sound and long established policy, nor to the fact that Anglo-Indians capable of taking statesmanlike views of things can give expression to them more freely when out of India than in India itself. But this advantage is in modern times somewhat too dearly purchased by the continuance of the Council itself. Moreover one may well ask whether knowledge of India and its people need be such a speciality as to necessitate the continuance of the Council in these days of rapid locomotion and of an intelligent press, when every question that crops up is freely discussed in all its aspects both by the Anglo-Indian and the Native press. May it not suffice for all practical purposes to appoint responsible secretaries in charge of different departments whom the Secretary of State can consult when necessary? The members of the Indian Council, it will be noted, are at present responsible to nobody for what they advise, and we find them turning the cold shoulder even to such useful projects as the extension of the G. I. P. Railway to Bhopál and Cawnpur. Whilst therefore it is possible for the Secretary of State to make himself acquainted with the real merits of a question from his secretaries in ordinary matters, when questions of supreme importance such as were involved in the late Ilbert Bill arise, the Government of India can elicit and transmit to England the views of every officer of State great and small, as well as those of persons out of the range of red-tapeism. All these circumstances, we believe, go a considerable way to show that the Secretary of State can do without his Council. Considerations like these render it highly desirable that the whole question of the position and duties of the Council should obtain a full and free discussion in Parliament. We must therefore thank Mr. Slagg for making them the subject of a motion in Parliament.

Strongly supports the appointment of a commission to enquire and report on the constitution and functions of the Indian Council.

In an article headed "Mr. Slagg's motion on the reform of the Indian Council," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 17th March says:—Mr. Slagg proposes to altogether abolish the Council and make the Secretary of State for India with his Under Secretaries alone responsible for the work in the same way as other ministers of the British Crown are unhampered by any council. In the place of the Council Mr. Slagg would form a standing Parliamentary committee for India, composed of such independent members of Parliament as interest themselves in Indian questions and as would keep themselves abreast of all information relating to India. There is no reason why this plan should not answer well. In these days of speedy communication and facility of reference between England and India, with a press daily growing in intelligence and importance, it ought not to be difficult to find a few members of Parliament armed with the requisite information. Moreover these gentlemen will bring to their work a mind free from any taint or bias. This scheme will have the further merit of saving to India nearly twenty-two lákhs of rupees every year. But we are not sure that such a radical measure of reform will be acceptable to the British public. The tradition of a council had in 1858, according to Mr. Slagg himself, too strong a hold upon the House of Commons to give way to the weightiest argument, and it may have its fascinations even now. The Council may in our opinion still continue to exist, but its constitution must be altered. It ought, we think, to be formed on the model of our local boards under the new Acts, that is, partly on the nomination and partly on the elective principle; it ought to contain some representatives from India; and the tenure of office should not exceed a stated term, say five or seven years. But what the precise scheme of the Council should be is a question for future discussion. For the present it is sufficient to say that there is an eminently strong case for the appointment of a commission of enquiry into the constitution and functions of the Indian Council as proposed by Mr. Slagg, and we repeat our hearty wish for the success of Mr. Slagg's motion.

Reflections on the approach of the Russians to the north-west frontier.

In an article headed "Our North-Western Frontiers," the Native Opinion (10) of the 16th March says:—In the present relative positions of the two empires in Asia, England enjoys a very great advantage over Russia which we hope she will not be duped in giving up by mere sentiment. Russia committed the folly of overleaping her natural boundaries and is now paying very dearly for that folly. Since the time she left the Ural and the Caucasus mountains in her rear she found herself without a natural boundary on her eastern side. Principality after principality she annexed, but she was as open on this side as ever. Once the mistake was committed she could not in the nature of things stop until she arrived at something which would give her a strong frontier on the east. In the north of Asia the same imperious necessity drove her on and on until she arrived at the Behring Straits, and naturally in Central Asia she could not stand until she came to some such great barrier. That barrier she has now nearly reached. When once she rests on the western slopes of the Afghan mountains we may take it that her growth on this side is stopped, and then she can find breathing time to develope and digest the territories she has under a stern necessity so hastily swallowed. She has advanced a long way, but there is no consolidation as yet of the conquered provinces, and though her sway has approached Afghanistan, yet her basis is far in the west. But with England in India the case is widely different. The British power is solidly established in a rich country whose resources are being rapidly developed and which possesses one of the best natural boundaries on her western and the only vulnerable side. The mountains of Afghanistan, the deserts, and the Indus taken all together give us a frontier which would make the mouth of a continental strategist water. With a base of operations at hand, with railways offering facilities for concentrating an army in any numbers, and with a strong natural barrier in front, the situation is one of the most magnificent that could be desired. But when England commits the mistake which Russia has committed all these advantages will be nullified, and she in her turn will have to grope for a frontier, and not finding it will be driven into a collision with Russia. So long as the north-west mountains in the west are kept, India, we think, has nothing to fear from Russia. Both these empires will peaceably exist on the two sides of the barrier, and the mutual security instead of being diminished will be enhanced. If England ever gets into a war with Russia it will be by her own folly of overleaping the north-western frontier of India. The forward movement will be disadvantageous in two ways. In the first place it will force a collision between the two powers by depriving Russia of a boundary on the eastern side, and it will impose a grievous burden on the already overburdened finances of India. For ourselves we should think that there is greater danger in this financial tension than in the approach of Russia. Let England but keep her present position in Asia and try to give greater privileges to her Indian subjects, and we have no doubt she will be free from Russian aggression for ever. It is not in military occupations of vast tracts that safety is to be sought; it ought rather to be sought in the breasts of the subject people. Let Natives think that they have nothing to gain from Russia, let them feel that they have a recognised position in the administration of their country, and let the principle of India for Indians be followed out, and then we should like to see who can dislodge England from her proud position in this country. We think the subjugation by Russia of Central Asia will greatly benefit India. That wild tract of land will be opened up to civilization and commerce, trade routes will be established, security guaranteed, and then India will have offered ready at her feet one of the finest markets in the world for products. By the time Russia improves those tracts India will develope her resources, and the neighbourhood of a virgin field will then offer the best opportunity to Native Indian enterprise. A great inland trade will spring up which in course of time might fairly compete with her sea trade, and Indian fabrics will spread themselves not only over the whole of Central Asia but might find their way even in Russia at a cheaper cost than at present.

Reflections on the near approach of Russia towards India.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 16th March says:—We are not at all disconcerted by the steady progress of Russia, not only in Central Asia but nearer towards India itself. The protectorate now said to have been established over Merv has made almost the whole of the Anglo-Indian press very "nervous." We cannot put up with this old woman's fright. Some of these writers advise England to at once occupy Kandahar as a counter-demonstration, while there are others who recommend a more cautious policy. Whether it is the "earth hunger," according to Professor Vambery, which draws Russia nearer to the confines of India, or whether it is the resistless march of destiny, it is plain that the British Lion can under no circumstances check the progress of the Northern Colossus. And the sooner his frontier borders on the Indus, the better for the security of British India. There are writers on the Native press too who have not concealed their feelings with regard to the nearer approach of Russia on the Indian frontier. They seem to fancy that the approach of such a mighty rival will in a way teach the British rulers to behave better towards their Indian subjects. We for one cannot share this feeling. It is not for the reason they urge that we wish to see Russia established as our next-door neighbour. We hail her advance on the higher ground of civilization. What is the use of a weak neighbour on whom we cannot depend in the hour of trouble and on whom all subsidy expended is so much waste of the taxpayer's moneys? Of what use havinga weak kingdom for a neighbour that is divided against itself, carrying on a sort of perpetual guerilla warfare? What can India expect from Afghanistan, whose general condition is disorder and lawlessness, if not absolute anarchy? The Afghan is a weak neighbour, unable or unwilling to advance the cause of commerce and civilization. Now Russia, in comparison with the more advanced western states of Europe, may be called a semi-barbarous power. It is more or less Asiatic. But it has a genius for establishing an Asiatic form of government, based on law and order. It may be urged by Russophobists that a weak anarchy is much to be preferred to a powerful one, as there are less chances of the former ever invading India. Granted. What then? Is that a reason to dread the presence of the Czar in place of the Amir at Cabul? Russia may cast wistful glances towards India. She may concentrate large standing armies on the other side of our frontier. But are we to suppose that our rulers on their side are bound to slumber on, or maintain the attitude of masterly inactivity? If they make the frontier on their side inaccessible, what is there to be feared? At the same time, is there no chance of international amity being established between two powerful Governments? Will not Persia and Afghanistan be opened up? May we not have a railway to Kandahar and thence to Herat joining with the trans-Caspian system of Russian railways? How much can trade and civilization do between them? This railway may open up the whole of Central Asia hitherto considered an unknown region. We think the advantages of Russian rule across the Indus are manifold. If only the Indian Government safeguards the whole of the frontier from Quetta to the Pamir, it will be sufficiently forewarned and therefore forearmed.

Says that Russian progress in Central Asia should be checked.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 18th March alludes to the promises given by Russia not to extend her Central Asian territorial jurisdiction so as to occupy Merv and to her suspicious movements in that direction, and observes that the occupation of Merv by the Muscovite Government ought to induce England to check the Russian progress in that direction, to strengthen the Indian frontier, and to keep a sharp watch over Russian diplomacy in Central Asia. The ministry is warned that any neglect in doing this important work will not fail to imperil, though not seriously, the interests of the British Indian empire. [The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 19th March expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that England should take Siam under her protection in order to prevent France from approaching the Indian Empire so close as to endanger its peace.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (104) of the 16th March observes that if France is allowed to gain a footing in Siam and the Shan country and to bring her frontier very near Burmah, she will very likely play tricks with the British Government, and then the latter will be obliged to enter into a war with her in order to preserve the Indian Empire from harm. To avoid this contingency England ought to prohibit France from conquering the different countries of Indo-China and to bring the frontiers of her eastern possessions close to India. It is detrimental to the interests of the British Indian Empire that Russia should approach it on one side and France on the other. England tried hard to induce France not to extend her sway in Tonquin, but she did not care for British susceptibilities. Under these circumstances the advice tendered by Mr. Colquhoun, the wellknown eastern traveller, should be accepted, namely, that England should take Siam under her protection, and if this is done the French will be prevented from meddling with that country. A large trade is carried on with Siam by India, Singapore and England, and for the due protection of the Indian Empire and her trade England ought to take the step of taking Siam under her protection. But it is to be regretted that the English press and Englishmen do not give the same attention to the French designs on Indo-China as they do to the advance of the Russians to Merv.

Says that the next loan should be raised in India and not in England.

In considering the question whether the next loan should be raised in England or India, the same newspaper observes that some persons state that since the last loan did not realize a good price and the demand for loans was very slack for some time past in India, this country has lost her ability to subscribe for loans, which should in future be raised in England. But it ought to be remembered that a rise or fall in the price of securities depends upon the state of the money market. The last loan realized more than 98 per cent., and this was not a discouraging result. The banks and the speculators withheld from making any offers, and considering this unusual circumstance the loan undoubtedly realized a good price. The banks expected that the money market would soon become tight, and the speculators had met with reverses on account of their tendering a high price for the loans of previous years. This induced them to desist from making high offers for the last loan. The banks expected a fall in the price of loans when the money market became tight, and so it happened. If the banks had sold the loans they already held and had those loans been purchased in England, then it should have been said that India did not possess the ability to absorb new loans. On the other hand, England parted with and India purchased a large amount of the securities in silver For these reasons the next loan ought to be raised in India and not in England.

Takes exception to certain remarks contained in the Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency for 1882-83.

In an article headed "Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency for 1882-83," the Indian Spectator (1) of 16th March says:—As a record of facts viewed from the official point, the Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency for the year 1882-83 may be taken as a highly satisfactory blue-book. Whether one reads the glowing summary which embraces the marvels of administrative energy which characterised the year under review, or patiently goes through the more sober though not less optimistic matter comprised in the "red letter chapters," which make their appearance every decade; whether one glances over the elaborate chapters recounting the state of agriculture and provincial finance, law and justice, trade and industries, telegraphs and post offices, education and literature, archæology and other minor subjects—buries one's self in the mighty maze, "not without a plan," of tabulated statistics, one is deftly reminded now and again that the sixteen millions of this Presidency could not have been governed better under the best of all possible governments. In the very third paragraph of the summary we are treated to the doings of Sir James Fergusson, which show the pitch of excellence to which Bombay has been raised in the art of government under a well-meaning, though a trifle too paternal, ruler. The paragraph is a unique piece of official composition, displaying the ability of the Penman as a master of his craft. But we need no longer keep the anxious reader in suspense. We will satisfy his curiosity at once by acquainting him with the gubernatorial doings during the official year. At first His Excellency paid a visit to Ratnágiri. It was in his opinion by far the most important town in the Presidency, politically, where the "generous boon" of local self-government which was to be conferred by his Government on the people was announced. It was there that he impressed on the highly cultured and enlightened audience, got together by the Collector of the place, the opinion that every local good work to be seen throughout the 126,000 square miles of the Presidency was mainly owing to the "energy and foresight of the local officers." And His Excellency invited the leading gentry to associate with these far-sighted administrators in promoting works of public utility. It has not been stated by the official precis writer whether the dull intellect of Bombay and Poona was able to appreciate the observation which was made to the highly cultured audience at Ratnágiri. Be that as it may, we think the account is incomplete in so far as the costs at which works of public utility have been raised by the far-sighted and energetic administrators is concerned. Neither are we told of the proportion of the benefits which the works have conferred on those with whose moneys they were executed. Nor are we informed how the people used to manage their local affairs prior to the advent of the British Collector. If history is to be relied upon, it appears that the Indian village communities have from time immemorial engaged in promoting public works, and that the many sound as well as ruined structures now to be seen in every part of the country amply testify to the energy and foresight of those compact rural units—a display of energy and foresight long anterior to the time when Julius Cæsar landed on the shores of Britain. There is also another omission. We are not informed as to the stability of the public works raised by the energy and foresight of Collectors, Magistrates and Engineers—how many of the old works, such as tanks, reservoirs, high trunk roads, rest-houses and works of merit, religious and other, stand favourable comparison with the tottering or crumbling edifices which the genius of the conquering race has built within the past 50 or 100 years in remote towns and villages for the promotion of public comfort and convenience. In short, we are not told whose sagacity and foresight are to be admired, the indigenous or the foreign. A comparison may show that the British official has not been all in all to this country in the matter of public works. But official reports are generally decked out in the gayest colours. The canvas stretched by the official word-painter has no shades. All is one vast dazzling ground of light. It is needless to say that the public must receive the official report with caution. Here is what our accomplished official compiler observes in connection with Sir James Fergusson's speech at Ratnágiri on local self-government: "His Excellency also announced that it had been decided to create many of the leading towns into city municipalities, which would confer upon them a large measure of local power in anticipation of further legislation which it was intended should go as far as matured Native opinion itself could approve." How far the "larger measure of power" has been conferred, and how far "matured Native opinion" has been consulted, are matters of history. On these we need not say a word, as they are facts subsequent to the speech. But the fact of the raising of 14 towns into town municipalities was almost accomplished at the date. Now the official report would have been more accurate if it had stated that the decision which the Governor came to, namely, of raising 14 towns into municipalities, was in compliance with the request as contained in the memorials of the people interested—that it was no voluntary act on the part of the Government. On the contrary the local authorities were coerced into raising the towns into municipalities by the Supreme Government. For full ten years the people, relying on the promises and assurances of previous administrations, had demanded municipal franchise. And it was the controversy of September 1882 which alone forced the Local Government to take the action that it did a few months later on. Next, we are referred in the same paragraph to the exhortation of His Excellency to the Chief of Chinchli. He dwelt upon the advantages of Native rule if conducted upon enlightened principles, and pointed to the numerous and enviable opportunities to improve the condition of the people which the Chiefs enjoyed. "He exhorted them to encourage education, specially female and technical education, and referred with pleasure to the great strides which the Chiefs themselves had made in this respect." We frankly admit the force of this valuable advice. It sounds admirable in theory and would be prolific of great good if faithfully carried out in practice. Imagine the effect of the observation on a stranger coming to India for the first time. How heartily he would applaud and advise! What a capital impression it would make on him! But let him try to verify facts. Let him ask as to whether the "enlightened principles" on which Native rule should be conducted are the identical ones that are formulated in the court of the average Political Agent attached to a Native State or in the Calcutta Foreign Office. What is meant by "enlightened principles" of government? Do they mean the art of complete domination of the Native prince by the Political Agent attached to his court—a domination whereby he is converted against his will into an abject slave with even less freedom of thought and speech than is enjoyed by any of his subjects? Or do they mean administration on the model now so mercilessly exposed by Robert Knight in connection with Hyderabad? Or do they mean highly scientific revenue survey settlement, enhanced revenue assessments, assessments on land improvements, the banishment of capital from rural villages, the subversion of rural economy and village communities, dear salt, dearer justice, unscrupulous police oppression, forest and ábkári legislation, extravagant local taxation, repression of local public spirit and local independence? If the Native Chief is to manage his State on "enlightened principles" in favour with British Indian officers, he is at any rate entitled to know what these principles are.

Takes exception to the remark made in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency that the tone of the Kesari newspaper was unfriendly to Government.

The Kesari (35) of the 18th March says that on perusing the remark made in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency that its tone was unfriendly to Government, the files of the Kesari newspaper for the year 1882 were diligently ransacked but nothing was found to justify the above-mentioned observation. The Kesari would have been glad if in passing this censure Government had clearly defined what constitutes friendliness and unfriendliness to Government. The Kesari fearlessly expresses its sentiments on what it considers good for the interests of the community at large, and if in so doing it has incurred the displeasure of the powers that be, then it is willing to accept the censure passed on its mode of conducting the journal. But if the rulers of India imagine that their interests are not identical with those of the people whom they govern, then they should not think of keeping their sway in India for any lengthened period. The Kesari is convinced that most statesmen in England consider the interests of the inhabitants of India and their rulers as identical. It is only those officials who do not understand this principle that indulge in such scathing remarks on the Native press. Although the Native newspapers are thoroughly convinced that the welfare of India is entirely dependent on the British Government, yet they cannot help sometimes passing severe criticisms on the improper conduct and proceedings of some Government officials. Although of all alien governments the British Government has been the kindest, most equitable, and best, yet it cannot be said that there is no room for improvement in the British administration. Why then should anyone who points out defects be stigmatized as disloyal?

Approves of the Government resolution on the proposal to hold an international exhibition in Bombay.

In noticing the resolution of the Government of Bombay on the suggestion made by the Bombay Committee for the Calcutta International Exhibition for holding an international exhibition in Bombay, the Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 16th March observes that the most difficult part of the business will be to provide the necessary funds for the exhibition. On the precedents of the great London Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862 Government advise the Committee to commence the work with starting a guarantee fund for meeting all outlay, Government being unwilling for very good reasons to undertake the responsibility of providing the expenditure. To render the efforts of the Committee successful the Government have expressed their willingness to aid the guarantee fund and to give other important support. The resolution is upon the whole well considered and liberal, and will commend itself to the Committee. It is to be hoped that the people of Bombay will heartily co-operate with the Committee for making the exhibition worthy of their great and rich city.

Makes certain suggestions in connection with the international exhibition to be held in Bombay.

In noticing the resolution of the Government of Bombay on the proposal to hold an international exhibition in Bombay, the Yajdán Parast (122) of the 16th March makes remarks and suggestions similar to those made by the Bombay Sámáchár (87) of the 14th instant (vide page 8 of the Report on the Native Papers for the week ending the 15th March).

Strongly advises the Vaccination Department to employ additional vaccinators in order to vaccinate people attacked by small-pox, which is raging fearfully in the Ratnágiri District.

The Satyă Shodhak (58) of the 16th March states that small-pox is raging most fearfully in the Ratnágiri District. Deaths are frequently occurring from this terrible disease. The people are very must frightened. They wish to have their children vaccinated, and petitions to supply vaccinators are frequently received at head-quarters from villagers. In the Ratnágiri Táluka there are only two vaccinators, who are not sufficient for present requirements. The Satyă Shodhak trusts that additional vaccinators will be employed at once. The authorities of the Vaccination Department should attend to this matter without delay.

Partiality of European Judges in cases in which Europeans are accused of ill-treating Natives, and remarks in connection therewith.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 17th March, in an article headed "Europeans and Natives," says that since the commencement of English rule in India ninety per cent. of the European culprits have been acquitted who were clearly guilty of the charges of ill-treating Natives. Whenever a case happens in which a European is accused of doing bodily harm to a Native, the Native public can pretty well predict what the decision will be, and the prediction ultimately proves true. The Indu Prakásh here refers to the case of Lieutenant Wells, who was charged with ill-treating the Native railway station-master at Mánikpur in the North-West Provinces, and observes that the District Judge, Mr. Young, who heard the appeal, clearly gave it as his opinion that Lieutenant Wells was guilty of thrashing the station-master without adequate provocation, and that Mr. McMillan, the Magistrate, who tried this case in the first instance showed partiality in acquitting the European culprit. But although Mr. McMillan and Lieutenant Wells were clearly guilty, the former of showing partiality in the discharge of his public duties and the latter of ill-treating the Native railway station-master, yet they have both been let off scot-free. In the interests of justice Messrs. McMillan and Wells ought to have been duly punished for their respective crimes. From these instances Natives cannot help coming to the conclusion that it is a common practice among Europeans to show partiality towards accused persons of their own race. The Indu Prakásh here alludes to the case of the late Rája of Kolhápur, and observes that although Mr. Jopp stated that Mr. Green was liable to be prosecuted for using more force than was necessary, and although several newspapers suggested that Mr. Green should be publicly tried, yet not only was no heed paid to this recommendation, but the Bombay Government completely exonerated him from all blame. The only wonder is that Mr. Green was not rewarded with an inám village in the Kolhápur territory for taking due care of the Rája. The Indu Prakásh is certain that if a tussel similar to that which occurred between the Rája and Mr. Green had occurred between a respectable Native and a low illiterate European, and if the latter had been seriously hurt without any fault of the former, the Native would have been at the least punished with transportation for life. Indeed if Mr. Green had been killed in the tussel instead of the Rája of Kolhápur, it would be difficult to conjecture what fearful things might have come to pass. On the mere suspicion of poisoning the Gáikwád was removed to Madras. Who then could say what would have happened to Shiváji Maháráj if he had been accused of killing Mr. Green? The partiality which is shown to European culprits is not of recent date. Lord Clive committed forgery in order to cheat Surájadowla; but he is praised for this act, while Nandkumár, who was guilty of a similar deed, was sentenced to death by an English Judge. English statesmen in England now declare that English rule in India will not be perpetual without securing the good will of the people. But mere enunciation of good maxims will not make the slightest difference in the conduct of the European officials here. It is not right for Government to ignore public opinion and to act in defiance of it. Such a policy will not draw the masses nearer to Government. In the recent adoption at Kolhápur, it was the opinion of vernacular newspapers and of the people of Maháráshtra that the future ruler of the Kolhápur State should be selected from among the sons of the present Rája of Sátára. Such a selection would not have been detrimental to the interests of Government. In conclusion, the Indu Prakásh strongly urges the rulers of India to act with justice and impartiality in cases affecting Europeans and Natives jointly.

Says that in a case in which a Native and a European are concerned the latter is sure to carry the day.

In a paragraph headed "Our Mofussil Bahádurs" the Native Opinion (10) of the 16th March says:—A recent case in the North-West Provinces came as a surprise upon us, and still more confirmed us in our conviction that in a case where a Native and a European were concerned the European was sure to carry the day in his favour. The facts of this case are sufficiently known and we shall not therefore go into them. Bábu Jogeshwar was no doubt in fault, but his fault seems to have been an aggravation of the aggressive and oppressive conduct of Captain Wells; and when the case came before the Court of the luckless Daniel who presided over it, he seems to have misconstrued the case for the Bábu and visited him with a punishment that should deprive him of his bread for life, while the son of Mars was only let go with a small fine, and of course with the happy and pleasant feelings that the ill-treatment of a Native official was only worth a few rupees. Such a feeling of security is likely to bring more effectually the fair name of British justice into discredit. We think the Government of India are bound to make an example of such official Anglo-Indians as a deterrent to others.

Disapproves of the contemplated transfer of the Assistant Judge's Court from Ahmedabad to Kaira.

The Ahmedabad Samáchár (81) of the 19th March, in referring to the contemplated transfer of the Assistant Judge's Court from Ahmedabad to Kaira, says that there is so much work at Ahmedabad that one Judge and one Assistant Judge can hardly cope with it. At present an appeal is heard a year after it is filed. What time must then elapse when only one Judge has to go through all the work? The people of Ahmedabad will suffer by the contemplated transfer, and the inhabitants of the Kaira District will not be benefited thereby. The latter will have to engage the services of new vakils in addition to those already engaged by them at Ahmedabad, who will not go to Kaira without receiving additional fees. It is also doubtful whether old and competent vakils can be had at Kaira. The public suffer no inconvenience by the present arrangements, as Ahmedabad is connected with neighbouring cities by railway. But at Kaira some distance has to be travelled over by carts. If Godhra is to be made a regulation province and joined to Kaira, as is rumoured, the people of Godhra will be put to greater inconvenience than at present, for Kaira can never be as easy of access to them as Ahmedabad. The present arrangements answer their purpose very well. If Godhra is made a part of the district of Ahmedabad, an additional Assistant Judge should be appointed at the latter place for the speedy performance of the work. [The Kaira Vartamán (103) of the same date urges the permanent location of an Assistant Judge's Court at Kaira.]

Prefers certain complaints against the ábkári management at Surat.

The Gujarát Mitrá (77) of the 16th March complains that the A'bkári Inspectors at Surat without sufficient and reasonable cause search houses for contraband liquors, and their thoughtless proceedings have spread consternation and awe among the people. A correspondent of the Mitrā complains that though Government promised that the contractor of the liquor farm at Surat would be required to distil and sell sweet liquors, yet no such liquors can be had. The contractor seems to have purposely given cause to the A'bkári Commissioner to prohibit him from distilling these liquors. The proof of liquors gets lessened from natural causes while in transit from one place to another, but the retail sellers are punished on the assumption that they make fraudulent mixtures in the liquor.

Obscenities during the Holi holidays.

The Samsher Báhádur (112) of the 14th March condemns the practice of uttering abusive words and making indecent gestures indulged in by Hindus during the Holi holidays, disapproves of the apathy of the mofussil police in checking the vice and the consequent escape of those who indulge in it with impunity, and says that though the disturbances and disgraceful scenes enacted during the Holi holidays have diminished to a great extent within the last fifteen years, the indulgence in these scenes by the law-abiding Hindu community is unbecoming and shameful. The Act of 1856 was passed with a view to prevent such unbecoming conduct, but it does not seem to have made any sensible effect on the Hindus. It is a weakness of the police to connive at such conduct, and hence low-caste people create disturbances and give trouble. The Samsher exhorts educated and sensible Hindus to correct the mistaken views of their ignorant brethren, and says that as long as educated Hindus do not come forward to prevent this breach of public modesty the vice will go on unchecked. The police ought to take stringent measures during the Holi holidays for the prevention of the habit, and should strictly enforce the Act of 1856.

Requests the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, to prevent indecent words being uttered in the next Holi festival.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 16th March complains that in the last Holi holidays indecent words were freely and publicly uttered in several Moholas or bye-lanes and in the Márwádi bazár of Bombay, and great annoyance was caused to the respectable portion of the public. It is therefore to be hoped that the Commissioner of Police will take proper steps to prevent the recurrence of such shameful scenes in the next Holi festival.

Misconduct of the police peon employed to keep order in the Royal Theatre, Bombay, on the night of the 10th March last.

The Telagu Mitrā (92) of the 17th March says that at the Royal Theatre on the Grant Road, Bombay, during the performance of the musical drama of the Clay-cart on the night of the 10th instant the police peon who was kept to maintain order behaved in a most disorderly manner himself. Instead of moving about and doing his duty he sat comfortably in a chair in the stalls and slept soundly. This strange behaviour attracted the notice of the surrounding spectators, who desired him to stand near the entrance. This enraged the peon so much that for nearly an hour he created a fearful disturbance. The Telagu Mitrā suggests that the Police Commissioner should instruct police peons to do their duty properly. If this police peon had misbehaved similarly in the presence of European spectators, he would not have been let off without receiving appropriate punishment for his shameful conduct.

Prays for a reduction in the rates of newspaper postage.

The Ahmedabad Samáchár (81) of the 19th March, in referring to the memorial of the Madras Mail for a reduction in the present rates of newspaper postage, says that it is not likely that great encouragement will be given by a reduction in the present rates to the well-to-do subscribers of English papers in India, the rates of subscription to which are very high in comparison to those of vernacular newspapers. If the rates are to be reduced, those for Native papers should also be proportionately reduced. There is room for reducing the present rates, for the people of India have to pay three times the rates charged in England, and moreover they stand in need of encouragement in the matter of the spread of knowledge. The reduction in postage will bring about a reduction in the rates of subscription to vernacular papers. The vernacular press ought to make a representation to Government in the matter as has been done by English newspapers.

Describes the bad condition of the road between Bulsár and the village of Bhágra.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 22nd March states that the road from Bulsár to the village of Bhágra, at which there is a sea-port, has fallen into disrepair. Large holes have formed on the road, and foot passengers and carts passing along it are put to serious inconvenience and annoyance on account of its bad condition. The authorities concerned ought to speedily attend to this matter.

The New Budget.

Expresses satisfaction with the financial statement for 1884-85.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 16th March observes that the financial statement for 1884-85, just published, must prove satisfactory to the public in England as well as in India. It proves once more the fact that in the hands of capable and honest British administrators the resources of India may be easily made to meet all her ordinary wants and to provide for a number of items of extraordinary expenditure incidental to the liability of the State or the promotion of the welfare of the people. Notwithstanding all the reckless blunders and mismanagement as well as the objectionable measures adopted deliberately or through inadvertence in times fresh in the memory of all, the results of the year about to be over, as set forth in the minute of Sir A. Colvin, emphatically attest the thorough financial solvency of the country and its capacity to keep steadily on the way to material progress, for which the Government have been anxiously labouring. During the year 1883-84, after making ample provision for the payment of all the estimated expenditure and more than one very large item of outlay not included in the accounts carefully framed by Sir E. Baring, Sir A. Colvin is able to proclaim that the said year will close with a clear surplus, showing distinctly the satisfactory condition of all the important or main sources of the country's revenue. [The Rást Goftár (111) of the same date regrets that on account of the late publication of the budget the opportunity for its being subjected to a discussion in the Viceregal Legislative Council has been lost, but is glad that the statement shows that the finances are in a satisfactory condition. The Kaiser-i-Hind (104) of the same date and the Bombay Samáchár (87), the Jáme Jamshed (101) and the Akhbáre Sodágar (82) of the 17th and the Samsher Báhádur (112) of the 21st March, after making a few remarks on some of the items of the budget, express satisfaction with the statement. The Jáme Jamshed of the 18th March regrets that the budget was not issued early enough to be discussed in the Imperial Legislative Council. After pointing out the advantages of a discussion in the Council, the Jáme observes that the wholesome practice of submitting the financial statement to the Council existed in former years but has been departed from of late without good cause. It is therefore to be hoped that the political associations of the country will memorialize the Supreme Government for reverting to the practice, and that Lord Ripon will grant the reasonable prayer.]

Considers the financial statement for 1884-85 as unsatisfactory.

The Yajdán Parast (122) of the 16th March regrets that the financial statement for 1884-85 announces that the license tax is to be continued and that a loan of two krors of rupees is to be raised. The Parast further observes that while India is already crushed with a heavy burden of public debt new loans are raised every year and the debt is increased. The license tax ought to be abolished and the duty levied on salt ought to be lessened; and the deficit caused by these measures ought to be made up by the revival of the import duties on cotton goods, which were thoughtlessly repealed. It is much to be regretted that Sir A. Colvin has allowed a good opportunity to escape by preserving silence on these important measures. [The Broach Samáchár (88) of the 20th March says that the Indian public is sorry at the non-abolition of the license tax.]

Makes certain suggestions in connection with the survey and settlement operations as described in the budget for 1884-85.

In alluding to the summary of the principles which at present have been accepted by the Indian and Home Governments in regard to the survey and settlement operations and which have been mentioned in the financial statement for 1884-85, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 18th March observes that though these principles are not completely satisfactory they will not fail to prove beneficial to the agriculturists. One of the propositions of this arrangement is that all improvements made by the cultivators should be exempted from assessment. This is satisfactory, but in another place it is stated that when the increase of cultivation and of produce is due to improvements executed by the State an increase in the assessment should be made. The latter clause puts Government in the position of a merchant laying out capital and expecting return for the same. This ought not to be the case. Another proposition is that a resurvey and reassessment should be made only when the last survey and assessment are so inaccurate as to be useless or the records have fallen into great disorder. On this subject the revenue officers will be the sole judges, whose decision will have to be accepted mutely. It is therefore desirable that the Government of India should require the local administrations to obtain its permission before a resurvey of a province or a táluka is undertaken.

Railways.

Disapproves of the proposal for a rapid railway extension in India.

In noticing the appointment of a select committee of the House of Commons to consider the question of rapid railway extension in India, the Rást Goftár (111) of the 16th March observes that the present cry for an expeditious multiplication of railway lines is raised by English merchants and manufacturers, who are quite justified in their attempts to advance their own interests, but the natives of India ought to see that their country's interests are not sacrificed. It cannot be advantageous to India that large railway lines, which ought to be constructed within the next fifty years or so, should be provided within the next five years by giving guarantees to private capital and by imposing a heavy burden on the State treasury. Government have been gradually constructing new lines according to the means at their command, and the same course ought to be followed hereafter. The cry for the rapid extension of railway locomotion is raised for the benefit of the rich English capitalists and iron manufacturers, and ought to be exposed for its selfishness.

Says that in constructing new railways in India the branch lines or feeders should be made on the narrow guage.

In a paragraph headed "Railway Extension in India" the Native Opinion (10) of the 16th March says:—If a Parliamentary committee was at all required to investigate into any intricate Indian questions, it was badly wanted to overhaul both the credit and debit sides of our finances. But it seems nobody's care to listen to what the harmless nigger has to say on his own behalf; let him cheerfully pay in gold, with the exchange charge in addition, the Indian bond-holder and the retired Anglo-Indian, who is supposed to spend money there for his welfare, and he is caressed, fondled, nay extolled to the skies for his loyalty. While the question of our taxation has been impressed upon our rulers for the hundredth time, they still seem to think that by adding to our already overgrown cost in the shape of interest they can bring us relief. It is not to be understood that we are dead against any railway extension, but surely such extension should be commensurate with the financial condition of the country, and not with the seemingly pleasant ideas of people who are not to lose but on the contrary can give an increased custom to British traders in iron in the bargain. We have no doubt that this panacea of railways will be taken in hand and carried out with all vengeance; but will not the Government wait in mercy at least for a moment and consider which of the two systems—the broad or the narrow guage—is a preferable evil? Of course our trunk lines ought to be and actually are on the broad guage, but their feeders can well be allowed to be of the other system, giving us an extension and at the same time curtailing our burdens.

Municipalities.

Says that the Town Council of Bombay ought to be allowed to appoint its own Chairman under the Imperial scheme of local self-government.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 17th March is glad that at the last meeting of the Municipal Corporation of Bombay a proposition was brought forward and adopted unanimously that under the changes to be made in the Municipal Act under the new imperial scheme of local self-government the Town Council should be authorized to appoint its own Chairman. In the early days of municipal administration, observes the Samáchár, it was necessary that Government should nominate the Chairman of the Town Council. The time has gone by when this precaution was desirable, and it may be well dispensed with in future. The people of Bombay are now well versed in municipal administration, and their shortcomings in it are attributable not to want of experience but to want of public spirit, which would disappear by their being made more independent than they are. It is therefore to be hoped that Government will not hesitate to make the concession of the Town Council appointing its own Chairman. [The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 18th March expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that a road should be made from Chaupáti to Colába along the sea-shore.

The Rást Goftár (111) of the 16th March observes that there is great need for an airy carriage drive in Bombay. The sea-shore from Warli to the Cumbala Hill is open but its extent is very small, as a number of buildings block up the shore at Breach Candy. It is necessary therefore that a carriage road should be made from Chaupáti to the end of Colába passing all along the sea-shore.

Disapproves of the proposal to construct a temporary road along the sea-shore on the Back Bay.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 17th March does not approve of a temporary carriage drive being constructed along the sea-shore on the Back Bay on account of the drainage works that are being prosecuted on the Queen's Road, and observes that the latter road should be completely closed. No inconvenience can arise from the closing of this road, as the public can conveniently use the Girgaum road for the next three months, before the close of which period the drainage works will be completed. The Jáme also condemns the proposal for the construction of a permanent carriage road along the sea-coast on the Back Bay.

Native States.

Does not approve of the Government resolution on the services of Colonel Barton.

In a paragraph headed "Colonel Barton," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 17th March says:—Colonel Barton having left India by the last mail, the Government of Bombay published its valedictory resolution on the gallant Colonel's services in its last Gazette. It is dated the 20th November 1883. One is rather surprised that this resolution should have been kept secret till now, although Colonel Barton retired from the service last November. Probably the Government did not wish to disturb the gallant Colonel in the quiet tour he was making throughout Káthiáwár after his retirement. However that is not a question of any importance. Everything said about the retired Colonel is laconically said, but two important events in his career as Political Agent of Káthiáwár are omitted—his conduct towards the Rána of Porbandar, and his conduct towards the Maiyas. The Government of Bombay seems to forget facts easily, or probably the literary tendencies of the Secretariat run on the line that nothing but good should be said of retired officials. The utterly deplorable policy which Colonel Barton pursued towards the poor Maiyas, and the equally deplorable position he assumed when called upon to defend that policy, have been left to be recorded as matters of history, being not suited to the eulogium of Government resolutions.

Does not approve of the Government resolution praising Colonel Barton's career as Political Agent of Káthiáwár.

The Rást Goftár (111) of the 16th March observes that it would have been better had the valedictory resolution issued by the Bombay Government a week after Colonel Barton's departure from India appeared while the Colonel was here, for in that case it would have been spared the unpleasant duty of saying anything against him in his absence. Without being harsh upon him, the Goftár would ask what great changes or improvements he introduced into Káthiáwár so as to deserve the great encomium passed upon him. During his long connection with that province he does not seem to have done any important work. The Government resolution says that he exhibited loyalty towards Government and kindness to the Chiefs; but that was not an invaluable recompense for the high position he occupied and the large salary he drew. He did nothing but pass his time pleasantly! He was feted wherever he went. But his name has been connected with the massacre of the Maiyas, much of the responsibility of which sad event rests on him.

Disapproves of the resolution of Government praising the official career of Colonel Barton, late Political Agent of Káthiáwár.

In noticing the resolution of the Government of Bombay praising the official career of Colonel Barton who has resigned service and proceeded to England, the Yajdán Parast (122) of the 16th March observes that the public had strong reasons to be dissatisfied with Colonel Barton's administration of the province of Káthiáwár. His conduct in the matter of the massacre of the Maiyas of Junágad deserved severe censure. He ruled with a high hand, and gave offence to some Native vakils in public and deprived them of their sanads. He did not seem to have made any attempt to punish the rascals who were said to have extorted bribes from some Native States in the name of the political officers. He relied on the representations made by certain servile officials. He raised impediments in the way of the improvement of the administration of several States of the province. The public therefore differs from the eulogistic tone of the resolution of Government on the late Political Agent of Káthiáwár.

Says that the Gáikwád's army ought to be disbanded.

In noticing the transfer of the services of Major Mellis to the Gáikwád for the purpose of reorganizing his army, the Kaiser-i-Hind (104) of the 16th March asks whether the Gáikwád requires any standing army, and observes that this State in common with other principalities is protected by the paramount power from the attacks of internal and external foes, and hence there is no need of the Gáikwád keeping his own army. It is said that if the Gáikwád's troops were disbanded or if their number were reduced the Chief would lose his importance and the soldiers would be thrown out of employ. It is also said that the Baroda Government is required by a treaty made with the British Government to maintain some force. But it must be remembered that there could be no honour in maintaining a rabble that hardly deserves the name of an army, and that it is better to dispense with it than to maintain it. If the troops are reformed into a military police they would be very useful in preserving internal peace and would not lose their employment. The treaty alluded to above was made at a time when there was necessity for the Chief to maintain an army. That necessity has long ceased and the British Government would gladly dispense with the provision for the maintenance of the troops, provided it were assured that the saving effected therefrom would be applied to secure the prosperity of the Gáikwádi ryots.

Says that the revenue assessment on the lands held by the Maiyás should have been fixed at the average of Rs. 18.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 17th March observes that no objection founded upon justice can be taken to the sum of Rs. 22 fixed as the average land revenue assessment which the Maiyas ought to pay to the Junágad Darbár for the lands held by them, because Mr. Hammick came to that conclusion after a searching enquiry and duly made representations of both parties. But before the enquiry the Maiyas paid an average of Rs. 18, and it would not have been wrong to fix that amount for the future as a punishment to the Darbár for its part in the massacre of the Maiyas.

Says that Mr. Bápálál Máneklál, the late Náib Diván of Junágad, should not be re-admitted into Government service.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 16th March observes that it is reported that the Bombay Government has recommended to the Government of India to restore Mr. Bápálál Máneklál to his post in the office of the Political Agent of Káthiáwár and that he will very likely be appointed to a vacancy that has occurred in the office of the Political Agent of Cutch. Mr. Bápálál deserved the greatest blame in connection with the massacre of the Maiyas of Junágad, and the Government of India therefore decided that he should not be restored to Government service. It would be the height of injustice to admit him again into the service of Government, and it is to be hoped that Lord Ripon's Government will not permit anything of the kind to be done.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
25*th March* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári: Complaints regarding the — management at Surat ... 11
Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency for 1882-83: Objection to certain remarks contained in the— 7
Advance of France in Indo-China: Expression of opinion that England should take Siam under her protection in order to prevent France from approaching the Indian Empire so close as to endanger its peace. 7
Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
  Expression of opinion that the — should be checked 6
  Reflections on the approach of the Russians to the north-west frontier 5
  Reflections on the near approach of Russia towards India ... 6
British Government of India: Expression of opinion that the British Government is preferable to all other Governments and reasons for that opinion 3
India Council:
  Advocacy of the abolition of the— 3
  Approval of the appointment of a commission to enquire and report on the constitution and functions of the— 4
International Exhibition in Bombay:
  Approval of the Government Resolution on the proposal to hold an— 9
  Suggestions in connection with the contemplated holding of an— ... 10
Judicial matters:
  Disapproval of the contemplated transfer of the Assistant Judge's Court from Ahmedabad to Kaira 11
  Expression of opinion that in a case in which a Native and a European are concerned, the latter is sure to carry the day ... 11
  Partiality of European Judges in cases in which Europeans are accused of ill-treating Natives and remarks in connection therewith 10
Loans: Expression of opinion that the next loan should be raised in India and not in England... 7
Police:
  Misconduct of the — peon employed to keep order in the Royal Theatre, Bombay, on the night of the 10th March last ... 12
  Obscenities during the Holi holidays 12
  Request to the Commissioner of —, Bombay, for preventing the utterance of indecent words in the next Holi festival 12
Postal matters: Prayer for a reduction in the rates of newspaper postage. 12
Roads: Bad condition of the road between Bulsár and the village of Bhágra 13
Vaccination: Advice to the — Department to employ additional vaccinators in order to vaccinate people attacked by small-pox, which is raging fearfully in the Ratnágiri District 10
Vernacular Press: Objection to the remark made in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency that the tone of the Kesari newspaper was unfriendly to Government 9

PART II.—The New Budget—

Budget Statement for 1884-85:
  Expression of opinion that the — is unsatisfactory 13
  Satisfaction with the— 13
  Suggestions in connection with the survey and settlement operations as described in the— 14

PART III.—Railways—

Extension of railways in India: Disapproval of the proposal for a rapid... 14
New railways in India: Expression of opinion that in constructing — the branch lines or feeders should be made on the narrow guage ... 14

Page.

PART IV.—Municipalities—

Bombay :

Disapproval of the proposal to construct a temporary road along the sea-shore on the Back Bay 15
Expression of opinion that the Town Council of — ought to be allowed to appoint its own Chairman under the Imperial scheme of local self-government 15
Expression of opinion that a road should be made from Chaupáti to Colába along the sea-shore 15

PART V.—Native States—

Baroda : Expression of opinion that the army of the Gáikwád of — should be disbanded 16
Junágad :
Expression of opinion that the revenue assessment for the lands held by the Maiyás should have been fixed at the average of Rs. 18. 16
Expression of opinion that Mr. Bápálál Máneklál, the late Náib Diván of — should not be re-admitted into Government service. 17
Káthiáwár : Disapproval of the Government resolution on the official career of Colonel Barton, late Political Agent,—
The Indu Prakásh 15
The Rást Goftár 16
The Yajdán Parast 16

BOMBAY : PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 29th March 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
13	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
17	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
20	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*22	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
23	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
24	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
25	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
26	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
27	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
28	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
29	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
30	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
31	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
32	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*33	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*34	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
35	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
36	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
37	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
38	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
39	„ Mahárásthră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
40	„ Mahárásthră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
41	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
42	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
44	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*47	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
48	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
49	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*50	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
51	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
54	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
55	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
56	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
63	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
64	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

* Contains articles in Kánarese also.

C. R.
15125
INDIA OFFICE
22 [illegible] 1884

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	Mara'thi—continued.
*65	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
66	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
67	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
68	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
69	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
70	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*71	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*73	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*74	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
75	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	Anglo-Gujara'ti.
*76	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
77	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
78	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
79	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
80	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	Gujara'ti.
81	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
82	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
83	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
84	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*85	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
86	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
87	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
88	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
89	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
90	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
91	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
92	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
93	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*94	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
95	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
96	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
97	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*98	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
99	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*100	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
101	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
102	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
103	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*104	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
105	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
106	„ Lok Mitră	Do.	Weekly	800
107	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
108	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
109	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
110	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
111	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
112	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
113	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*114	„ Saurăshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	Ka'narese.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*124	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	Sanskrit.
*127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	Urdu.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	Persian.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	English, Mara'thi and Urdu.
*131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Nowspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berar papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that the supervision of Indian affairs should be done by Parliament.

In an article headed "The Council of the Secretary of State for India," the Native Opinion (10) of the 23rd March says:—Anglo-Indians have been nothing more than the representatives of a great bureaucratic league whose interest in this vast country extends only so far as it gives them opportunity to fill their pockets and assert their vulgar supremacy. The desire to rule is admittedly an element of every human mind. But it is one of the several other reprehensible desires of our nature and requires to be subdued and kept in due subordination. With our Anglo-Indian officials, however, it is quite otherwise. When they come to India they are all what a civilized country and a heritage of liberal institutions must produce. During the first few days of his life in India the Anglo-Indian Civilian is a sweet sensible young man, with the efflux of the liberty and candour of his nation running through his veins. This is however the time of his tutelage. These few days gone, we find him a changed man. As if by some sudden and incomprehensible spell he loses all those engaging qualities which first made him loveable, and now a full-blown Civilian, he stalks forth from his bungalow with superciliousness incarnate sitting upon his brow and indicating by his looks, gestures, and voice that he has descended from some unearthly region to rule supreme over the animals of this planet, the men even on which appear to him as so many sheep, only after his own image. Such being the metamorphosis which the Civilian generally undergoes after a short stay with his predecessors here, how is it possible that he should humble himself so low as to seek to know the wants and grievances of the people? The lesson that he has received is constantly dinning into his ear, "Jack, be conqueror." The desire to rule, therefore, he cultivates and developes to the highest pitch, and thus when he at last goes back to his country he goes back an utterly transformed being. For when he came to India he was a simple straightforward young man; but when he goes back he is a Nabob in every respect, in purse, in manners, in habits, in principles, and in what not? Of such a class, of course with a few honourable exceptions, are the experts who are to step into India Office after such a painstaking performance of their part in India. To speak the truth, these people know really very little of the needs and grievances of the flocks of which they were appointed to be the shepherds. They go stuffed indeed with some a priori notions of their league with some time a leaven of some original ones of their own, but they are almost invariably the offshoots of bureaucratic interest, which consists in nothing else but in the preservation of unquestioned dominion of the league in this country, with perhaps an external gilding of the interests of this country to wash the eyes of the conscientious observers at home. If such is the constitution of the principal part of the administrative machinery for India, the corresponding must be the result. And so it has been; for though in theory the Secretary of State for India is left independent of the Council, in actual practice he is reduced to the unenviable position of a mere mouthpiece of that body. He consequently finds ample opportunity to shirk his abstract responsibility by sheltering himself behind the backs of his worthy councillors. If such a state of things is allowed to exist in the main part of Indian administrative machinery, it is no wonder that the working of the subordinate parts should be vitiated. If the motive force be ill-regulated, the instruments which are to move must necessarily be so. The constitution of the Indian Council is the principal ulcer in the deranged body of the Indian administrative machinery, and so long as that remains, every other part is bound to be in greater or less disorder. However hard the well-meaning heads of the Government of England may try to smooth down the minor eruptions, they must shoot up again and again in spite of them. One Lord Ripon, however highly imbued with the sense of his great and important charge, and however benevolently inclined towards the people of this country, can effect very little when other officials, higher and lower, are not in unison with his spirit. Occasional cures, and those to the comparatively minor distempers of the body of our administrative machinery, can do very little in producing a change in the existing state. It is not this or any other part that it will suffice to cure. It is that great principal ulcer of the constitution of the Indian Council that requires to be anatomised by the unsparing scalpel of statesmanship. To stop the growth of the tree permanently the mere lopping off of the branches will not do. It is the root that should be at once struck at. As in the commercial world so even in politics the doctrine that the direct care of the owner is most effective holds good. Hired labour brings with it its own interests, and these must clash with those of the owner. It is only if the direct supervision of Indian affairs be assumed by the people of England themselves, who by the bye are the real sovereigns of this country, through their Parliament, that a just and profitable management of their Indian concerns can be ensured. Apart from these business-considerations, is it not the duty of the people of England to see the vast millions of their fellowmen whom they have taken under their care well looked after? Is not humanity sufficient to plead the cause of so many sentient beings, as sensitive and as capable as themselves? That the destinies of a vast country like India should be almost entirely in the hands of a bureaucratic league is a blemish, a stain on the name of England's sons, who are always the champions of liberal principles and the respecters of honourable feelings. If then there is truth in all what we have said, we beseech the Parliament of England, and through it the people, in the name of humanity and even of private interest, to consider the claims of so many millions of their fellowmen and free them from the unquestioned domination of a packed aristocracy. The question of the direct Parliamentary supervision of Indian affairs being thus established, the means by which to bring it to bear effectively on Indian matters remains to be discussed. The consideration of this we reserve for another occasion.

Suggests a reconstruction of the Indian Council.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 29th March observes that twenty-six years' experience has shown that the Indian Council cannot be useful and its constitution needs reconstruction. The Council has inflicted on India the narrow-guage railway, which has proved a great hindrance to trade. The members of the Council belong exclusively to the Covenanted Civil Service and consequently conserve the interests of that service. Highly-paid posts in India have to be reserved for providing the friends and relations of the members of the Council, and some of the selfish acts in connection with the naval and military services have been done by them. Hence there is no use in continuing the Council as it is constituted. Mr. John Slagg wishes to abolish the Council and to give the Secretary of State a number of assistants and a standing Parliamentary committee. If Mr. Slagg's proposal is accepted and adopted, India will suffer, because then her interests will become the subject of party questions in Parliament. It would be better therefore to reduce the present number of the members of the Council and to make each member eligible to hold office for five years only. The Council should be made up of official as well as non-official elements, and among the latter a few Natives should be admitted.

Remarks on the injustice of not abolishing the duty on gold and silver ware imported into England from foreign countries.

In an article headed "The Theory of Free Trade," the Native Opinion (10) of the 23rd March says:—Underneath the lamp there is darkness; and the truth of this oriental adage may be illustrated by a reference to the conduct and action of the British Government in respect of the English import duties on gold and silver wares imported into the United Kingdom from India for the purposes of trade. For one reason or other England has been professing the doctrine of free trade and avails herself of every opportunity to impress upon her neighbours the duty to follow her in her footsteps; but how far her advice has prevailed with them is now quite apparent. Perhaps England excepted, many of the States of Europe, even the most advanced ones, still adhere to import duties, though often pressed to the contrary, on the ground that the retention of them is a necessity in their case as a protection of, as well as an encouragement to, indigenous manufactures, and no sensible man can deny that there is considerable truth in this view. We are not prepared to believe, all professions to the contrary notwithstanding, that English statesmen of every shade are ready to let go such duties where they can retain them or where they can afford to disregard the voice of remonstrance against them. Thus while almost all Indian import duties on manufactures of foreign make have been abolished with a stroke of the pen, the British Ministry still steadfastly adhere to similar import duties levied on goods of our make and imported into England for trade. For fiscal purposes the levy may be convenient, but certainly such an impost can no longer be defended on the basis either of a moral or political expediency in view of the abolition of our own duties. If we are to admit fiscal convenience as sound reason, the same fiscal convenience or reason did, and even now does, apply with still greater force to our own finances, and yet the persuasions of British statesmen could and did demand of our Government the immediate abolition of them. He who preaches and professes a doctrine ought also to act up thereto, and then only his mission can command the reverence and respect of others; but in the case of the import duties British statesmen have only preached without having observed a concord between words and deeds. We regret we have to say these hard things of a Ministry which has been doing so much for us; but bitter as the truth is, duty demands that we ought to state it with a hope that they may still put themselves right in reference to this country. We are not unaware that they seem not unconscious of the justice of our demand; but this is a poor consolation. We maintain that those who make a profession of any theory or creed ought first to abide by its results upon themselves, and then ask others to follow their dictates. The question of British import duties on Indian goods has been brought to the notice of the British Cabinet so often that we have begun to believe that unless studied and constant effort is made their conscience will never be awakened. It is not the Indian manufacturer alone that is done injustice to in the case, but even the British trade. There is a law in England under which no gold or silver ware can be imported or sold in any market unless it is submitted to a process technically called "hall-marking," which simply means a fire test of the metal of which the ware is made. The object of the law seems to be the prohibition of the import of a baser metal or wares made thereof. The object is good and can do no harm when the article to be submitted to the fire-test is metal only and no ware; for in the case of wares it often does much mischief. To avoid the mischief resulting from this process of "hall-marking" in the case of wares British goldsmiths send their wares for this examination while they are in a crude shape. But what the British manufacturer can do in England the Indian goldsmith cannot do in India, and his difficulties consequently are the greater. We do not question the motive or the object of this antiquated piece of law, but we do object to its prohibitive character. The existence of the law is an unmitigated interference with the freedom of trade, and when those who are most interested in its existence come forward and ask for its abrogation, it is wonderful that the Ministry should persist in keeping it up, nay in reaffirming it. The reply of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to the representations of the different Chambers of Commerce and other public bodies amounts to a refusal to favourably consider the question of these duties. We are grieved to see the British authorities so summarily deciding of the question, while they should have all along through persuasion or otherwise induced the Government of India to abolish their own import duties even at the cost of great loss and fiscal inconvenience to the Indian treasury. We grant that the removal of the British duties will entail some loss on the British treasury, but has not the removal of similar Indian duties in favour of British manufactures inflicted upon us a fiscal inconvenience of some magnitude and the perpetuation of other taxes on the people of India? Like the British traders in our gold and silver ware, neither Native merchants nor Native customers ever complained of our cotton import duties. The duty being of an indirect character and its incidence upon the people generally being small, people did prefer such taxation to any other of a direct character. Nevertheless the British authorities decided against all protests on their abolition and the order has been carried out. We would ask the British people whether this is a fair measure of justice in both the cases, or whether it is not one-sided. We are constrained to say that India has been done injustice to in the matter of these duties. Would the British public yet awake to the argument of justice, mercy and truth? It is such smaller but grievous acts of one-sidedness that give rise to discontent and distrust and sap the foundation of love and affection in a subject-people for their sovereign. We hope Parliament will view the question from our standpoint and give us the justice which has hitherto been denied to us.

Severely censures the English Government for refusing to abolish the import duty on Indian gold and silver ware.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 23rd March observes that the point-blank refusal given by Mr. Childers to the deputation that waited upon him on the 20th instant praying for the abolition of the unjust and inequitable English import duty on gold and silverware from India was based on the same highhanded and selfish policy as that which led the present Ministry and its predecessors to despoil India of her import duties amounting to krors of rupees and levied on principle and for reasons far more justifiable, sound and imperative than those on which the universally condemned import duties on gold and silver ware continued to be levied in England. The curt reply of the Chancellor of the Exchequer is as shabby as it is vexing to the people of this country. It certainly does very little credit to the Liberal administration which is so much given to boast when it suits its purpose that it is a consistent advocate of free-trade principles. [The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 24th March expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that England should fulfil her noble mission in India, heedless of the scare raised by those who cry down the advance of Russia in Central Asia.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 23rd March, in an article headed "The fresh outburst of hysteria—Russian advance," says :—The march of events or force of circumstances under which a strong power is spurred on to invade the neighbouring weak states and to absorb them must never be lost sight of. What has happened again and again in various parts of the world from the creation must be expected to happen over again in the future. It is simply the repetition of history. In the absorption of Central Asian Khanates and principalities by Russia we only discern the active principle of what we may call the evolution of empires. As the chief among a number of primitive savages became lord of the tribe and so established the first form of rudimentary government by force, so does the modern state as ruled by king or president, Czar or Kaisar. The barbarous primitive instincts, though concealed under a variety of environments which make up what is known as "civilisation," assert and reassert themselves. The ultimate result is what evolutionists call "the survival of the fittest." Why should imprecations be hurled against Russia for fulfilling what she believes to be her "destiny," which is only a crude synonym for the scientific phrase "survival of the fittest"? In her onward progress Russia meets at every turn weak centres of force. She is insensibly impelled to scatter that force and annihilate its centres. And one step leads to another. What was the old Roman conquest of Asia? How does Russian conquest of Central Asia differ from that of India by the British? Is it not very inconsistent for a greater portion of that nation who in a previous century were led first by a handful of traders to absorb one province after another over which the Tartar and the Mogul had presided in times before to denounce Russia for adopting somewhat similar tactics a hundred years after? The Bengalee justly observes that the tactics that hundred years ago won an empire for England on the banks of the Ganges are being successfully played out in Central Asia. Meer Jaffirs are in abundance in Central Asia. The Clives are also there. The advance of Russia is a necessity. None can stay it. The older civilisations will crumble away before the power and genius of Russia, till at last the time will come when the two great European powers will find themselves confronted with each other, and, we hope, as friends. The future destiny of Asia rests in the hands of England and Russia. In this fact we perceive signs of hopefulness; of the uplifting of the mist which has for ages overhung the vast continent; of the banishment of that stagnation which has so much blunted the Eastern mind. It should be a day of rejoicing when the Lion and the Bear sit together to guard their respective frontiers. Asks the Bengalee, Is this a result which we should deplore? Certainly not. Providence has assigned to these great European powers a special sphere in moulding the civilisation of Asia: each has its allotted sphere of duty. The Semetic tribes are to be under the control of Russia; India, the ancient home of Aryan civilisation, is to renew her career under the auspices of England. There need be no jealousies between the two countries. Rather let there be the emulation inspired by a lofty object. Russia may not have yet arrived at that stage of civilisation as England and France, but it must be remembered that her growth as an empire is modern. She has asserted herself as a power only during the last 150 years, and even then as a semi-Asiatic one. As time progresses she must, by the very force of events in Europe, arrive at a higher and purer stage of civilisation. In proportion to that advancement will her ambition for conquest grow less. There is an end even to the largest territorial acquisitions. The tether must sooner or later be reached. The arts of peace will then assert their sway and in proportion to their ascendancy loftier ideals of government based on greater personal freedom, tempered with mercy and benevolence, will prevail. Thus alone will Russia work out her "destiny" in Asia. Meanwhile, as our contemporary thoughtfully observes, "by all means strengthen the power of England in India. Her surest strength, however, will be not in her armies, nor in the wonderful appliances of modern warfare. Let England establish her throne in the hearts of the people by the justice of her laws and the benevolence of her policy, and then she may bid defiance to the advance of the Russian Bear," or for that matter of any other foe. A government based on law and order, freedom and contentment,—a government that endears itself to its subjects by peace and plenty, by means of moral and political advancement, is sure to last longer than a government founded on military despotism which breeds disloyalty and discontent. The more therefore that the British in India concern themselves with advancing the interests of the people and assuring them that these are identical with theirs, the greater will be the security of their hold on this vast empire which Providence has entrusted to their care. Let England then fulfil her noble mission, heedless of the scare of hysteric Russophobes.

Says that Russia cannot conquer India.

In noticing the advance of Russia on Merv and the rumour that she has an eye upon India, the Gujaráti (97) of the 23rd March enters into details for the purpose of proving that the military strength of Russia is inadequate to undertake successfully this herculean task, that there are many territorial and political difficulties in her way for the invasion of India, and that Russian statesmen are not so foolish as to seriously think of accomplishing the almost impossible work of conquering India.

Advises the adoption of strict measures against the Russian designs on India.

The Yajdán Parast (122) of the 23rd March alludes to the occupation of Merv by the Russians and the appropriation of some Afghan territory by the Persians in the neighbourhood of Herat, and observes that considering the undoubted evidence of Russian intentions on India and the Persian leaning towards Russia, it is only discreet that the British Government should not only occupy Quetta, but should take due measures for the safety of the Indian empire beyond the limits of Beluchistan. The Parast once more warns the British Government that any neglect in this vital matter will not fail to affect the Indian interests adversely. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (82) of the 28th March expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Remarks on Lord Ripon's career as Viceroy.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 23rd March says:—The more occasions we have of watching the doings and speeches of our Viceroy the nearer are our ties of affection drawn to him. He possesses a singular breadth of mind and sincerity of purpose. He has initiated many reforms, but has been able to carry through very few and on this account narrow-minded persons find fault with him. But an impartial observer of his career will at once declare that the legion of his subordinates is the obstructive element that has retarded progress. The latest instance of the Viceroy's noble motives can be found in the speech he delivered at the grand ceremony in connection with Dr. Sarcar's Scientific Institute at Calcutta. The speech is a very clear exposition of the Viceroy's motives, and we feel sure that everyone that reads this speech will at once say that Lord Ripon has done more good to us by opening the eyes of the nation to our real wants than his predecessors have been able to do. In fact, Lord Ripon is pointing out the direction in which the whole Indian nation must move. He is giving a tone to the Native society. Before Lord Ripon's arrival we were agitating and imploring Government, but there was no uniformity. While Bengal was praying for better administration of justice, Bombay was crying for permanent settlement and Madras for a third thing. We admit every demand was truly national, but there being nothing as an organised movement throughout the length and breadth of the land, our attempts fell short and there was no gain. But by the advice which our paternal Viceroy has given us we have been able to accomplish during the last four years what we could not have done in forty years. Let us hope that the remainder of his period will be similarly employed in the noble work of education, and we shall see that his successor will have to give us what Lord Ripon has taught us to demand and work for.

Condemns the conduct of the Madras Government in the matter of the Salem riots and asks the Supreme Government to immediately interfere and prevent miscarriage of justice.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 23rd March, in an article headed "The Salem Riots and the imbeciles of Madras," says:—The people of Madras have now realised to their bitter chagrin what a failure their Governor has turned out to be. Since his arrival Mr. Grant Duff has more than once proved himself a failure as chief administrator. What between writing minutes by the yard, and making long peregrinations up and down the country, he seems to have scarcely utilized his time as even a moderately able administrator. The Salem riots of 1882 have led to a good deal of heart-burning consequent on official blunders, apart from their having sown the seed of discontent among a law-abiding and peaceful community. The riots led to the apprehension of many innocent persons in respectable walks of life and their conviction for various terms. False evidence was produced before the High Court. The Judges remarked on it as unsatisfactory and untrustworthy. All these and many other matters in connection with the discreditable incident were submitted to the Viceroy when recently visiting Madras, in the shape of a memorial signed by nearly 10,000 persons. That document conclusively showed the innocence of many of the convicted persons. But it must have been a matter of regret to Lord Ripon, as it is to us, that he could not entertain the prayer of the memorialists, namely, to exercise his prerogative of mercy, and order their release. We are sure His Lordship is the last man to tolerate injustice, much less a scandalous miscarriage of justice, whereby more than fifty respectable and innocent men have been sentenced to penal servitude for various terms. And now to cap the whole business, there comes that very reprehensible letter from Mr. McIver, the Special Magistrate who was deputed to make an enquiry into the matter. In substance it asks the Secretary to Government to let it be known to the High Court Judges that what this worthy Magistrate has done must be submissively ratified by them. What impertinence! Here is a subordinate executive attempting to coerce a superior independent body of officers into doing what the Government has set itself determinedly to do! His decision must be upheld. If not, new mischief will arise! Are we living under the British ráj, or how, when we read of such an audacious letter emanating from a servant of the State? What does Mr. Grant Duff do on receipt of this precious demi-official communication from Mr. McIver? He acquiesces in the opinion! That is to say, the Governor of the Presidency actually endorses the open insult offered to the Judges of the High Court, who are independent officers of the Crown. The Spectator here quotes extracts from the Statesman and the Hindu newspapers condemning the conduct of the Madras Government in the matter, and remarks:—The Supreme Government must soon decide the matter in the interests of liberty and fair play. What has happened in Madras may happen some day elsewhere. It is well known how rapidly this sort of contagion spreads in India. Are Mr. Grant Duff and his colleagues in Council showing to the people of Madras a "practical" example of that "righteousness" which goes to exalt a nation? If ever there was a case that required immediate interference, it is this; and the sooner all the papers are called for, the better. The Judges of the Madras High Court must also bestir themselves to vindicate their dignity, against which an ignoble attempt seems to have been made by the executive. A few more such instances and the reputation of the British Government for impartiality will be lost. The Statesman is right when it remarks that "small in every sense" Mr. Grant Duff is perhaps the "smallest of the many men who have held the important office of a local Governor in India for the last fifty years."

Remarks on Mr. Grant Duff and his policy.

In an article headed "The Jabardasti in the Madras Presidency," the Mahrátta (2) of the 23rd March says:—It has been the misfortune of the Madras Presidency to have at the head of its affairs a gentleman whose only recommendation is that he travels largely and writes fast. As for any measure of public utility according to the principles of true liberalism, Mr. Grant Duff has shown that the principles, if he brought them at all securely packed with him, have been lost during his voyage out. He has developed, and that too very rapidly, into an out and out conservative, something in the style of an officer in the good old times in the service of the Company. He shows little respect to the bickerings of the press, Native or Anglo-Indian; he would like to muzzle it if he can; if not, he can stop the noble fountain of State information from showering its blessings on the delinquents. And so he is marching on in his career, followed by the unheeded cries of the people through the press. In short, he is just like Sir Richard Temple, excepting in those redeeming qualities of the latter which have preserved his name in this Presidency from being contemptible. The Mahrátta here refers to the dismissal of Mr. C. Vijiaraghava Chary, B. A., Municipal Commissioner of Salem, from the commission under peculiar circumstances, and remarks:—The precious document in which the Collector of Salem makes a recommendation to Government for the removal of Mr. Vijiaraghava Chary from the commission affords ample proof of the spirit in which the charges against that gentleman have been chosen. According to this new Daniel, the writing of clever petitions or doing any other clever thing is criminal, and hence steps must be taken in childhood to crush out any cleverness that the child may exhibit. Then again public spirit must be avoided as an abomination. Connection with the public press must be eschewed. In short, the principles of perfect johukumism, which can only be most efficiently learned in the benighted Presidency, must be thoroughly mastered if one wants these gods of the earth to look kindly upon him. We do not know how far our friends in Madras would like this sudden benumbing dose administered to them. We on this side, thanks to our good stars, are preserved from such a fearful catastrophe. But we humbly hope and pray that they should not tamely submit. In spite of the expected repulses the public should thunder at the doors of Government, constitutionally of course, until justice is done. And we may rest secure that the best traditions of British power and rule give us every hope of getting justice done, only if the attempts are sufficiently persevering.

Says that it is the marriage expenses which are impoverishing the cultivator.

The Dnyánodayă (7) of the 27th March says:—We are surprised and pained at constantly hearing even the common cultivators in small villages complain that all their troubles are due to money-lenders. And now that the papers are beginning to harp constantly on the severity of the land-tax, the people are beginning to say that next to the money-lenders the English Government is the cause of their troubles. But even with small crops before their eyes in their fields, due neither to the money-lenders nor to the Government, the people cannot see that the lack or excess of rain is a prominent cause of their difficulty this year. But if editors and intelligent men cannot see this and waste all their energies on the sáwkárs and Government, what wonder that the common people take up the same cry? But crops or no crops, so far as we can see the same expenses are incurred for marriages and festivals and feasts as ever. These expenses must be incurred, and then the same old cry must be kept up that the money-lenders and Government are impoverishing the land!

Praises the official career of the Honourable Mr. E. W. Ravenscroft.

In noticing the retirement from service of the Honourable Mr. E. W. Ravenscroft, the Rást Goftár (111) of the 23rd March briefly recounts his official career, and observes that the people took him for a person of unsociable disposition, but he was unsociable to Europeans and Natives alike He did not see any persons except on business, and when he received them he spoke with them only on business. He worked very hard and rendered very valuable services to the public. Most of his acts are distinguished by his high mental calibre for grasping the important questions that came before him. His views were those of a mature statesman. He formed his opinions after impartially weighing the arguments on both sides of a question. Being of a taciturn, reserved and unaffable disposition, most of his good acts were not known to the public, but those that came to light redound to his credit. His minute on the subject of the massacre of the Maiyás, in which he recorded his dissent from the other members of the Executive Council, showed that he felt a great deal for the poor people. Many Natives believed he was not their friend because he did not like to receive them, but his minute in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill, in which he exposed the selfish outcry of the Europeans against the Bill, showed that he was a real well-wisher of the Natives. He advocated the claims of Natives to the higher posts under Government whenever the question came before him. It was he who put a stop to the absorption of a portion of the Mysore territory into the Bombay Presidency. He first advocated the Cotton Frauds Act, but when he was convinced of its worthless character he was foremost in getting it repealed. He was a real friend of the Natives and silently worked in their interests. He has resigned the Bombay Civil Service, but ought to get an appointment either in the Viceregal or the Indian Council in the interests of the country. The Honourable Mr. Gibbs will soon retire and the vacant post ought to be conferred on Mr. Ravenscroft. [The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 28th and the Akhbáre Sodágar (82) of the 29th March express similar sentiments.]

Comments in connection with the remark made in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency about the hostility of certain newspapers to Government.

The Máhrátta (2) of the 23rd March says:—The ways of the officials are strange indeed. We know that the Madras Times was bycotted for some time because it published a certain minute of the Governor in its columns. The Atheneum has done more serious mischief by exposing certain facts about the Salem ryots and has committed the same fault as the Times. The Calcutta Statesman often publishes such papers and manages to incur the displeasure of Government. We have seen that such papers as generally fall into the hands of newspaper writers, and when published create a great sensation, are papers which in the interests of the people ought not to remain unpublished, but which the rulers for the time being think it a policy to keep shut up in the archives of the Secretariat. Somebody gets at them, and in the interests of the public, hands them over to the editor of a newspaper, who publishes them. These newspapers are found fault with as being immoral in their practices, and the question therefore arises, which is immoral, the keeping under lock and key or the publication? What one thinks perfectly moral the other condemns as immoral, and this kind of difference in opinion is not confined to the publication of confidential documents only. The official and the non-official have become formal expressions for prejudice and interests of the governed. It has by this time become a patent fact that when public opinion sees a certain thing black, official opinion sees it white and vice versâ. If our readers take the trouble of referring to the chapter on the Native Press and Literature in the last Administration Report of this Presidency they will find that the Kesari (35) and one or two other vernacular papers have been stamped as hostile to Government. We thank the writer of the passage heartily. Under a foreign rule opposition, legitimate, well-meaning and constitutional, is the justification for the existence of political bodies and political organs of public opinion. We have often said that the Anglo-Indian press would and does no good, for though on ordinary occasions it discusses subjects with pretty good impartiality it never cares to deal with subjects which involve the Anglo-Indian and which if it impartially treated them would turn the inside of their conduct out. The Native papers have to do the work, no matter how unpleasant it may be, and the result is that these papers are then condemned as being hostile to Government. We have already said that we take the remark rather as a compliment than as a slur. The report is before the public and so are the papers, so that it will judge for itself. In the absence of anything definite we take the remark to mean this that the Kesari and the other papers referred to represent the non-official side, while those that may be friendly, we of course use this expression in the official sense, represent the official side. We are glad we are doing our duty honestly. We would not have cared to see what opinion the official world has about us, for in all our performances we care to know what the public thinks of us. Government forgets that such papers are not an accident; they are the product of the time, and if they are really 'hostile' there is some unknown cause that makes them so. What is it that such papers do? They criticise unfavourably the actions of Government, but Government has not had the courage to say that we do so without reason. Let the reason therefore be removed and the antagonism, if there is any, will cease. By the bye we may ask Government if it is for this supposed antagonism that we are denied the privilege of receiving official publications. If so, it is a grievous mistake and the sooner it is corrected the better; because if official publications are sent to us we shall have better information about Government action, and being better informed our opposition will exercise a more healthful influence.

Says that certain newspapers marked out as unfriendly in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency do not deserve the epithet.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 27th March, in alluding to the remark in the last Administration Report that the tone of certain vernacular newspapers was unfriendly to Government, observes that they do not deserve this epithet. It is true that certain newspapers are free and outspoken in their utterances of public men and measures, and in cases where injustice has been done they are rather strong in their condemnation; but such conduct ought not to be stigmatised as unfriendly to Government. It is not right to confound Government with its individual officers. Those officers who treat the subjects of Government in opposition to its publicly declared policy and sentiments are its real opponents and not those who condemn such conduct. The newspapers picked out as unfriendly to Government are really not so. In conclusion, the Dnyán Prakásh advises the Reporter on the Native Press to think carefully before passing his opinions on particular newspapers.

Takes exception to the remark in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency that the tone of the Poona Vaibhav was unfriendly to Government.

The Poona Vaibhav (48) of the 23rd March says that in the last Administration Report it has been included among the newspapers which are unfriendly to Government. The Poona Vaibhav considers that the writer of the report in question has committed a serious oversight in blaiming it. Not only has the Vaibhav never published any effusions against Government in the past, but has no desire whatever of publishing them in the future. In criticising the actions of Government officials it has frequently been outspoken in its utterances in order that the mistakes may be rectified, and hence it is possible that the writer of the report may have been led into making the accusation. It is very rarely that persons can be found who are candid and outspoken in their utterances on public men and measures. The writer of the report ought to have noted this fact before making the remark to which exception has been taken. Strictly speaking many advantages result from the free expression of opinion. The Vaibhav has freely commented upon the actions of Government by which discontent is likely to be engendered among its subjects. If this were not done, the Government would never come to know the real feelings of the community at large. The smothering of popular sentiment may in course of time be productive of fearful consequences. For this reason the Vaibhav has from the best motives ever afforded aid to Government by its free and outspoken utterances on public matters. But these times are so peculiar. Fault is found with persons who wish to assist Government and whose intentions are pure. The Government ought to have duly weighed the words before passing censure on the writings of the Vaibhav.

Says that bad liquor is manufactured at Surat.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 23rd March observes that before the liquor contract for Surat was given mowra liquor of a superior kind was prepared in that town which was consumed not only by natives but by the nobility in Europe. The contractor cannot prepare such good liquor now. The stuff manufactured by him is not only inferior but detrimental to the health of its consumers. The Mitră supports the assertions of its correspondent and offers to prove them.

The New Budget.

Remarks on the budget statement for 1884-85.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 23rd March says:—The annual budget is already out, and as usual furnishes ample matter for comment. It is to be regretted that this year too the budget does not get the benefit of a public discussion in the Viceroy's Council, the reason being that it necessitates no new legislation. This is an undesirable state of the law, which requires to be remedied at an early date. Otherwise a Government has only to refrain from proposing new measures to stop an inconvenient criticism of a careless or indifferent budget. It must be admitted however that we cannot say of this year's budget that it is anything but elaborate. It moreover is remarkably clear even for the meanest capacity. The only thing that can be said against it, and that perhaps is not little, is that it proposes no fiscal reforms. The license tax, the stamp duties and the rice duty will be continued for another year at least. Sir Auckland Colvin's justification lies in the lateness of the season when he obtained charge of the Finance Minister's portfolio, as well as in the fact that the revenue from opium for 1884-85 is estimated to fall short of the revised estimates for 1883-84 by £1,378,400 owing to the defective crop of 1883-84. Added to this is the reason that the remissions of salt duty and of the duty on Manchester cloth, which amount to about 3 millions sterling, require to be made up. These were circumstances, no doubt, which were beyond the control of the Government, but it can be very well doubted if a suitable opportunity will present itself next year either for lessening the burdens which press on the people so heavily and inequitably. For who knows what the effect will be of a change in the Viceroy and of complications in Egypt and China, which may at any time suddenly crop up to embarrass the situation?

Criticises the Indian budget for 1884-85.

In noticing the budget for 1884-85, the Gujaráti (97) of the 22nd March observes that it was sanguinely expected by the public that the license tax would be abolished, but nothing of the kind has been done, and it is to be hoped that this unpopular tax will be discontinued from the next year. The explanation given about the court-fees is unsatisfactory, and an early opportunity should be availed of to make the dispensation of justice as cheap as possible. A small surplus is shown, which is quite insufficient to meet the contingency of a war or a famine. The loan that is to be raised this year should not be placed upon the Indian market, as it will realize a small price. It should be raised in England, where it is likely to be taken up at a higher rate. But great care ought to be taken not to allow the national debt of the country to increase very much. Again the loan should not be spent upon the construction of new railways, as foreign capital laid out to such use does not benefit the country sufficiently; it should be spent upon canal irrigation, as works of irrigation are highly beneficial to the country. It is also to be regretted that the budget was not discussed in the Imperial Legislative Council, as a discussion on the subject would have proved extremely useful for the proper regulation of the finances. It is however to be hoped that the healthy practice of discussion in Council, discontinued of late years, will be resumed in future.

Is not satisfied with the new budget.

The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 27th March says that there is nothing new in the budget. It is very disappointing that the new Finance Minister should not have been able to repeal the license tax and to reduce the salt duty, though a large surplus was left in his hands. He appears to have retained the odious license tax and the salt duty with a view to meet the expenditure on the extension of railways in India, which European merchants are urging, and from the fear of a decrease in the opium revenue. But if he had revived the import duties he would have been able to abolish the license tax and to reduce the duty on salt. He appears to have acted in the way he has done from the fear of raising an outcry against himself from the merchants of England and of incurring their displeasure. No satisfactory increase is made in the surplus balance left every year owing to the augmentation of expenditure, though the income rises every year by lákhs of rupees. If the pensions of officers who have served in India be made payable here, or if they be made to pay the charges of exchange, and if the large amount of 15 krors which is spent in England be reduced, the public debt of India and the burden of taxation would undoubtedly be much lessened. But it is useless for India to hope for her welfare when England, while pretending to have compassion for her, only cares to squeeze out money from the poor inhabitants of the country. [The Suryă Prakásh (80) of the 22nd March says that the Indian public would have been glad if the duty on cotton goods imported into the country had been revived and the license tax abolished and the duty on salt reduced. It is to be hoped that the license tax will be done away with next year if the outturn of crops be favourable. It is necessary that the salt duty should be reduced.]

Desires a reduction in the duty levied on salt.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 24th March observes that the financial statement for 1884-85 shows that notwithstanding the reduction made in the duty levied on salt in Sir Evelyn Baring's time there has been an increase in the consumption and the revenue derived from that article. Sir Auckland Colvin has also stated that a further reduction in the duty will not fail to increase the consumption still more. Considering the hardships suffered by the poor classes from not getting this condiment at a sufficiently cheap rate, it is desirable that a further reduction in the duty should be made, and it is to be hoped that Lord Ripon's Government will not hesitate to do so.

Approves of the observations on the subject of revenue survey administration contained in the last financial statement.

In an article headed "The Financial Statement," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 24th March among other things says:—The observations on the subject of revenue survey administration deserve special mention. We are extremely glad to find that an arrangement has been decided on by the Government of India which will settle the principles of land assessment once for all and remove the bugbear of periodical resettlements. We have no doubt the publication of such an arrangement will give immense relief to the agricultural classes, who are in perpetual fear of increased assessments. An assurance that improvements shall not be taxed, that no new classification of soils shall be made, and that revision of assessments shall be made on certain fixed principles, will go a great way to infuse that stability in agriculture which is necessary for successful cultivation. How far Indian trade and India's welfare in general depend upon successful agriculture it is needless to say. Every expansion of trade, whether of wheat or any other produce, will require increased and more productive cultivation, and such cultivation can only be ensured when the cultivator is inspired by the magic of property.

Approves of the intentions of Government about the land survey and settlement operations.

With reference to the intentions of the Home and the Indian Governments with regard to the survey and settlement operations, as described in Sir Auckland Colvin's financial statement, the Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 23rd March observes that the periodical revision of the land settlement or the system on which it is conducted is said to have proved the cause of hardship to the peasant in more ways than one, tending to render insecure the fruit of his labour and enfeeble the motive for employing labour and capital for the permanent improvement of his holding. The constant complaint of the ryot and the agitation to which the same has given occasion for several years past have not been allowed to pass unheeded by the present administration. The Governments in India and in England have agreed to do everything in the power of the authorities to remove all the disadvantages of the system from which the agricultural classes may be found to be suffering. Sir Auckland's brief statement on the subject is one more proof that Lord Ripon's Government has been as anxious and earnest as any one else in India to relieve the agricultural industry of the country from any obstacle which it may be in its power to remove, and to confer on those engaged in it all reasonable concessions in order to encourage them in their industry.

Says that without a permanent settlement of the land revenue the condition of the agricultural population will not improve.

In alluding to the paragraph regarding the revenue settlements in the recent financial statement, the Native Opinion (10) of the 23rd March says:—It must be some disappointment even to the Supreme Government to learn that the principles said to be accepted in Bombay have given no relief to the people. It is true that our Survey and Settlement Act preaches a very high code of settlement morals, but the settlement practices as they have been reported upon from time to time are often the very reverse. Memories are very frail in Indian officialdom, and the Deccan Riots Commission report has already gone out of view, and so far as the Revenue Department is concerned, it might not have been written at all. For while the sáwkár has been and is being sat upon, the revenue system, as this budget system shows, has got a new lease of life. Until there is a permanent settlement on the basis of a grain assessment, commutable on the average of published prices ranging over a pretty long period, it is idle to expect any great improvement in the condition of the people. This has been admitted over and over again by Parliament and the Government in England and by a succession of Governors-General in India. Until Lord Ripon's Government can practically introduce some sort of permanent settlement the people will have no relief, and whatever the number of correspondence in the services we must tell them that we can have nothing to do with huge departments which can show no adequate work. The days of bullying are passed, and although we have still Native officials who will often forget themselves and proclaim that the sun has risen in the west as predicted by the Huzur, the schoolmaster is abroad and will do his work.

Local Self-government.

Suggestions for the successful working of the Bombay Local Boards Act.

In an article headed "The Bombay Local Boards Act," the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 27th March says:—The success of the new reform about to be inaugurated depends entirely upon the proper appreciation by the people of the many advantages to be eventually derived therefrom, and the only effectual way to bring about this appreciation on the part of the people of their rights and responsibilities under the new system is that the Collector, Assistant Collectors, Deputy Collectors, Mámlatdárs, and Mahálkaris in each district to which the operation of the constitution portion of the Act may be extended should spare themselves no pains to lead the people under their respective charges in the right direction. Both the people and their natural leaders have yet to learn everything as regards their rights and responsibilities under the new system of local self-government, and unless the staff of district officers mentioned above constantly bear in mind the intentions and the wishes of the Government of India on the subject, and in a loyal spirit carry them out, there is very little chance of the new experiment turning out a success. A people whose local affairs even have been for many a year under official management and control can hardly be expected to shake off their official trammels and to be armed with new courage which may enable them to entirely dispense with official guidance and encouragement. We have no doubt that if the district staff take the people kindly by the hand and lead them into the new paths for some time with the tact and skill of an experienced guide, most of the errors which the people without the lead of such experienced guides are sure to fall into will be successfully averted. Under these circumstances it behoves the Government of Bombay to publish a resolution containing their instructions to their district officers as to what is expected from them under the new state of things. This is however not all; we expect the Bombay Government to publish the same resolution in the several vernacular languages of this Presidency and to circulate the same very widely in each district, so that the policy of the Bombay Government may be widely known and may inspire confidence among the people. Having regard to the official utterances on the subject on various occasions during the past six months and more, we confidently expect that the Bombay Government will not fail to take adequate measures in the direction indicated above. This is so far as the Government is concerned. But there are others who have a still more important duty to discharge and whose co-operation on an occasion like the present is far more essential than the co-operation of the official classes,—we mean those who by their intelligence, social position and wealth are the acknowledged leaders of Native society. This latter class is no doubt in a small minority; but it is none the less true that if they exert themselves in the right direction on this occasion, and take the lead as they are bound to do, the object in view is very easy of accomplishment. They should constantly bear in mind the judicious observations which the Honourable Mr. Peile made in the concluding portion of his speech on the occasion of the introduction of the two Bills. As Mr. Peile justly observed, the object is not unworthy of the greatest ambition and talent, because upon its accomplishment mainly depends the future regeneration of India as regards its political and social advancement. We accordingly implore our countrymen in all parts of this Presidency to bestir themselves in time and set on foot a well-organized movement with a view to see that the forthcoming elections are properly conducted, and also that really representative and competent men are elected members of the new boards. There is now only a period of two months available for making these arrangements, as towards the close of May or the commencement of June the rural elections will take place. A central committee at the head-quarter town of every district with ancillary committees at the head-quarter town of each of the subordinate tálukas should be forthwith formed, and these committees should to the best of their abilities interest the people in the movement. Care should be taken to explain to the people in each circle of the táluka the objects of the local self-government scheme and the paramount necessity on their part of exercising their privilege of vote in such a manner as to elect the most competent representative. Everything would depend upon the character of the persons elected, and unless persons of talent and position offered themselves as candidates, it is almost certain that inferior persons would get in and thus throw discredit on the scheme. The prospect of canvassing is not the end itself but a means to an end. In short, to shrink from the candidature because of the risks of canvassing is to clearly prove that we are not as yet fit to have the local self-government scheme extended to us. We hope, therefore, in conclusion, that early steps will be taken in every district to form the requisite organization.

Makes remarks in connection with the assent given by the Viceroy to the Bombay Local Boards Act.

In noticing the assent given by His Excellency the Viceroy to the Bombay Local Boards Act, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 26th March observes that the local funds will no doubt be better administered than they have been hitherto, but there are some defects in the Act which have been retained by the desire of the Bombay Government, and they will often raise obstacles in the way of a somewhat satisfactory working of the Act. Half the members of a local board will be Government officials, the president will most probably be a Government servant, and the Government officials will keep a watch over the proceedings of the board. These things are opposed to the principles of local self-government and the intentions of the Viceroy. It was expected that His Lordship would order proper changes to be made in regard to these points before giving his assent to the Act, but nothing of the kind has happened. The Bombay District Municipal Amendment Act also contains similar defects, and it is to be hoped that the Viceroy will not forget to remove them, since cities and towns are more advanced in education and intelligence than the interiors of districts, which are to supply members to local boards.

Education.

Says that the entrance examination of the Bombay University should be put on a more satisfactory footing instead of having a separate middle-class examination.

In a paragraph headed "Middle-Class Examinations," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 24th March says:—There are few who will not welcome any earnest attempt on the part of the University to improve the character of its Matriculation Examination. That it fails to satisfy the ordinary expectations is now recognized by all. But we doubt whether the University will attract a large number of candidates to its middle-class examination if it goes the length of adopting Professor Oxenham's suggestion. Those who desire to enter the ranks of the public service are now able to secure their ends by passing the easier public service examinations. What will there be to induce them to prefer the middle-class examinations of the University if the Government does not do away with the former? We think that instead of having a separate examination it will be better to put the entrance examination of the University on a more satisfactory footing.

Municipalities.

Says that the municipal funds would have been wasted if the Town Council had agreed to spend money for turning the Kennedy Sea-face into a road.

In a paragraph headed "The Kennedy Sea-face," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 24th March says:—The Town Council would have consented to a waste of the funds of the Bombay rate-payers if they had passed the very singular proposition that the Kennedy Sea-face should be turned into a road for the purpose of being used as a carriage drive. The ground belongs to Government, and if Government consented to sell it away to the municipality, no permanent benefit could be secured by changing it into a road. The Queen's Road will be open for carriages from June next, and we do not see why the municipality should go in for a large outlay for the purpose of minimising the evils of a temporary inconvenience felt by a limited number of the public. It is said the promoters of this interested movement intend to bring the question before the Corporation and will spare no pains to get that body to carry out the proposal. The present Corporation has acquired a notoriety for a persistent disregard of the interests of the rate-payers, and it is just possible that the scheme proposed will find a majority to support it.

Disapproves of either a permanent or a temporary sea-face carriage drive on the Back Bay.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 25th and 28th March is glad that the Municipal Corporation of Bombay has refused to construct a sea-face carriage drive of a temporary nature on the Back Bay, and observes that neither a temporary nor a permanent road is required in that locality. It is said, but it cannot be believed, that His Excellency the Governor suggested to the Municipal Commissioner that since the Corporation has refused to sanction the work it should be executed and the charges met from the funds placed at the disposal of the Commissioner for miscellaneous expenditure. If such instructions have been given to Mr. Ollivant he would not be justified in acting according to them. There are several urgent demands on the municipal funds, such as cleaning the native quarters of the town and making them free from the visits of epidemics, that ought to be attended to before thinking of improving the appearance of the town or increasing the comfort of a section of the people. [The Gujaráti (77) and the Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Requests Government to make over to the Municipal Corporation of Bombay the vacant piece of ground on the Kennedy Sea-face.

The Rást Goftár (111) of the 23rd March observes that it will not be discreet to construct a temporary carriage drive along the shore on the Back Bay, and the Corporation has properly refused to spend any funds on the proposed road. However, a permanent carriage road in that locality will be very comfortable, but it would not do for the Corporation to lay down such a road on Government land. Most of the ground occupied by the original esplanade is now covered with buildings and very little space is left for public recreation. Under these circumstances Government ought to make over the vacant piece of ground to the city, and if it does so, the Corporation should not object to construct a carriage drive along the sea beach, which will be very comfortable to the public.

Says that the municipality of Bombay should daily clean the quarters in which poor people reside.

In alluding to the recent outbreak of cholera among some poor Khárwás at Cowasji Patel tank in Bombay, the Yajdán Parast (122) of the 23rd March observes that the residences of poor people are necessarily dirty, but were the municipality to clean daily the quarters of the town in which they reside, cholera and other epidemics would not easily appear among them. The Parast hopes that the mischief committed by cholera at the Cowasji Patel tank will teach the municipality to be more particular than it has hitherto been about cleaning daily the quarters of the town inhabited by poor people.

Native States.

Says that the young Rája of Kolhápur should not be sent so soon to England for his education.

In alluding to the intention of the Regent of Kolhápur to send the young Rája at once to England for his education, the Gujaráti (97) of the 23rd March observes that it will not be right to send the young prince of such tender age to Europe, for his residence and education at this early age will do no good to him. The Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date observes that by his residence and education in England at this early age he would forget that he was a native of India and would contract English habits and notions. It will be better to educate him properly in this country, and when he is sufficiently grown up and of mature intellect he should be sent to Europe to finish his education. The Gujaráti and the Parast therefore request the Regent to give up his intention of sending the young Rája to England so soon.

Recommends certain arrangements for the administration of the Rájpipla State.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 24th March, after alluding to the mismanagement of the Rájpipla State by Gambhirsingji, the present Chief, and to the Commission appointed to enquire into the maladministration, observes that there is no hope that the Chief will ever improve the administration, and in the interests of the State itself he should be deposed and deported and his eldest son Chhatrasing should be placed on the gádi. If however the paramount Government wishes not to depose Gambhirsingji, he should be deprived of all authority for a certain number of years so that he will not be able to interfere in the administration of the State. All State officials below the Diván should be dismissed, and the latter should get educated and intelligent subordinates to assist him in the administration, which should be carried on under the supervision of a special Assistant Political Agent.

Approves of the desire of the Junágad Darbár to construct a railway in that State.

The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 23rd March is extremely glad that the Junágad Darbár has expressed its desire to construct in that State a railway line on the narrow guage of a length of 70 miles. This line, observes the Mitră, will increase trade in general and encourage the despatch of cotton in particular to Bombay, and it is therefore to be hoped that the Bombay Government will sanction the proposal. [The Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date expresses similar sentiments and praises the Diván for inducing the Chief to form a resolution upon the subject and communicate it to the Bombay Government.]

Berár Affairs.

Some remarks regarding the non-success of students from the Akola High School at the last Matriculation Examination of the Bombay University.

In criticising the report on education for 1882-83, the Pramod Sindhu (51) of the 24th March says:—The last year has again been a bad year for the Akola High School, as none passed from it, while six candidates passed from the Amráoti High School. So practically the results of one are about 350 per cent. better than those of the other, which again are attained at a much smaller cost. What the reasons are that make this difference we are not informed. The distinction seems to arise from the difference in the agency. The more costly and less successful is presided over by a European, while the more successful and less costly institution has a Native for its head. If our premises be correct the conclusion is clear. We have nothing to say against or in favour of any individual. Still on public and economical grounds, we must advocate what is both cheaper and more efficient in preference to what is neither. The Head Master of the High School at Akola seems to defend himself against his failures by telling us that all the examinations, Matriculation included, are mere shams, attainable by sheer cramming, and that the success at Matriculation Examination is no sign of efficiency. He may be right. But until we find better means than an examination of testing efficiency, we must accept what has been considered the best existing mode of apprising comparative merit. He will perhaps admit that in the absence of any such examinations we shall have to take things on trust, which will certainly be worse than a sham. Until, therefore, he shows us a better mode, we shall have to abide by what the world has adopted as the only possible and most effective means. Will he allow us to ask him whether the candidates he has been able to pass previously have not been the veritable production of cramming, which he condemns so indignantly, and if not, whether he is ready to prove it and by what means? We intended to touch upon the expenditure question also on this occasion, but for want of space we defer it to a future issue.

Strange conduct of a certain honorary magistrate who tried a case of theft committed at his own house and himself gave evidence as a witness during the proceedings.

The same newspaper states that a theft was committed at the house of a certain honorary magistrate in the Berárs. The police made enquiries in the usual manner, and in due course the case came before the honorary magistrate in whose house the theft occurred for further investigation. The honorary magistrate referred to above not only tried the case but gave evidence on oath as a witness in the proceedings. Readers can easily imagine the nature of the justice dealt out when the theft occurred in the house of the magistrate who subsequently presided at the trial of the case and himself gave evidence in the character of a witness. The Pramod Sindhu says that if the above statement be true, the proper authorities should enquire into the matter and direct the honorary magistrate to stay quietly at home. It is a great mistake to invest persons like the honorary magistrate referred to above with magisterial powers. The Pramod Sindhu is not against the appointment of honorary magistrates as such, but considers that fit persons alone should be selected for such duty. The nomination of rich persons who are not qualified to perform magisterial duties from want of proper education ought not to be tolerated.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
1*st April* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Expression of opinion that bad liquor is manufactured at Surat. 11
Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
    Advice for the adoption of strict measures against the Russian designs on India 7
    Expression of opinion that England should fulfil her noble mission in India, heedless of the scare raised by those who cry down the— 6
    Expression of opinion that Russia cannot conquer India ... 7
Duty on gold and silver ware imported into England:
    Censure on the English Government for refusing to abolish the—... 6
    Remarks on the injustice of not abolishing the—from foreign countries 4
Impoverished condition of the Indian cultivator: Expression of opinion that marriage expenses are the cause of the— 9
Indian Council: Suggestion for a reconstruction of the— 4
Indian affairs: Expression of opinion that the supervision of—should be done by Parliament 3
Madras Government:
    Condemnation of the conduct of the—in the matter of the Salem riots, and a prayer to the Supreme Government for immediately interfering and preventing miscarriage of justice 8
    Remarks on Mr. Grant Duff and his policy... 8
Public Service: Praises of the official career of the Honourable Mr. E. W. Ravenscroft 9
Vernacular Press:
    Comments in connection with the remark made in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency about the hostility of certain newspapers to Government 10
    Expression of opinion that certain newspapers marked out as unfriendly in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency do not deserve the epithet 11
    Objection to the remark in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency that the tone of the Poona Vaibhav was unfriendly to Government 11
Viceroyalty of India: Remarks on Lord Ripon's career as Viceroy ... 7

Part II.—The New Budget—

Budget statement for 1884-85:
    Criticism on the— 12
    Expression of dissatisfaction with the— 12
    Remarks on the— 12
Duty levied on salt: Expression of a desire for reducing the— ... 13
Land survey and settlement operations:
    Approval of the observations on the subject of—
        The Bombay Chronicle 13
        The Indu Prakásh 13
    Expression of opinion that without a permanent settlement of the land revenue the condition of the agricultural population will not improve 14

Part III.—Local Self-government—

Bombay Local Boards Act:
    Remarks in connection with the assent given by the Viceroy to the— 15
    Suggestions for the successful working of the— 14

Part IV.—Education—

Middle-class Examination: Expression of opinion that the entrance examination of the Bombay University should be put on a more satisfactory footing instead of having a separate— 15

Page.

PART V.—Municipalities—

Bombay:

Disapproval of either a permanent or a temporary sea-face carriage drive on the Back Bay 16

Expression of opinion that the municipal funds would have been wasted if the — Town Council had agreed to spend money for turning the Kennedy Sea-face into a road 16

Expression of opinion that the Municipality of — should daily clean the quarters in which poor people reside 16

Request to Government to make over to the Municipal Corporation of — the vacant piece of ground on the Kennedy Sea-face ... 16

PART VI.—Native States—

Junágad: Approval of the desire of the — Darbár to construct a railway in that State 17

Kolhápur: Expression of opinion that the young Rája of — should not be sent so soon to England for his education 17

Rájpipla: Recommendation of certain arrangements for the administration of the — State... 17

PART VII.—Berár Affairs—

Judicial matters: Strange conduct of a certain honorary magistrate who tried a case of theft committed at his own house and himself gave evidence as a witness during the proceedings 18

Non-success of students from the Akola High School at the last Matriculation Examination of the Bombay University: Some remarks regarding the— 17

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 5th April 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
13	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
17	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
20	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*22	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
23	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
24	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
25	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
26	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
27	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
28	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
29	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
30	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
31	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
32	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*33	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*34	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
35	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
36	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
37	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
38	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
39	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
40	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
41	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
42	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
44	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*47	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
48	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
49	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*50	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
51	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
54	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
55	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
56	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
63	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
64	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 46

C. R.
15966
INDIA OFFICE
9 APR 1884

Politics and the Public Administration.

Requests the Viceroy to consider the question of establishing a permanent system of land revenue for the whole of India.

In an article headed "Land and its Assessment in India," the Native Opinion (10) of the 30th March says:—If any amount of civilization had been able to extirpate the feeling of selfishness from the human mind, what Mr. Fawcett and the economists of his school assert in favour of temporary settlements of land revenue might have been admissible. But as a principle of political economy which is to be put into force at the earliest opportunity the theory is fraught with the most baneful absurdities. For circumstanced as the whole world is at present will the people of any country, however civilized, toil hard day and night to effect improvements in their lands if the increment that would thus accrue to them is determined to be taken out of their hands? Will it avail to tell them that inasmuch as general good is more worthy to be attended to than individual good, they must prepare themselves to sacrifice a portion of their labour for the good of their fellows? If the masses, on whose labour depends the well-being of every community, had been able to realize this ideal, where then would have been the necessity forso much law-making and the punishments which laws sanction? If this appeal to duty and benevolence will not suffice in the case of even the most advanced countries of the world, how can it be supposed that India is a proper field for the practice of this theory? This country, with perhaps the best facilities in the world for agricultural products, with a people that deserve to be ranked high in point of intelligence, and with a territory sufficiently extensive to become the granary of a great portion of the world, has for a long time past been dragging its weary existence in the most wretched forms of penury. Accumulations of wealth there certainly have been here and there. But the country as a whole has never fared well since its conquest by the Mahomedans. And what is the cause? Rack-renting and a rigid system of revenue assessments fully account for the miserable condition we have fallen into. With due recognition of the benevolent intentions and unceasing attempts of the British Government to seek the people's good, it cannot but be said that even under its rule the same state of things has continued even to the present day. A whole army of officers has been employed to measure and classify land and to fix the rates of assessment upon the most equitable grounds. But what avails all this? The chief point where equity is needed is missed. With regard to the following out of one principle of rates for all cultivators, equity is as well administered as it possibly can be. But where has been the guarantee to assure the cultivator that the fruit of his honest labour will not be snatched out of his hands? One cycle of thirty years passed, and the labourer finds to his utter disappointment that all the improvements which he made on his farm after hard and anxious toil was labour quite thrown away. The whole peasantry, after the revised assessments were enforced about the year 1870, was almost reduced to the condition of beggars and the agricultural districts were converted into a number of abandoned farms and ruined homesteads. A short time before this the country, as will appear from the letter of the Government of Bombay of the 26th July 1864, had been in a flourishing condition and the peasantry prosperous. The other and the most pressing evil to which land is subject under the temporary system is the over-estimate of its annual value. These and several other evils, such as exorbitant expenditure, vexatious interference of the revenue officers and other evils, the country is freed from by the establishment of a permanent system. What therefore Mr. Fawcett and other economists hold as the best system of land revenue we hold as the most intolerable in India at least, and beseech our Viceroy to consider the question for the whole of India.

Advises an increase in the pay and pension of the Native soldier.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 30th March observes that the difficulty experienced in recruiting the Native regiments in India which has attracted the attention of Government is not owing to the paucity of the number of the people from whose ranks the Native soldiers are generally taken, nor to the unwillingness of the men of the present generation to follow the profession of their forefathers, but to the niggardly scale of pay and pension fixed by Government for remunerating and rewarding the Native soldiers while on active service or when disabled through age or accidents in the field or otherwise. The paltry pay and still more paltry pension doled out to the men are considered by competent military authorities and other thoughtful men as being sufficient to render the army the least attractive to any able-bodied Native villager who could earn much more, and feed and clothe himself and family far better, by engaging in any other pursuit than that of a soldier. The military authorities have not been at all slow to recognise the absurdity of the system which is endured by those responsible for the efficiency of the service only because of the constant excuses pleaded against any increase in the expenditure of the State. The excuse is evidently untenable, because the state of affairs which it helps to prolong is fraught with serious consequences to the country. If economy is desired earnestly by the authorities in the matter of public expenditure, even on the head of military charges, let the practice for it be sought in other suitable ways than that of starving the Native soldier. The urgency for modifying the system of the pay and pension of the Native soldier is unquestionable, and something at least ought to be done in conformity with the same.

Says that the Honourable Mr. Rivers Thompson ought not to be made a K.C.S.I.

In noticing the telegram that the Honourable Mr. Rivers Thompson, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, will be made a K.C.S.I. on the next birthday of the Queen-Empress for the valuable services rendered by him to the people of Bengal, the Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 1st April observes that this news is quite unexpected. The conduct of Mr. Thompson in connection with the recent political commotion in Bengal was of such a nature that it was expected that either the Secretary of State for India or some spirited member of Parliament would move for his recall. Mr. Thompson gave indirect encouragement to the opposition raised in Bengal against the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. He opposed the Bill in the Legislative Council and hurt the feelings of Natives by giving them offence at a public meeting held in connection with the Bill. It was said that he had communication with the late boisterous editor of the Englishman, and that he had given high employment in the Bengal Secretariat to the individual who made severe attacks on the Supreme Government in the London Times. His other acts lent indirect encouragement to the continuance of the boisterous opposition raised by the Europeans of Bengal. In spite of such acts as these of Mr. Thompson he is to be made a K.C.S.I. The Natives will thereby be much displeased. He ought to consider himself fortunate that Lord Ripon did not recommend his recall to the Home authorities.

Makes a few adverse criticisms on the exposition of the policy of the Bombay Government in regard to land revenue assessments.

In noticing the resolution of the Government of Bombay dated the 26th March giving an exposition of the policy regarding land revenue assessments, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 2nd April observes that Government state that a resurvey and assessment can be made at any time, but assure that the assessment will not be raised until the period of settlement expires. But this assurance will not avail much to allay the anxiety felt by the agriculturists on this head. Government being the proprietor of all lands which are treated under one set of rules, there is no use of a farmer giving up one holding and taking up another; nor are lands easily obtainable, and hence a farmer must continue to till the same land during his lifetime. The prospect therefore that the assessment of a holding will be increased sooner or later must continue to be felt as a cause for great anxiety. The prospect of a re-assessment on the expiry of the period of the existing settlement will dissuade the agriculturists from improving their lands. Government however assure that improvements made by agriculturists with their capital will not be taxed: that improvements caused by reason of an expenditure of the State capital or other causes will only be taxed. Wells constructed by a farmer at his own cost will be classed among improvements made by a ryot with his own capital, while a tank built with the State money will be considered as improvement made with the public funds. Canal water will be sold to the agriculturists at a special rate. More surprising than this is the statement that a railway in the neighbourhood of any land will be held as a reason for increasing the land assessment. This will add to the dislike felt among the discreet and experienced portion of the public for new railways. The people will be taxed for paying the interest of the capital spent on a railway line, and the agriculturist will have to bear additional burdens on account of the same line. The explanation given about the resurvey of lands is very strange. It is not right to maintain a large survey department, and then in order to give it work a resurvey should be ordered and the agriculturist should be put to new annoyances and to the fear of the assessment being increased. Government say that the former surveys were defective; how did this happen? And what guarantee is there that the resurveys will not be considered by future authorities to be equally defective? Sir James Fergusson's Government gives an assurance that resurveys will not be disturbed as far as possible, but what guarantee does His Excellency give that future Governments will not act otherwise? No such guarantee can be given and therefore the assurance is worthless. Since Government has resolved to resurvey lands, there is no chance of the resolution being given up. Under these circumstances the people should request Government to make the resurvey with great care, to assess the lands at a low rate, and to lessen the heavy assessment already imposed on some lands.

Hopes that the Mhowra Bill will not be again brought forward.

In noticing the report that the Bombay Government will shortly bring forward a new Mhowra Bill, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 1st April observes that the aim of this Bill, as that of the old Bill, appears to be to exercise a check on illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers. But it is not right to place a legal control on the use of these flowers because a few individuals surreptitiously distil liquor from them. It has been proved beyond doubt that the flowers are used as food by many wild tribes, and any control on their collection must cause great hardship to these people. It is said that the report made by the committee appointed to enquire into the extent of illicit distillation carried on in the Thána and Kolába districts states that in the interior of these districts, namely in the Váda, Murbád, Karjat and other tálukas, mhowra flowers are easily obtainable, and there being no control about plucking them, illicit distillation is carried on extensively, and that these flowers are not generally used as food except by the Bhils and other wild tribes. It is no wonder that this statement should tally with the views entertained on the subject by the Bombay Government, because the members composing the committee were Government officials. The illicit distillation of liquor from mhowra flowers complained of may be attributed to the severity of the A'bkári Act. The poor people, being unable to obtain toddy on account of its high price caused by the heavy tax imposed upon it, resort to a surreptitious distillation of liquor, which can be easily put down by relaxing the severity of the A'bkári Act. Unless proof is given to contradict the evidence previously published that mhowra flowers are used as food, the committee's opinion that they are not so used ought not to be accepted. The committee state that many wild tribes use mhowra berries as a condiment in their simple food, consisting of wild corn, fruits and roots, which very much requires some seasoning to make it palatable; and when they cannot afford to obtain salt or other condiments in sufficient quantity, it would be a great hardship to them to check them in their use of mhowra berries. It is therefore to be hoped that the Government of Bombay will not bring forward the Mhowra Bill anew. [A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 3rd April expresses similar sentiments, and hopes that a new committee composed of private individuals and Government officials will be appointed to prosecute a fresh enquiry into the alleged surreptitious distillation from mhowra flowers and their other uses. The Gujaráti (97) of the 30th March, in noticing the Bill, requests Government to publish the entire report of the committee, and to state what disadvantages have followed from the existing state of things.

Approves of the resolution of the Bombay Government in the case of Dr. Banks, the Civil Surgeon of Ahmedabad.

In noticing the Government resolution in connection with the case of Dr. Banks, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 4th April observes that the doctor's conduct was illegal and tyrannical. He exercised the power of trying the case in which he was himself concerned—a power not possessed by any magistrate or judge, nor by so high an authority as the Governor of a presidency. The Rabáris are religious and abhor the destruction of animal life. Dr. Banks went among them and got his Wághari servant to kill a buck. This was an improper act on his part, and when he heard from his servant that their feelings were outraged by the killing of the buck, he should have either gone and pacified them, or should have left the place immediately and laid a complaint about the robbery of his rifle from his servant before a magistrate. If he had done this he would certainly have recovered his rifle. On the other hand, he acted in a manner which has met with severe condemnation from Government. He has been removed from the post of Civil Surgeon at Ahmedabad and sent back to the Military Department. In doing this Sir James Fergusson has upheld justice for which he deserves the thanks of the public. The Bombay Gazette thinks that severe censure would have sufficed in this case; but justly speaking Dr. Banks has received far less punishment than he deserved according to law. Had the residents of Juda prosecuted him before a magistrate for the diverse illegal acts committed by him, he would not have escaped heavy punishment. The Bombay Government deserves hearty thanks for dispensing justice in this case as well as that of Mr. Hewett of the Ratnágiri Revenue Survey. [The Bombay Samáchár of the 5th April repeats some of the above statements in trying to contradict the assertion made by the Times of India that the punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks was heavy. The Akhbáre Sodágar (82) of the 4th April expresses in substance the sentiments recorded by the Bombay Samáchár of the same date.]

Requests Government to reduce the punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks, the Civil Surgeon of Ahmedabad.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 4th April observes that Government have properly taken notice of the conduct of Dr. Banks, the Civil Surgeon of Ahmedabad. But His Excellency the Governor has, it must be admitted, inflicted a very severe punishment on the doctor. He was no doubt guilty of a serious offence, but His Excellency should have taken into consideration that this was his first fault. Dr. Banks is of a kind disposition. He rendered good service to the poor people of Ahmedabad at the last outbreak of cholera in that city. It is to be regretted that a good gentleman like him should have lost his temper and placed himself in an awkward position. The ends of justice would have been met if he had been severely censured and transferred to another station. Mr. Reid, the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad, deserves to be severely punished, because he not only took no notice of the occurrence, but tried to defend the doctor when Government called upon him for a report on the subject. He deserves to be degraded for this serious fault. It is to be hoped that Sir James will reconsider his decision and mitigate the punishment passed upon the doctor. Young civilians are generally in the habit of hurting the religious feelings of the people of the Ahmedabad District by killing animals held sacred by them. Government ought to instruct the Collector of the district to inform European shikáris what animals are held sacred and which ought not to be killed.

Requests His Excellency the Governor of Bombay to take due notice of the conduct of the European officer on His Excellency's staff who made an assault on the police at the level crossing at Chaupáti, and to reduce the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks.

The same newspaper of the 5th April observes that the sentence of dismissal from civil employ passed upon Dr. Banks for his indiscreet act is a very severe punishment. In noticing this case, the Times of India has properly referred to the omission by Government to take due notice of the cowardly conduct of the European officer on the staff of His Excellency the Governor in making an assault on the policemen at the level crossing of the B. B. & C. I. Railway at Chaupáti, and has rightly asked the question why there should be two measures and weights for dealing justice in these cases. After censuring the Times of India for neglecting to broach the question of the assault on the policemen at the level crossing for one week, the Jáme remarks that the European officer on the Governor's staff was guilty of a more serious crime than Dr. Banks has committed, inasmuch as he not only made an unjustifiable assault but endangered the safety of the public for a time. The railway police are also censured for not detecting and dragging into light the European officer that has created all this commotion, and Sir James Fergusson is requested to take due notice of this case and to mitigate the punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks after His Excellency's return from Aden. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (82) of the same date also requests His Excellency to take due notice of the affray at the level crossing at Chaupáti.]

Says that the European who assaulted the gatemen at the railway level crossing at Chaupáti seemed to be a Captain in the staff corps.

In alluding to the fracas that took place on Sunday last between a European and three policemen of the B. B. & C. I. Railway at the railway level crossing on the Queen's Road at Chaupáti, the Kaiser-i-Hind (104) of the 30th March observes that the European forcibly opened the crossing gate, which was closed as a train was expected, severely attacked the policemen who opposed his opening the gate, and made his escape in the large crowd that was collected there. The railway police are trying to detect him, but though it is a week since the occurrence of the event he has not been traced. The offender seems to be a Captain on the staff corps, and it is feared that if he be influential the ugly affair would be hushed up.

Severely censures the European who attacked the gatemen at the railway level crossing on the Chaupáti for concealing himself.

In alluding to the same subject, the Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 31st March observes that though the European promised to give his card to the gatemen, he drove away rapidly from the scene without acting up to his promise. He has not laid a complaint against the gatemen in proper quarters, and has concealed himself like a coward; and hence it seems that the whole blame lies with him. The other Europeans who witnessed his cowardly conduct ought to have published his name. The culprit is said to be a high Government officer. [The Indian Spectator (1) of the 30th March trusts that the railway police will find out the culprit. He has been sufficiently punished for his violence, but notice must be taken of the rashness, which might have proved fatal but for the foresight of the signalman.]

Remarks on the career of the Hon'ble Mr. Ravenscroft.

In a paragraph headed "The Retired Councillor," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 31st March says:—Mr. Ravenscroft's career in the Bombay Civil Service was not a very brilliant one, and except during the five years that he sat in the Governor's Council he did not accomplish anything that would entitle him to be ranked among the ornaments of that service. But he had the capacities of an able man, and had he been more social and pushing than he cared to be, he would have left his mark on the administration. It was only during the few earlier years of his official career that he held appointments in the mofussil, but having mostly been at the Secretariat, all the knowledge he had of the country was derived from what he learnt through the official reports. The people and their condition he knew but little from his own experience and acquaintance with them. His promotion to the Council was not regarded with satisfaction by the public; it was feared that he would oppose the claims of Natives at every step, and go in for the policy of Imperialism, then rampant. But Mr. Ravenscroft's career in the Council has on the whole been satisfactory, though quiet. His minute on the Bangalore question, of which the Bombay Gazette has given a summary in its leader of last Friday, shows that Mr. Ravenscroft was not the thorough-going champion of spoliation and anti-Native doctrines that at one time his exclusive disposition led people into believing him to be. It required more than ordinary courage to protest against the united voice of a number of imperiously disposed administrators and defend the just rights of the Mahárája and the people of Mysore. On the Maiya question Mr. Ravenscroft displayed the same independence of character, and to his trenchant minute mainly we owe the justice which the Maiyás were able to obtain at the hands of the Government of India. These are the only two instances in which

Mr. Ravenscroft made anything like a name. But they show that with a little more of the pushing element in him he would have made himself far more popular than he cared to be. It is to be regretted that his independent disposition and a firm determination to stand by his own principles, which he possessed in an unusual degree, were not united with a graceful and social temper. In India few administrators can afford to be official authorities, working at their desks and minding their business without caring much to know the people of the country. Mr. Ravenscroft would have shone much better as a judge than as a revenue officer or Councillor.

Remarks on the career of the Hon'ble Mr. Ravenscroft.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 30th March says:—Last Friday the Honourable E. W. Ravenscroft left our shores for good after an Indian career of thirty-three years. The late honourable member of Council evinced, especially while in Council, a singular independence of character which deserves general praise. It showed itself most clearly on two occasions, first in 1880 when a tempting opportunity offered itself of adding to the frontiers of our Presidency at the cost of the Mysore State, and again last year when the matter of the slaughter of the Maiyás by the Junágad police was before the Council. Mr. Ravenscroft's views on either occasions, just as they were, though unsupported by the rest of his colleagues, ultimately prevailed. This independence the late member of Council sought to strengthen and guard by an overdone inaccessibility with which he fenced himself. For the rest and during his early career he showed himself a vigorous and able officer, successfully carrying out the orders of his superiors. For a civilian Mr. Ravenscroft entertained liberal views in many matters, though his strenuous advocacy of the Cotton Frauds Act showed the true civilian in him of a mábáp style of government. We are not aware that he ever took up a particularly favourable attitude to the natives of the soil or cared much for their interests as dissociated from those of the general administration. The Natives, while acknowledging his services from time to time, regarded him as one from whom much was not to be expected either for good or evil.

Censures the Bombay Government for failing to praise sufficiently the valuable services of the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft.

The Yajdán Parast (123) of the 30th March observes that it is surprising that while the Bombay Government issued long resolutions singing the high praises of the Honourable Mr. Ashburner, Colonel Baker, the Under Secretary in the Public Works Department, and Colonel Barton, the Political Agent of Káthiáwár, they should have issued a short resolution containing a single sentence only in his praise on the retirement from service of the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft. Mr. Ravenscroft was perhaps disliked in official circles because he differed several times from the other members of Council and recorded his opinions with great boldness and independence, but that ought not to have led to his services being noticed with less praise than they deserved. He was straightforward, truthful, impartial and a well-wisher of the Natives. He rendered much more valuable services to Natives than those performed by the Honourable Mr. Ashburner. It is to be regretted that injustice should have been done by Government to Mr. Ravenscroft.

Says that the public expects much from Mr. Melvill on his elevation to a seat in the Executive Council.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 30th March says:—Of a far different type of character is the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft's successor in the Executive Council. The Honourable Mr. Melvill has as a Judge of our High Court during more than 12 years past been earning the golden opinions of all who have had anything to do with him, his colleagues on the Bench and the members of the English and Native Bar, as well as suitors. Mr. Justice Melvill's high abilities, his great learning, his judicial frame of mind, the breadth and liberality of his views as well as his suavity of temper and zeal for work are all well-known. His nomination to the Council secures for it the wholesome leaven of a judicially trained mind which it has wanted for the last five years. We have no doubt that he will be able to temper somewhat that jealousy of all outside scrutiny which prompts the Government to shut out the acts of its executive officers from the cognizance of our Civil Courts. In this and many other ways we expect much from Mr. Justice Melvill in the new sphere of duties in which he will soon find himself.

Says that copies of Bills, departmental reports and the Administration Report should be furnished to vernacular newspapers.

The Bakul (15) of the 30th March says that although the Government of India have ruled that vernacular newspapers should be supplied with copies of Bills, reports of different departments and the Administration Report, yet it is strange that effect is not given to this resolution. With the exception of some ten or fifteen vernacular newspapers the remainder do not get any Government publications whatever. Copies of the Annual Administration Report should be furnished to all newspapers, because then they will be able to make suggestions with respect to the improvement of the administration in their respective districts. The Bakul trusts that the Bombay Government will not any longer delay to give effect to the orders of the Supreme Government in the matter of furnishing papers of public interest to vernacular newspapers.

Remarks in connection with the statement contained in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency about the unfriendliness of certain newspapers to Government.

The same newspaper, in alluding to the remark in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency that certain vernacular newspapers were unfriendly to Government, observes that the accusation is founded on a mistaken view of the meaning to be attached to the word "Government." In the opinion of the Bakul the word "Government" is applicable onlyto the laws passed for the welfare of the inhabitants of this country. In this acceptation of the term the Viceroy, the Governors and the district Collectors are not the Government. They are merely officers appointed to administer the existing laws. Now-a-days if a newspaper writes against any official it is at once charged as being against Government. The Bakul considers that Government officials are not the Government but merely its servants. If they do not perform their duties properly they are disloyal as well as those newspapers which do not expose their improper actions. But strange to say such exposure is denounced as disloyal. The only reason why certain newspapers are condemned as disloyal is that they are rather strong in their denunciation of the officials who act in opposition to the laws. Such conduct ought really to be praised and characterised as loyal. Perhaps the newspapers are pronounced to be disloyal in order to prevent them from finding fault with the wrong-doings of officials. The condemned newspapers do not always publish writings against Government officials. They have frequently praised and expressed their gratitude for the liberal policy of Lord Ripon.

Disapproves of the permission given by the Bombay Government to European polo-players to play twice a week on the Esplanade.

With reference to the Government order permitting European polo-players to play on the Esplanade on two evenings every week, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 3rd April observes that this order has placed the Native cricketers in a position against which they once complained and Government granted them redress. The polo-players will occupy the maidán twice a week and military parades will also be held on other occasions, and thus the Native cricketers will be virtually excluded from the Esplanade for many days. Moreover, polo-playing makes the ground uneven and consequently unfit for playing cricket matches. Sir James Fergusson appears to have succumbed to the influence of a handful of European polo-players, as Lord Ripon did in the case of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (82) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that the Mahomedan cemeteries in the midst of densely inhabited quarters of Bombay should be closed.

The Prabhákar (49) of the 2nd April says:—A correspondent of the Indu Prakásh has done the public of Bombay a service in bringing prominently to notice the nuisance connected with the Musalman grave-yards at Sonápur and Mángalvádi, which although full are yet kept open. The highest medical authorities in Europe and America have condemned the system of burial as a means of disposing of the dead. As sentiment and religious prejudices, however, must prevail, and cremation cannot become general for some years to come, the dead in those lands are buried at considerable distances from habitations. So sensitive are the enlightened people of the West to the evil arising from grave-yards that special commissioners are, we hear, appointed there to look after cemeteries and no dwelling houses or wells are permitted near. The dangers briefly speaking are, the contamination of pure air and water with foul and poisonous emanations, and when bodies affected with cholera, fever and other infectious diseases are buried, the danger to be feared is from dissemination of disease germs giving rise at times to epidemics. The burial, therefore, year after year of hundreds of bodies variously affected in the midst of a crowded locality, and to the windward of the city, is to say the least a crime towards the living. The Health Officers of this city have from the year 1854 at intervals advocated the closing of the cemeteries in question, and it is now for Government in the interest of the people to take measures for giving effect to their advice. The Hindu and Christian grave-yards in that quarter have long since been closed, and it is high time that new grave-yards for the Khoja, Bohora, and other Musalman dead should be opened in a quarter of the island where the wind does not blow from and where the population is comparatively sparse.

Complains of the adulteration of noxious drugs with toddy in the Chorási Táluka of the Surat Collectorate.

The Surat Akhbár (79) of the 31st March says that toddy in the Chorási Táluka is adulterated in such a way with noxious drugs that not only do Government suffer in their income from this source, but the toddy loses its original good quality, becomes like bháng and gánja, and injures the health of those who drink it. The earthen pots which are attached to date trees and all other vessels of toddy have lac (sealing wax) applied to them, with a piece of the same material sticking at the bottom. The lac is smoked with opium. Ashes, sugar, &c., are mixed with the toddy to increase its intoxicating effects, but these bring on various diseases. Government are losers inasmuch as this toddy can be mixed with a good deal of water like liquor after its introduction into the city. Owing to the application of lac the consumers imagine that it is very intoxicating from its being bitter. If water is mixed with pure toddy, it loses its taste and intoxicating quality and becomes unsaleable. If therefore the practice of applying lac to toddy vessels be prohibited by Government toddy will be sold unadulterated and Government will be saved loss of income. Such an adulteration is not understood anywhere else save in the Chorási Táluka.

Says that police officers should remember that good faith cannot avail them when sued for damages caused by vexatious treatment.

In a paragraph headed "The Rule of the Road," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 31st March says:—Why do not our police officers consult the law officers of the Government when they think that the interests of the public require the exercise of certain authority over them? The attempt which is now being made to dictate to people driving in carriages to take a particular side of the road seems to us to be clearly ultra vires and the charge which Mr. Superintendent Brewin brought the other day against Mr. Anandráo Vináyak for not driving his carriage as dictated by the police does not reflect credit on the discretion and judgment of that officer. The Magistrate rightly dismissed the charge. He held that the Superintendent had acted without the sanction of law, though in good faith. Police officers would do well to remember, however, that as laid down in a very recent case by the highest court of judicature in the empire—the Privy Council—good faith cannot avail them when sued for damages caused by such treatment as Mr. Anandráo received last week. There are many nuisances in Bombay, and let us hope police tyranny and vexation will not be added to the number.

Censures Mr. Superintendent Brewin for exhibiting improper eagerness in the discharge of his public duties.

With reference to the charge brought by Mr. Superintendent Brewin against Mr. Anandráo Vináyak for driving on the wrong side of the road, and dismissed by Mr. Ryan as no offence, the Rást Goftár (111) of the 30th March observes that the accused was apprehended by Mr. Brewin, not for bringing about a collision with another carriage, nor for running over anybody, but for simply driving on the right side of the road, which is certainly no offence as decided by the Magistrate. Mr. Brewin was further guilty of having made a false accusation in his evidence before the Magistrate that Mr. Anandráo was drunk when he was apprehended, whereas he (the accused) does not use spirituous drinks at all. Sir Frank Souter will do well to advise the Superintendent to keep his zeal in discharging his duties within reasonable bounds. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (104) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Complains of the annoyance and injury caused to the Native population near the Dyeing Mill at Lower Máhim, Bombay, from Europeans employed in that mill.

The Shetakaryáncha Kaivári (11) of the 1st April in its local news states that the people living in the neighbourhood of the Dyeing Mill near the Parabhádevi Temple at Lower Máhim have had to suffer much for the last three years from the annoyance and vexation caused by the Europeans who are employed in that mill. During the last Shimga holidays on the 11th March these Europeans outdid even Sir Frank Souter. With the assistance of twenty-five Pardeshis they forcibly took and destroyed the tom-toms of the people, who were enjoying themselves on the occasion of the Holi festival. They did not however stop here, but thrashed several persons who were beating the tom-toms with sticks, and in one instance a certain man's head was broken on the verandah of his own house. The injured man complained to the European constable in charge of that division, but the latter told him to go to the Magistrate and take out summons.

Regrets that Government is not in a position to reduce the rate of newspaper postage.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 30th March regrets that Government is not in a position to reduce the rate of postage on newspapers as urged by the press in the public interest. The state of the revenue does not permit Government to make any concession. The authorities do not appear, however, wanting in the disposition to gratify the desire of the public if they see a way to do it. If the agitation on the subject is properly kept up the much-desired boon may be secured on the first favourable opportunity. [The Rást Goftár (111) and the Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Complains that the mill-hands in Bombay are overworked.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (111) of the 30th March states that the mill-hands in Bombay are employed on their work from sunrise to sunset, and this is cruelty to them. At noon they are released from work for about twenty minutes, in which time they take their meals. They are nominally allowed to stay away from work on two Sundays in a month, but on those days even they are employed from early morning till 11 A. M. in cleaning the machinery.

Expression of deep regret for the death of the Duke of Albany.

All the newspapers of this week record with regret the lamented death of the Duke of Albany and express deep sympathy with the Queen-Empress and the Royal family. The public are advised to approach the Royal presence with addresses of condolence.

Censures His Excellency the Governor of Bombay for not acting in accordance with the Government resolution that public mourning should be observed for three weeks on account of the lamented death of the Duke of Albany.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 4th April alludes to the resolution of the Government of Bombay directing that public mourning should be observed by all officers of Government and the public for three weeks on account of the lamentable death of the Duke of Albany, and asks, did the Government themselves act in accordance with this resolution? The Jáme replies to this question by observing that on the day following the date of the issue of this resolution the Chief Justice of Bombay gave His Excellency the Governor an evening party at which every officer of Government House, all the High Court Judges, some European citizens and several Native gentlemen were present. When Government officers are forced to observe mourning for three weeks, why did Sir James go to the party? Again His Excellency visited the Gaiety Theatre on the evening of Wednesday last. When the authorities themselves showed such disregard for the mourning, what could be expected from the public? Is it enough to tie a piece of black crape as a sign of mourning for the lamented death of Her Imperial Majesty's youngest son whose burial has not yet taken place? The Native public is surprised at this conduct of the authorities. The Jáme censures the people of Bombay for not holding as yet a public meeting for adopting an address of condolence to Her Imperial Majesty and the Royal family, and advises the Native public to close business for at least half a day in memory of the sad event.

The New Budget.

Comments in connection with the new budget.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 30th March considers the new budget disappointing, disapproves of the transfer of Major Baring, the late Finance Minister of India, to Egypt as detrimental to the interests of this country, points out the evils of presenting the financial statement in a minute form instead of first bringing it before the Legislative Council and subjecting it to criticism, and remarks:—The Minister of Finance tells us that Government cannot do anything in the matter of loss by exchange. We are constrained to say that 'cannot' in this case is false; let Government boldly say that it will not. The loss by exchange is an evil and has its causes, which have been pretty accurately ascertained. The science of political economy has sufficiently advanced, and it cannot be said that the evil is without a remedy. It has been known to exist for the past twenty or even more years, and nothing appears to have been done to remedy it. This conduct of Government can only be explained on the ground that the economic view which Government takes of the situation is quite different from that which the public generally takes. This school of thinkers holds that by the great fall in exchange the rupee has become relatively cheaper, and as its purchasing power in India has not been lessened an enormous increase in the exports has been encouraged,—a condition which ought to benefit this country. If the official view of the exchange question is as we have stated above, we have figures before us to show that the causes that are at work are other than those put forth by Government. The Mahrátta here gives from the statistical abstract a return showing the amount of bills drawn on India by the Secretary of State, the sums received in England in respect of them, the average rate obtained, and the loss by exchange, compared with the 2*s.* rate per rupee from 1862 to 1882, and says:—These figures speak for themselves and clearly point out that it is the drawings of the Secretary of State on India that rule the exchange market. To assert therefore that the loss by exchange is absolutely beyond the control of Government is to say that under present arrangements the action of the Secretary of State is perfectly absolute, and that he cannot be controlled or that our rulers are incapable of governing us, inasmuch as they cannot adjust their relations with us so as to save us from the loss which admittedly they do not wish should be inflicted on us. The question of exchange is both difficult and easy, and as such the solution solely depends upon the willingness or reluctance of those whose duty it is to approach it. The question of railway extension has brought this subject to the front.

Says that the increasing revenue derived from India is not a sure sign of the growing wealth of her people.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 30th March, in an article headed "Is the flourishing condition of the revenue a sign of the people's prosperity?" shows that increased receipts from several items of revenue such as land, salt, stamps, excise and provincial rates mentioned in the new budget are a fallacious guide towards erecting the hypothesis of accumulation of wealth by the people, analyses the growth of the land revenue, remarking at the same time that while the gross land revenue increased by 6½ per cent. in twelve years from 1871-72 to 1882-83 the cost of collection increased by 8 per cent. during the same period, points out the fallacy of the average reduced percentage of the land tax, and says:—Admitting for argument's sake that the increase in the land revenue is a sure index of increasing wealth, the question may be asked, into whose pockets does the wealth go? India is notably a country of agriculture. Her manufactures and industries are almost nil. The bulk of her annual wealth comes from the produce of the soil. Do the ryots who produce this agricultural wealth share it? If so, to what extent? Are they not the slaves of the sáwkárs and the middlemen and exporters? Do not these harpies pocket the profits? Of course trade is stimulated, because the middlemen and exporters being masters of the situation extort the utmost quantity of produce from the soil of the impoverished ryot. The true and only sure index of agricultural prosperity is the annual production of the soil and the surplus resulting to the cultivator. Are there reliable statistics forthcoming to show what is the real wealth and what is the actual surplus? What was the fair value of the total agricultural produce, including seeds and straw, in 1872-73 and what is it now? If we find that compared with the increase of population the wealth per head has considerably increased and that pari passu the peasant has a surplus to boast of, we shall be the first to admit that the growth of the land revenue indicates agricultural prosperity. In this connection it may be worth while quoting the observations of Mr. Slagg in the address delivered by him at Manchester in November last. He says: "It is authoritatively stated that the public demand on the cultivator amounts in one charge or another to about 60 per cent. of the rent, and a heavy rate of interest is charged on arrears. I fear it is only too often the case that a heavy assessment drives the poor cultivator to despair and tends even in some instances to the depopulation of entire districts. What then is the recourse of the poor ryot, impoverished by bad seasons and loaded with debt?" While such is the normal condition of the peasantry, our officials talk of the steady growth of the land revenue! Is it not a mockery? Again, the optimists consider the growth of other heads of revenue as a test of growing wealth. We must take exception to the assertion in the same manner as we have done in the case of land revenue. On another occasion we hope to disprove it. Meanwhile the one economic fact which is systematically ignored, but which is the index of national wealth must be here repeated. Says Mr. Slagg:—"In estimating the burden of taxation in any country it is necessary to consider the wealth of its population . . . . . India could probably raise with ease her present revenue or even a larger amount, if her people got the benefit of it." That is our strong point. The production of the ryot is eaten up by a foreign administration, which takes away 20 millions sterling annually, not to speak of private remittances which nearly come to the same figure. It is fallacious to talk of the increasing revenue of the country as a sure sign of the growing wealth of the people. This would be true were the mischievous factors now at work non-existent.

Expresses satisfaction with the declaration made in the last financial statement regarding land assessments and suggests that it should be embodied into an Act of the Supreme Legislative Council.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 30th March gives the substance of the arrangements regarding the settlement of land revenue mentioned in the new financial statement and observes:—From these views and from what is known of the correspondence it is evident that in future the profits resulting from the investment of private capital on land will be exempt from assessment. The limitation takes off much from the first ground of increase given above, for if the area of cultivation be extended by inviting private capital it must be held free from assessment. So again in this Presidency at least we have special water-rates, so that no increase in the assessment can take place on that account. It will be only the third ground therefore, namely, rise in prices, that will hereafter determine the enhancements, and if a schedule of actual prices in each district for every year be kept up and if famine years be excluded from the averages, and lastly, more important still, if it be resolved, as recommended by Mr. J. S. Hall, that the actual increase should bear a fixed proportion to the rise in prices so as to leave a good margin to the cultivator, we are quite sure that land revenue enhancements in future will not be looked upon by the public with that distrust and anxiety with which they have hitherto been. The Government will at first have to sacrifice some portion of the revenue which the enhancements according to the old system would have brought in, but this loss would soon be more than recouped by the saving effected in the Survey and Settlement Department and by the increased prosperity of the country consequent upon the stimulus given to the investment of private capital in agriculture owing to the certainty of reaping all the profits derivable from it. We congratulate the Government of Lord Ripon therefore for having taken the initiative in this important matter and are glad that the arrangements have been accepted by the Governments of Bombay and Madras. As regards the proposals of the Bombay Government we think that more could have been done at the present time. The arrangements under consideration relate solely to resettlements, while there is nothing about the original assessment which is to become the basis of future enhancements. It would be better if Government declare that in no case the assessment would exceed a certain definite proportion of the gross produce, as is done in the Tenancy Bill. There has been much discussion on the subject of late, and it has been asserted that the assessment is not excessive and consequently such a provision is unnecessary. But to us the argument does not appear to be conclusive, for if the present assessment is not excessive Government need not fear any loss of revenue on that account, while all uncertainty on the part of the public will be removed by a declaration. Again the policy of Government with regard to this subject has been so vacillating that it is advisable to embody the present arrangements in a legislative enactment of the Supreme Council instead of a resolution of the Government of India as it will secure public confidence to a greater degree and make it impossible for future Governments to change the rules without inviting an open discussion in the Legislative Council.

Expresses satisfaction with the declaration made in the last financial statement regarding land assessments.

In an article headed "The Land Revenue Policy of Government" the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 3rd April says:—It is always very difficult to compel a bureaucratic Government like the Government in India to recognize the very existence of an evil in its system of administration; but when that is accomplished, we may rest assured that more than half the work is done and the final accomplishment of the remainder is only a question of time. The blow which has been dealt to the Revenue Survey and Settlement Department in the recent financial statement is one of a mortal nature, and one from which it will not recover. As a remarkable proof of the reckless administration of the Survey Department we cannot resist the temptation of referring here passingly to a glaring instance of the same character. When the Government of India recognized the existence of abnormal indebtednes and poverty in the Deccan districts by passing the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and interfered with the ordinary relations, subsisting between creditors and debtors within the same area, one would have thought that the Survey Department would have at least suspended its operations also in the same area. But as a matter of fact nothing of the kind took place. On the contrary in the same year which saw the introduction of the Relief Act were also introduced enhanced assessments in a portion of the Purandhar Táluka of this district !!! And the same thing has occurred in other districts within the same area. If the principles which have been laid down in the foregoing paragraph, are honestly and loyally given effect to, no well-wisher of the Indian ryot would reasonably demand more. It has never been contended that the ryot should not be required to contribute a farthing more to the State treasury even though his condition should be prosperous. What his well-wishers have been agitating for is that the ryot should not be rack-rented, or in other words that the increased demand made upon him should bear a reasonable proportion to his increased profits. The principles announced now are satisfactory enough. It only remains to be seen how they are carried into practical execution.

Says that the details of the land revenue policy of Government should be embodied in an Act of the Legislature.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 30th March says:—While the expenditure of the Government is for some reason or other on the increase, it is very satisfactory indeed to learn from the budget that certain measures are under contemplation which will very considerably limit the expenditure on the Survey and Settlement Department. It appears that the Government of India have with the sanction of the Secretary of State adopted certain principles regulating the assessment of land revenue which will considerably diminish the work of survey and ensure a sort of finality to the existing assessment which it now so woefully lacks. These principles are that in future revisions of the land assessment no improvements, whether made by the owner of land or the tenant, shall be taxed; that where the soil has been already properly classed and valued no fresh classification or valuation shall be allowed; and lastly that the existing assessment shall not be altered except on two or three well-defined grounds. What these grounds are to be in the different provinces has not yet been settled, but in the opinion of the Government of India they should be the increase of cultivation, improvements executed by the State, and rise in prices. Hence there will be no resurvey either partial or entire except in places where the survey of the last settlement is so inaccurate as to be useless or where the records of the old survey have fallen into great disorder. In the result, landlords in the more advanced and populous parts of the country will be pretty generally safe from future enhancements of revenue. Here is a wise and generous policy in perfect harmony with the enlightened principles which guide the measures of Lord Ripon's Government. The absence of it deters many a capitalist from investing his money in land and effecting improvements. The Madras Government, it appears, endorses the policy in full. The Bombay Government objects to it only in one point. What that one point is, however, one would be very curious to know. No doubt our Local Government will have to undo things and amend an Act, the Land Revenue Code of 1879. But where the hitch exactly lies it is difficult to see. We hope the Government of India will, when all the details are settled, embody their principles in an Act or cause them to be so embodied by local Governments and not stop with a Government resolution only. This will put greater confidence in the hearts of the ryots and others and will furnish a better guide to the revenue officers. Resolutions sometimes manage to slink away from sight and can easily be superseded by other resolutions. An Act of the Legislature is more stubborn and more difficult to manage.

Remarks on the land revenue policy of Government as expressed in the last financial statement.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 31st March alludes to the arrangement spoken of about the Revenue Survey Department summarized in the financial statement and remarks:—The importance of giving permanence and stability to Indian agriculture cannot be overrated. India has long been pronounced to be an essentially agricultural country. Her chief industry is agriculture. All her material interests, not only her prosperity and the development of commerce but her very life, depend upon efficient agriculture. To free her from the incubus of debt and the heavy annual loss on exchange, the one thing necessary is an increase in her export trade. For that purpose wheat and other agricultural commodities must be produced in larger quantities, and such large production, whether by increasing the area of cultivation or improving the methods of agriculture, is only possible when there is an element of stability in the holding and a certainty that the cultivator will be able to enjoy the full fruits of his labour and capital. The proposed arrangement will, we trust, greatly contribute to such a stability, and the sooner it is published and enforced in all parts of the country the better will it be for both Government and the people.

Local Self-government.

Says that the village schoolmasters in the Bombay Presidency ought to be instructed by Government to explain to the people the objects and intentions of Government in the matter of the Bombay Local Boards Act.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 30th March, in referring to the Bombay Local Boards Act, says:—Those towns which have a population of 5000 and upwards will have municipalities. These towns have more or less means of communication with the centres of civilization and arrangements can therefore be very easily made so as to give the public advantage of our education and experience. The difficulty is about reaching the villages and their groups. The Honourable Mr. Peile and his colleagues have declared, and the President has ratified the declaration, that no pains will be spared by which the scheme can be made a success. If Government only does as it has promised the difficulties will vanish. There are about 5000 primary schools in the Presidency and generally there are very few villages which have none. This is an agency which can very conveniently be utilized. The revenue officers, such as Mámlatdárs, ought to be let alone from the relations that have been existing between the revenue and magisterial officers on one side and the public on the other. We may safely say that these officers have too much of the bureaucratic feeling in them, and if they are allowed to have the management of the elections there is little chance of independent and public-spirited men coming in. The agency of the school-masters should therefore be utilized. Government in the Educational Department should issue instructions to these school-masters to explain to the people the objects and intentions of Government, which ought to be embodied in a resolution. This done, the leading men in the village or villages should be formed into small committees to secure the election of right men. There should be formed a consultative committee in every district town, and this committee should communicate with the village committees. Government should offer to bear half the expense that will be incurred, provided the people pay the other half. The Sárvajanik Sabha should organize on its account divisional committees in the recently formed sanitation circles, and these divisional committees should take the leading strings into their hands and regulate the movements of the district committees, who in their turn should take care of the village committees. Thus organized we have hopes that the elections will be best managed. The idea of forming a central board was dispensed with on the ground that this board would be very much an official board and would not therefore exercise a healthy influence. Let us therefore construct the machinery on our own account and set it to work at once, so that by the time the several notifications are issued and departmental arrangements completely made we shall be ready too.

Railways.

Reflections on the Chanda Railway scheme.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 30th March says:—The wise men of Hyderabad have accepted the Chanda Railway scheme and the work of survey has begun in right earnest. Lucky dogs these Hyderabadis! They are promised greater prosperity and brisker business from the foreign loan of three millions at heavy rate of interest and with the working profits and other items to go to the lenders. This is what we Natives call making Diváli at other people's expense. Far from proving a success the project will be a costly failure, and the wretched imbeciles who have been coaxed or coerced into accepting it will have to wring their hands in anguish when it is too late. But that is a question of time. Meanwhile Abdul Huq Dilar Jang has been dubbed a Doula. It is creditable that the man who was measuring the streets of Bombay and Calcutta a few years ago with greasy certificates in his pockets in search of police employment has now become "a peer of the realm." No one has a right to quarrel about that, but fancy our old acquaintance negociating a monster loan for a railway! Sardár Dilar Jang Doula knows about as much of railway finance as the Revenue Secretary Mr. Mehdi Ali is said to know of English. And yet though Mehdi Ali knows nothing of the English language he has published a number of English works on the Nizám's revenue affairs. If that is so, why wonder at Abdul Huq posing as a railway nabob? It is said that Hyderabad debts amount to only a kror of rupees. We thought they were nearer three krors than one. A kror of money is not much for Hyderabad to pay off. And to this end the ministers are said to be considering a scheme of retrenchment. All this sounds well enough. But the idea of retrenchment is abhorrent to the Musalman. At any rate it is a queer way of reducing debt when they borrow three millions and scatter Bukshis right and left. The financial authorities of Hyderabad seem to have a way of managing things of which even a petty shopkeeper would be ashamed.

Municipalities.

Suggests certain measures for the prevention of the spread of cholera at Broach.

The Broach Samáchár (88) of the 3rd April approvingly refers to the measures taken by the local municipality for the prevention of the spread of cholera which has broken out in that city, and says that these measures will not suffice to prevent the epidemic, the season for which has just commenced. It is very likely that it will rage virulently hereafter when the heat increases, when mangoes, plantains, water-melons, &c., are sold in large numbers, when cheap and rotten vegetables and fruits will be eaten, and when foul water from the bottom of dried up wells and tanks is drunk. It is necessary that stringent measures should be taken beforehand to prevent the spread of cholera. The municipality ought to prohibit the washing of dirty clothes by the sides of wells and the river, and should see that rotten articles of food and spoiled ghee are not used in caste-feasts among the poor. Stale meat, putrid fish and other rotten articles of food should not be allowed to be sold in the municipal market and their sellers should be prosecuted for exposing them for sale. The use of the water of the river Narmada for drinking purposes ought also to be prohibited for a time, for the water gets shallow and foul in the hot season and Native sailors commit nuisance in the river.

Native States.

Says that it is desirable that the young Nizám of Hyderabad should be advised to become discreet in giving pecuniary rewards.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 30th March observes that the liberality with which the Nizám has rewarded Dr. Beaumont, the Residency Surgeon, may be allowed as a generous act on the part of the young ruler. But seeing that His Highness has begun to run somewhat too fast in the field of generosity, and lest what seems now a tolerable virtue should soon assume the character of extravagance and therefore of a positive vice, it becomes desirable that His Highness should be apprized by the British authorities to be more careful than he now appears disposed. The subject should be put before His Highness in its true light before he gets habituated to give away public money recklessly. His Highness may dub his favourites with any amount of new titles, pleasing to Native vanity, that cost nothing to him or his subjects. But in the matter of paying away the substance of his subjects, both the prince and the minister would do well to consult their own interests by being just to those subjects before being over-generous to friends. These remarks are not suggested merely by the very munificent reward given to Dr. Beaumont, but by the tendency observable in the young ruler of Hyderabad to give away public money with a light heart in order to be appreciated as a generous ruler.

Says that a joint administration should be established at Rájpipla with a European at its head.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 30th March says:—We have no wish to anticipate the result of Major Hancock's inquiries at Nándod and the Government's final decision as to the management of the unfortunate State of Rájpipla. But it would not be unfair to refer to a large amount of correspondence we have received on the subject from several independent sources. It appears that the Rája has been misbehaving with his people since Major Hancock's appointment. But he is not likely to continue so doing. Woe be to the people if His Highness is again allowed to have his own way. He has been given up by successive Agents as incorrigible. Government have acknowledged as much. If he is given another chance without strict control it will be the death of the wretched persons who have been forced to appeal to the paramount power from his rapacity and misrule. Our correspondents seem to be agreed that the Rája should be asked to resign in favour of his eldest son, who may carry on affairs with responsible advisers and a strong executive. We are not quite sure of this arrangement. The present Rája was given the gádi under similar circumstances, though of course he had not the advantage which his son enjoys of education. Our own belief is that nothing will answer so well as a joint administration. If the Rája is to remain, let him have an Englishman as colleague. If the young Chief replaces him a Native gentleman will do well enough. But for one thing the rascally private kárbháris must be deported. It is these men who have brought Rájpipla to its present pass. Our suggestion about an English administrator may sound very unpatriotic in some quarters. But when we think of the chronic anarchy under a tyrant's rule, the out and out farming of revenues sometimes to more contractors than one, the sale of justice, the usurpation of private rights, the arbitrary enhancements of rates and cesses—when we see no such thing as order covering man's safety and woman's honour and a State which ought to yield twenty lákhs a year showing only four lákhs—we cannot put up with so much wrong-doing merely to cherish the patriotic craze. It is to be hoped that Government may consider Major Hancock's report by the light of surrounding circumstances, the wiles and whinings of intriguers in power, and the helplessness of the people unversed in the ways of the world, ignorant, timid and with the sword of the Rája's displeasure hanging overheads. His straits must be terrible indeed when the patient Gujarát Khedu is constrained to rise against his Rája invested with divine authority. On the other hand let the Chief urge all he can in self-defence.

Complains of the excessively high assessment of land in the Native State of Sávantvádi.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 30th March says:—A cry of oppressive revenue assessments reaches us from the southern parts of the Ratnágiri District and those portions of the Sávantvádi territory which border upon the Ratnágiri District. High assessments, taxing private improvements and abnormal increase of existing rates are the matters specially complained of. We wish specially to draw the attention of the authorities concerned to the character of the pressure felt by the unhappy subjects of His Highness the Sar Desái of Sávantvádi. This little State is situated between the Ratnágiri District and the Goa territory. The inhabitants are a half-starved but industrious, peaceful and hardworking people, always ready to do their best to keep themselves above debt and free to enjoy their coarse bread of poverty without molestation from the sáwkár. The land is sterile and extremely difficult of cultivation. The population is excessive, far in excess of the feeding capacity of the soil. The assessments that have obtained in the State hitherto have been already far from light. And in order to be enabled to pay them the people are obliged to emigrate to Bombay in thousands, enter the Native army, and even go beyond the dreaded sea to Mauritius and Trinidad. This has been done for years and it is well-known that if the Bombay mills, the Bombay army, the Government and merchants' offices and the railway companies were to close their doors to these wretches from Sávantvádi, the Sar Desái would find it extremely difficult to recover as much of his land revenue as would cover the expenses of collecting it. Why do not the people, it is asked, throw up the land and be done with it, and the assessment upon it? First because there is nothing else to do besides cultivating the sterile soil, and secondly because the people labour under a time-honoured sentiment that one who has no land has no status in society, to whatever caste he may belong. So far is this the case that a Konkani will sooner see all his moveable property sold—nay even his personal liberty lost—than be deprived of his ancestral holding, small and insignificant though it be. He will go on paying the assessment upon his land from year to year though he knows thoroughly well that the object of his fond attachment is a losing possession that is draining his resources more and more every year. Looked at from a financial point of view his land often loses him more than it brings to him. And yet he will never part with it, fondly hoping that better days may come, better crops may bless him with plenty, higher prices may rule. So wretched is the life led by the vast majority of the people, of all castes from the Bráhman to the Mahár, that the man is considered exceptionally rich who can feed himself with sufficient bread and rice twice a day. It is absolutely no exaggeration to say that from the month of June, when all the harvests have been reaped and disposed of and when the heavy rains of the coast commence, up to the end of October, when the lighter grains such as sáva, vari, harik and nágli come to be harvested, almost the whole of the population have only one coarse and insufficient meal of very coarse rice. At night they have to remain satisfied with a quantity of pej, a preparation of rice and water of the consistency of, say, chocolate used at an English gentleman's breakfast table. A sher or about two pounds of rice is boiled in about ten or fifteen gallons of water in an earthen pitcher—metallic vessels are too great luxuries—until the rice and water become one substance. That supplemented by a quantity of wild vegetables cooked without much spices suffices for a family of, we will say, six persons. From the middle of March to the end of May the poor fellows live principally on the fruits, raw or ripe, of the jack or mango trees, with which they fill the emptiness of their stomachs! We will revert to the subject in our next and hope to show how a peaceful population of such resources is now subjected to enormously enhanced rates of assessment and for what purpose.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
8th April 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári: Complaint regarding the adulteration of noxious drugs with toddy in the Chorási Táluka of the Surat Collectorate 10
Cemeteries: Expression of opinion that the Mahomedan — in the midst of densely inhabited quarters of Bombay should be closed... ... 9
Death of the Duke of Albany:
  Censure on His Excellency the Governor of Bombay for not acting in accordance with the Government resolution that mourning should be observed for three weeks on account of the lamented — ... 11
  Expression of deep regret at the lamented — 11
Land revenue: Request to the Viceroy to consider the question of establishing a permanent system of — for the whole of India ... 3
Land revenue assessments: Adverse criticism on the exposition of the policy of the Bombay Government in regard to — 4
Mhowra Bill: Expression of a hope that the — will not be again brought forward... 5
Mill-hands in Bombay: Complaint that — are overworked 11
Native soldier: Advice for an increase in the pay and pension of the — . 3
Police:
  Advice to — officers that good faith cannot avail them when sued for damages caused by vexatious treatment 10
  Censure on Mr. Superintendent Brewin for exhibiting improper eagerness in the discharge of his public duties ... 10
  Complaint regarding the annoyance and injury caused to the Native population near the Dyeing Mill at Lower Máhim, Bombay, from Europeans employed in that mill 11
Polo: Disapproval of the permission given by the Bombay Government to European — players to play twice a week on the Esplanade 9
Postal matters: Expression of regret that Government is not in a position to reduce the rate of newspaper postage 11
Public honours: Expression of opinion that the Honourable Mr. Rivers Thompson should not be made a K.C.S.I 4
Public Service:
  A request to Government to reduce the punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks, the Civil Surgeon of Ahmedabad ... 6
  Approval of the resolution of the Bombay Government in the case of Dr. Banks, the Civil Surgeon of Ahmedabad ... 6
  Censure on the Bombay Government for failing to praise sufficiently the valuable services of the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft 8
  Expression of opinion that the public expects much from Mr. Melvill on his elevation to a seat in the Executive Council ... 8
  Expression of opinion that the European concerned in the recent fracas at the Charni Road level crossing seemed to be a Captain in the staff corps 7
  Remarks on the career of the Honourable Mr. Ravenscroft:
    The Indu Prakásh 7
    The Subodh Patrika 8
  Request to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay to take due notice of the conduct of the European officer on His Excellency's staff who made an assault on the police at the level crossing at Chaupáti and to reduce the sentence passed on Dr. Banks ... 6
  Severe censure on the European concerned in the recent fracas at the Charni Road level crossing for concealing himself ... 7
Vernacular Press:
  Expression of opinion that copies of Bills, departmental reports and the Administration Report should be furnished to the — ... 9
  Remarks in connection with the statement contained in the last Administration Report of the Bombay Presidency about the unfriendliness of certain newspapers to Government ... 9

Page.

Part II.—The New Budget—

Budget statement for 1884-85: Comments in connection with the— ... 12
Land assessments:
  Expression of satisfaction with the declaration made in the last financial statement regarding— 14
  Ditto ditto and suggestions for its being embodied into an Act of the Supreme Legislative Council 13
Land revenue policy of Government:
  Expression of opinion that the details of the—should be embodied in an Act of the Legislature 14
  Remarks on the—as expressed in the last financial statement .. 15
Revenue derived from India: Expression of opinion that the increasing—is not a sure sign of the growing wealth of her people ... 12

Part III.—Local Self-government—

Bombay Local Boards Act: Expression of opinion that the village schoolmasters in the Bombay Presidency should be instructed by Government to explain to the people the objects and intentions of Government in the matter of the— 15

Part IV.—Railways—

Chanda Railway scheme: Reflections on the— 16

Part V.—Municipalities—

Broach: Suggestion of certain measures for the prevention of the spread of cholera at— 16

Part VI.—Native States—

Hyderabad: Expression of opinion that the young Nizám of—should be advised to become discreet in giving pecuniary rewards... ... 17
Rájpipla: Expression of opinion that a joint administration should be established at—with a European at its head... 17
Sávantvádi: Complaint regarding ths excessively high assessment of land in the Native State of— 18

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 12th April 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Do.	Fortnightly	950
12	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
	MARA'THI.
13	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
14	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
15	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
16	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
17	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*18	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*19	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
20	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
21	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*22	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
23	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
24	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
25	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
26	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
27	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
28	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
29	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
30	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
31	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
32	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*33	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*34	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
35	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
36	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
37	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
38	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
39	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
40	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
41	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
42	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*43	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
44	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
45	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
46	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*47	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
48	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
49	„ Prabhákar[1]	Bombay	Daily	350
*50	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Weekly	200
51	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Do.	200
*52	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*53	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
54	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
55	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
56	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
57	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
58	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*59	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
60	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*61	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
62	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
63	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
64	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

C. R.
17156
INDIA OFFICE
6 MA 1884

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*65	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
66	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
67	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár[1]	Akola	Do.	250
68	„ Vártáhar	Bombay	Do.	200
69	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
70	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*71	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*73	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*74	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
75	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*76	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
77	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
78	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
79	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
80	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
81	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
82	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
83	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
84	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*85	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
86	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
87	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
88	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
89	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
90	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
91	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
92	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
93	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratna	Do.	Monthly	200
*94	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
95	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
96	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
97	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*98	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
99	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*100	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
101	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
102	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
103	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*104	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
105	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
106	„ Lok Mitră	Do.	Weekly	800
107	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
108	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
109	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
110	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
111	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
112	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
113	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*114	„ Saurashtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*124	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Disapproval of the refusal of the Secretary of State for India for increasing the limit of age for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th April says:—The reply which Lord Kimberley is reported to have given to the deputation that waited on him for pressing the necessity of increasing the limit of age prescribed for candidates for the Indian Civil Service is indeed most discouraging. It is so contrary to expectation! Professor Jowett has strongly advised increasing the limit, while it is also an open secret here that Lord Ripon and the majority of his colleagues in Council are in favour of increasing the age. Under the cirumstances we can only account for the unsatisfactory reply made by Lord Kimberley on the supposition that he has once more succumbed to the burden of sluggish pensioners that rule at the India Office. If Mr. Slagg needs a fresh instance to prove the advisability of abolishing that effete body of mischief-makers, this is a striking one. The reply is theirs. Lord Kimberley is simply their mouth-piece. It was an evil day that saw a Whig partisan as Secretary of State for India. [The Native Opinion (10) of the 6th April says:—Even the present Cabinet seems to be determined to put an extinguisher upon the effort that is being made to re-open the above question. Acceptance of the traditional policy of saying "no" to any reasonable representation will, in the case of the present ministry, who have professed to make public opinion and not their own hobbies the guide of their conduct, not fail to come upon the Native public as a surprise. It is rather strange that Lord Kimberley should not see the necessity of a change even when it is made out and admitted by Government. But we put it to His Lordship whether the new limit of age has given us better Civil Servants as it was supposed to do? We would ask His Lordship to publish statistics as to the health and ability of Civil Servants since the new change was introduced. That would clear up the point, and remove the false notions under which His Lordship may be labouring.]

Is sorry that the Secretary of State for India has refused to alter the rules fixing the age of the Indian Civil Service candidates.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 6th April observes that the refusal of Lord Kimberley to alter the rules fixing the maximum age of candidates competing for the Civil Service Examinations in England at 19 has caused considerable disappointment and discontent here. It leaves the burning question in the unsatisfactory state where it has remained hitherto, virtually rendering the door of entrance into the public service of their country extremely difficult for the natives of India to enter. It is true that to compensate them for this drawback, what is called the system of Statutory Civilians has been devised. But this remedy has been condemned by Natives as well as Europeans as being an ill-advised make-shift. After the fresh refusal of the Secretary of State to modify the rules of the competitive examination Natives will be anxious more than ever for the improvement which the Government has promised to effect in the system of appointing Statutory Civilians. It will be commendable in the Government not to delay to give effect to its promise for the much and universally wished for reform.

Says that the manners of the present generation of educated Natives are the natural outcome of a number of political and intellectual influences, the growth of which cannot be permanently chilled by rivalry and carping.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 6th April, in an article headed "Manners of our new generation," says:—The educated Native of the new generation is often pointed out as an example of ill-breeding and the most intolerable manners. His straightforwardness is construed into arrogance and his outspokenness into overconfidence. To several of our civilian rulers his company is detestable because he asserts his convictions, and several of their black-skinned minions stigmatise him as impolite and ungentlemanly because he does not defer to the opinion of the grand sáhebs. Indeed he does not conform himself to the established code of manners and scarcely ever troubles himself to study the coquetry of fashion. He is sometimes perhaps a little too impatient of the inequalities of worldly situations and deals with the same hand with both the high and the low. He is sometimes perhaps a little too outspoken and a little too assertive for the world as it is. But if he is all this and several other things desirable or undesirable, he has the great virtue of being what he seems. Manners are the outcome of a number of influences political, social and intellectual. They are sometimes the outbursts of innate faith and convictions and represent the real basis of man's character. Sometimes they are the fibres of an ingeniously woven web prepared to conceal a disagreeable interior. When Natives are progressing they have very little time to settle the useless formalities of fashion, but look with a business-like eye upon everything they come across. But when they have once risen to the highest step of the ladder their stationary condition and the ominous shade of darkness which begin to peep in upon them suggest to them no other occupations than those of weaving the cobwebs of the useless codes of the so-called good breeding and good manners. If we glance at the past history of nations we shall find that the course of the development of manners has been the same everywhere. The Rome of early times was a simple, easy-going, matter-of-fact Rome. But the Rome of the Emperors was quite otherwise. It was clogged with all those shams of glittering honours, distance-keeping and low bowing of the Mogul court which concealed nothing but fallen and degraded hearts. The middle ages too were rife with such heaps upon heaps of dazzling follies, and the codes of chivalry and honour were boasted of and trumpeted to the world by the loud harangues of the herald and the clankings of the gauntlet. Not that these institutions have no merit of their own. They indeed have played a great part in rescuing the Europe of the present day from those chasms of intellectual and moral lethargy in which it had been engulfed. But an attempt to decry the growths of simple, straightforward, original characters because they do not conform to the hackneyed code of fashion is to invoke a curse upon a growing nation. Free manners are the development of individuality and of the independence of the members of a society in every concern of life that spurs it on its onward march. They may sometimes be crude, but they have the charm of being genuine. It was only by the assertion of private judgment that the latent activities of Europe were evoked. The spirit of enterprize and craving for something new were stirred only by tickling the chord of personal individuality. If the educated Native of the new generation is sometimes a little too eccentric, that he acts upon the impulse of his own mind is so much gain and a very important gain. If he at any time happens to break through the attraction of his proper centre, to push him back into his proper orbit is necessary, but that need not be done by crushing his power of motion. It is not by the argument of established usage that his mind is to be awakened to his mistake, but it is by appealing to his sense of propriety that he is to be brought to the right path. We are no blind admirers of the present generation, nor do we hold that educated Natives are free from any defect. But in so far as error is necessary for all sound progress, we think no impatience need be expressed at a few errors. The manners of the new generation in India are the outcome of the training which they have received. It is the very education which our Government has been so kindly giving us that has taught them to us. When the light of truth dawns upon the mind it cannot but expel those stagnant notions of honour and decency which spring and are reared up in the darkness of ignorance. If the books that we study, if the great minds that we are in contact with everyday, teach us the futility of formalities and the nothingness of the whole human species when compared with the rest of creation, how is it possible that our new generation can bring itself to make very perceptible distinctions between the different members of the same family of man? If they see that mind is the standard of man and that his value depends on his being elevated or low, how can he bring himself to accord particular honours to a particular class? When our stations in life are so very doubtful and when one who is no-body to-day is in the front to-morrow, how cannot the educated Native of the new generation think that it is the powers of man alone that deserve respect and not his outward station in life? It is only when societies are backward and certain persons in them are foremost beyond dispute that the so-called code of honour can be dictated. Circumstanced as we are therefore the manners of our new generation are the natural outcome of a number of political and intellectual influences and no amount of rivalry and carping can give a permanent chill to their growth. They may perhaps be twisted and knotted for a time, but in the long run they will only shoot up with vengeance. It is a vitiated taste that settles entirely on garden-scenery and is not warmed by the grandeur of the forest.

Cost and duration of the Survey and Settlement Department and remarks in connection therewith.

In an article headed "The new departure in Land Revenue Survey and Assessment," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 6th April says :—The resolution published by the local Government expounding its policy in reference to future revenue survey and assessment, based on the line of policy now inaugurated by the Imperial authorities, is one that will settle the minds of ryots in districts where the periodic revision and re-settlement are fast approaching, notably in Gujarát. It will slowly lead the ryots in years to come to a haven of security, and even moderate prosperity, if district autocrats faithfully abide by the assurances now embodied therein. The resolution aims at a prospective finality in revenue settlements. The completion of the survey record is essential. Hence it is observed in paragraph 11 that "the completion of the survey record by revision where it is now imperfect is one operation which will improve the position of the survey occupant, by putting an end to such disturbance and uncertainty as are inseparable from the remeasurement and reclassification of soils." Assurance is given in the next paragraph that this work will be completed in 8 years. But what guarantee is offered that it may not take 18 or 80 years for the matter? We have already spent, since the scientific survey was established, something over 2 millions sterling. Is the revenue to be further encroached upon indefinitely for Survey Settlement Department? We cannot be blind to past experience, especially that afforded by the Cotton Frauds Department, which under one plea or another prolonged its existence in order that highly placed individuals might enjoy their sinecures and retire with fat pensions. Who can believe in the sincerity of State resolutions after such experience? The order of to-day may be cancelled by the order of to-morrow. Even when the order exists, who follows it in practice? Is it not a fact that the officers in the district often act according to their own sweet will? There was that despatch of 1864 by Sir Charles Wood—the Magna Charta of the ryots. If that was a dead letter, as has been conclusively shown by Sir Louis Mallet, who can pin faith in the resolution of the local Government? Take another illustration. There are a variety of rules under various measures of legislation in connection with forest, ábkári and salt revenue. Have these been faithfully interpreted and acted upon by those in power? How did they interpret, again, the 107th section of the Land Revenue Code? Then what is the guarantee that the work of the Survey Settlement, which has been sitting like a vampire on the country for the last 47 years, will be finished in 8 years? That there is ground for some apprehension may be perceived from the artfully constructed sentence which concludes the 12th paragraph. What if recently surveyed settlements, say 10 years ago, are advised by the Department to require rectification or revision 20 years hence? Will the staff be kept going? It is true that in the next paragraph the Government declares that no revision shall be allowed until substantial reasons are shown by the Settlement Department. Is there a doubt that plausible reasons will be forthcoming in battalions at the opportune hour to justify the existence of the Survey Department? What Government has been so conscientious as to show the moral courage to refuse permission to, or resist the importunities of, revenue officers? We can only judge of the actions of the Government in future from those in the past. Really, the moral which one must infer from the drift of the entire 18th paragraph is this: that though the Government expended 2 millions sterling and over, the work of survey in the first instance was performed so imperfectly that it could not be accepted for purposes of a safe standard. A revaluation de novo is therefore "inevitable." That is to say, the ryots and the public must be still mulcted in heavier costs in order that the Government may be in a position to rectify the errors of its own officers who originally performed the work perfunctorily! Is it a wonder that loud complaints are made regarding increased cost of administration in every province? But we must stop here.

Approves of the recent resolution of the Government of Bombay giving an exposition of the land survey and assessment system prevailing in this Presidency.

In noticing the resolution of the Government of Bombay in the Revenue Department dated the 26th March containing an exposition of the existing system of land survey assessment in this Presidency, the Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 6th April observes that the policy therein described is liberal and the principles on which it is based are broad and enlightened. The same may be considered by some people as capable of improvement in matters of detail here and there, or perhaps in one or two instances with regard to some of the principles which are to govern the action of the authorities. But the resolution considered as a whole, conceding due weight to the reasons advanced in support of the subject-matter of its different sections, must convince all candid critics that it is a full and definite declaration of the land revenue policy of the Government which must serve to remove all uncertainties and to banish all vague apprehensions as to the intentions and proceedings of the Government in respect of both the assessment and the collection of the land revenue. The Government is actuated by the single desire of promoting the public weal. It means to be just to the State and at the same time generous to the cultivator of the soil. The simultaneous practice of the two virtues, though it may be thought by some persons as being by no means an easy task, the Government seems determined to adopt. If the ryot will only be diligent, economical, and just to himself, and if the subordinates in the Revenue Department will be honest and faithful to the instructions or orders given them, the plan of the Government cannot fail to render the situation of the cultivators of the soil secure and prosperous. Government should lose no time in preparing faithful translations of the resolution in the different languages of the Presidency and in distributing them broad-cast amongst the people, chiefly in the rural districts.

Approves of the Government resolution regarding the land revenue and assessment.

In noticing the same subject the Gujaráti (97) of the 6th April expresses its hearty approval of the policy enunciated in the resolution, and requests Government to get it translated into the different vernaculars of this Presidency and to distribute the translations freely among the agricultural population.

Says that a commission should be appointed to enquire into and report upon the defects of the existing ábkári system.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (104) of the 6th April observes that the new A'bkári Act abolished the system of giving away by auction the shops opened in different parts of a city or town for the sale of country liquor and toddy to different individuals, and introduced the new practice of selling the contract of vending liquors to one individual. In the sharp competition to secure the contract the price of the monopoly has considerably risen and the ábkári revenue has largely increased; but the liquors and toddy have become very dear. These articles being dear fraudulent admixtures are made in them, and the poor people, though paying a high price which they cannot conveniently afford, get mixtures which injure their health. The A'bkári Act has clothed the officers of the A'bkári Department and the liquor contractors with excessive powers whereby they have begun to oppress the people. However it is said that His Excellency the Governor has called upon the A'bkári Commissioner to report whether any objections exist to the old system of selling liquor shops to different individuals being reverted to. But it is feared that the A'bkári Department will not recommend a system that will reduce its importance; and hence it is to be hoped that His Excellency will appoint a commission composed of independent members to enquire into and report upon the subject.

Complains of the fresh concession made to the polo-players about playing polo on the esplanade.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 7th April says:—This last resolution of the Government of Bombay making a fresh concession to the members of the Polo Club of the Bombay Gymkhana to the detriment of the Native cricketers playing on the esplanade does not reflect credit on the Government. There have up to now been altogether three resolutions on the subject. In the first, the Government directed that the esplanade should not be used by the Polo Club. This showed that Sir James Fergusson was conscientious and strict in the discharge of his responsible duties and could rise above national prejudices when convinced of the righteousness of a cause. But the Bombay Gymkhana, consisting as it does of the more influential members of the European community, did not let the matter rest there. Its members again urged their case to the favourable notice of Government with the result that one day in the week was allowed to the Polo Club for using the esplanade. This partial success appears to have revived their spirits and they have wrung this time a fresh concession, allowing them two days in the week and restoring the state of things that had prevailed before the Native cricketers made their first representation to Government. Is this the reward due to influence and might?

Complains that the Native cricketers have been virtually driven away from the esplanade in Bombay for the convenience of some six European polo-players.

The Rást Goftár (101) of the 6th April complains that the Native cricketers, who are almost wholly young boys, have been once more driven from the esplanade for the sake of some six European polo-players. The oval in front of the High Court being small for playing cricket, Sir Frank Souter has prohibited Native cricketers from playing there. The maidán on the Back Bay is rough and uneven and does not suit the players. The esplanade is the only piece of ground which is convenient, and yet the cricketers have been virtually driven from it. The polo-players are allowed to play upon the ground two evenings every week, the military parades are held on the same ground for two or three evenings weekly, and thus the cricketers will not have the esplanade to themselves alone for more than a day or two in a week. This is a great injustice to the young generation of Bombay, and the public ought to protest against it. [The Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Prefers the establishment of a Sessions Court at Nadiád instead of at Kaira.

The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 10th April, in referring to the intention of Government to establish a Sessions Court in the Kaira District, points out the inconvenience which the public and the court would suffer by its location at Kaira and by the difficulty of procuring assessors at that place, enumerates the advantages that would result by its establishment at Nadiád, which occupies a central position in the Kaira District and which is a very large city close to the railway station, and expresses a hope that Government will duly consider the matter and locate the court at Nadiád. [The Samsher Báhádur (112) of the 11th April also prefers the location of the Sessions Court at Nadiád instead of at Kaira, which is now being neglected. If Government offices were transferred from Kaira to Nadiád, which is rising in importance, the public would be afforded a good deal of convenience.]

Describes a case of oppression on the steamer Bhima, which left Bombay for Goa and intermediate stations on 3rd April last.

A correspondent of the Satyă Shodhak (58) of 6th April says that he was a passenger on the steamer Bhima which left Bombay for Goa and intermediate stations on 3rd April. The deck was not washed and consequently the correspondent and other passengers had to sit in a dirty place. After leaving the Bánkot Bandar the work of clipping tickets commenced. Near the correspondent a regimental sepoy was sitting with two women, who had each a child with them. One child was a year old and the other two years. The ticket examiner asked the sepoy to hand over his tickets; whereupon the latter delivered three tickets for himself and the two women who accompanied him. The ticket examiner then began to demand payment for the child which was two years old. When the sepoy refused to pay, the ticket examiner began to abuse him. Upon this the sepoy told him not to utter abuse, but to take such legal steps as may be necessary to recover the money. The ticket examiner then called up some sailors (Khallásis) who inflicted blows on the poor sepoy. When one of the passengers sitting near the sepoy interfered to prevent him from being maltreated, he was treated similarly. Even the two women and children did not escape unhurt. At last the ticket examiner called upon the sepoy to promise in writing that he would not lay a criminal charge against him, and on his refusal he threatened not to land him at Málvan, but at some other station. The poor sepoy was frightened and gave a written assurance as demanded by the ticket examiner. The correspondent trusts that the attention of the authorities will be drawn to this case of oppression and that the offending parties will be duly punished.

Complains that European soldiers annoy and assault foot-passengers on the road between Sátára and Máhuli.

A correspondent of the Bodh Sudhákar (18) of the 9th April says that European soldiers frequently annoy and assault people passing on the road between Sátára and Máhuli. These soldiers are usually drunk. In their state of intoxication they take passers-by to be loose women, and when they find that they are men, they assault them as if they were purposely intruding on their privacy. These soldiers are often seen in the company of low-caste loose women. The correspondent trusts that the District Magistrate and the military authorities will take measures to prevent European soldiers from annoying or injuring inoffensive passers on the public road.

Requests the attention of the police authorities to the reprehensible practice of overloading bullock carts prevalent in Ahmednagar.

The Nagar Samáchár (41) of the 5th April says that the practice of overloading bullock carts is very common in the city of Ahmednagar. It is strange that this practice should not have attracted the attention of the police. Only a few days ago the bullocks of a cart fell down because it was overloaded and they were unable to drag it. Perhaps the practice of overloading carts is resorted to at the railway station in order to save toll to the owners by having to make fewer trips. It is to be hoped that the police and the municipal authorities will put an end to this reprehensible practice.

Says that lepers in the Bombay Presidency should be located in places far away from populated localities in order to reduce their number, which has been increasing of late years.

The Arunodayă (13) of 6th April alludes to the increase in the number of lepers in the Bombay Presidency as revealed in the latest report of the Health Officer of the Bombay Municipality and in the Census Report of Mr. Baines, and observes that remedial measures should be adopted without delay. Dr. Carter has clearly ascertained that by keeping them apart from the general population the number of lepers in Norway has decreased by nearly one thousand in the twenty-five years preceding 1880. The Arunodayă is surprised that the policy of keeping lepers apart from the general population should not be carried out here. It would be well if lepers were kept by themselves in places considerably removed from towns and villages and due provision made for their maintenance. If they refuse to obey, the aid of legislation should be invoked. The Arunodayă trusts that Government will without delay take steps to remove all lepers far away from densely inhabited localities.

Removal of Dr. Banks from the Civil Surgeoncy of Ahmedabad.

Remarks on Dr. Banks' case, on the importance of the press, and on the administration of Sir James Fergusson.

In an article headed "A good warning to European offenders" the Mahrátta (2) of the 6th April refers to the resolution of the Government of Bombay on Dr. Banks' case and remarks:—We are, on the whole, disposed to regard this resolution as another signal proof of the anxious care and solicitude displayed by the Government of Sir James Fergusson to watch the interests of justice with a vigilant eye. This resolution, taken in conjunction with the Hewett case resolution, will be sufficient to show that though persons actually charged with the dispensing of justice do not think much of grave crimes committed by European offenders, Government will not allow such lawlessness and high-handedness to go unpunished in a manner which their nature requires. Mr. Hewett was at once dismissed from service and Dr. Banks is dismissed from civil employ, as of course his fault was not of so grave a nature as Hewett's was. We do not think with the Bombay Gazette that this punishment is very severe when we take into consideration the facts of the case, and more especially when we remember the fact that at the time of the said offence the doctor was actually living in camp with the first class Magistrate and could immediately have laid a charge against those who had beaten his servant or taken away his rifle. We are indeed very sorry for Dr. Banks and sympathize with him personally for the calamity that has overtaken him, the result probably of an over-confident opinion of his personal rights; but here our sympathy must cease, and all his considerations of private loss or mortification must give way before the weightier considerations of equity and justice. If justice is to be honoured and equally meted out to all offenders, whether European or Native, if its gross violation must be promptly noticed and confidence inspired into the public mind, then we feel sure the course taken by Government in the present case is not only justifiable but positively necessary. We hope with Government that this case will serve as a warning to those persons who, being young and hot-blooded, are soon driven to take the law into their own hands instead of appealing to it for the redress of their grievances. But there is a peculiar importance which we attach to this resolution, irrespective of the prudent course adopted by Government, and it is the prominent importance given to the Native press. If all that appears in the writings of the Native press were to be as promptly and carefully noted by Government as in the present case, we are sure the press would become a powerful factor of adding strength to the British Ráj in India. We believe the days when Arbuthnots and Lyttons, considering the Native press as seditious, should think of taking the supremely odious step of gagging it and thus disquieting the public mind, are gone, and under the benign rule of Lord Ripon the Native press has already secured an amount of importance which is undeniable. The present is a season of peace and tranquillity, not of devastating famines or unjustifiable wars; and if the press be taken by Government into its confidence, it may rest assured that it will have done so for its own good. The officers of Government, no doubt, discharge their duties with all the wariness of which human nature is susceptible; but there might be cases in which mistakes might escape their notice, and might be more readily detected by other persons and made known to the highest authority. We repeat that if the same prompt regard be hereafter shown to the writings of the press as has been done by Sir James' Government now, it will be a power for good and not for evil. Whatever may have been the errors of Sir James' Government in the first two or three years of his career (and the world knows to whose presence they were mainly due), we are certain some of His Excellency's acts in the last and the current year are such as show that His Excellency is determined to make the close of his career highly popular by a timely vindication of truth and justice. "The act showeth the man better than words," and no grandiloquent speeches or high-sounding resolutions could have shown the sincerity of Sir James Fergusson to govern the Presidency equitably and impartially as this one act of pure and simple justice. If public opinion had been as promptly taken notice of in the case of Kolhápur in 1881, we believe many an innocent person would have been saved the painful necessity of atoning for his courage in bringing matters to the notice of Government, and perhaps the unfortunate Shiváji would have been spared to us for some years more. But let bygones be bygones. We must rest satisfied with what His Excellency's Government is now doing, never mind what it did before, and we feel more than certain that if the same course of dispensing justice be continued, His Excellency will leave the shores of India loved by the people with as much gratitude as their most beloved Viceroy.

Approves of the decision of Government in the case of Dr. Banks and makes reflections on the importance of the Native press.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 6th April says:—Sir James Fergusson has given another instance of the scant sympathy which he entertains for officers of Government who in dealing with Natives take the law in their own hands. Both the local dailies concur in thinking that the punishment was unjustly severe. Even if the point be conceded for a moment that the punishment was too severe, we cannot bring ourselves to believe that a simple warning would have sufficed. Such warnings we have had many occasions to know the effect of. And if one of the ends of all punishments be to check illegality generally, it surely was quite justifiable to try the effect of a loss of a pecuniary income. Provocation will learn to control itself better if it has to expect a dismissal, not a simple warning. And what conduct can in the present case plead the justification of provocation? Not surely the flogging and the exaction of a compensation; for that took place long enough after the injury to allow ordinary anger to cool itself. In fact it appears that it was the chagrin at being unable to take the offenders to the magistrate alone through a country not over well-known that induced Dr. Banks to play the magistrate and weigh the merits of the case. On the other hand, the shock caused to the feelings of the villagers by the killing of the buck is deemed unworthy of being placed side by side with the provocation caused by Dr. Banks. All things considered we can easily reconcile ourselves to the punishment meted out to Dr. Banks by Sir James, as also to the rebuke administered to the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad and the Commissioner, N. D. One thing more in connection with this case deserves a passing notice, and that is the fact that the whole matter came to light in consequence of the notice taken of it by a Native journal. This circumstance, while it is gratifying to the whole Native press, ought to impress it with a sense of responsibility which it bears as the accredited exponent of Native thought and Native feelings and Native wants. Representing all these with fear, in language moderate, but not such as to mince matters, is our duty, and to that we should direct all our efforts. [The Native Opinion (10) of the 6th April says:—We unhesitatingly uphold the decision Government has arrived at in this case. Interested parties may deprecate it, because they cannot or will not realise the responsibility of a responsible Government. If people like Dr. Banks were to be let loose in the mofussil with a passport that all their actions, whether legal or illegal, will be freely condoned, woe be to all safety of property and life in the mofussil. We again say the Government resolution is most just and commands the sympathy of the whole Native community.]

Approves of the Government decision in the case of Dr. Banks of Ahmedabad.

The Rást Goftár (111) of the 6th April observes that if it is intended to provoke another mutiny, that end will be easily attained by encouraging Europeans to oppress Natives; and therefore the public advises the Government not to accept the recommendation of the Anglo-Indian newspapers to overlook the offences committed by Dr. Banks. The Wághri shikári of Dr. Banks complained to his master that the Rabáris of Juda attacked him, took away his rifle, carried away the buck shot by him, and beat him soundly. There were no witnesses to confirm his statement, which might either be false or exaggerated. Even granting that the statement represented real facts, Dr. Banks was not justified in doing what he did. The District Magistrate in his report to Government passed censure on Dr. Banks, but at the same time tried to extenuate his guilt. Mr. Reid stated that the statement made by the doctor was true, though he did not examine any witnesses to corroborate it. He however admitted that the Rabáris were very religious and respected animal life. With such a report before them Government could not in justice have taken any other course than the one which they actually adopted, and yet the Anglo-Indian papers censure them. On the other hand, the Native public praises Sir James Fergusson's Government for having taken the proper course to put down the oppression sometimes practised even by respectable Europeans on Natives and to restore confidence. The Times of India asks why Government should visit Dr. Banks with severe punishment when the villagers did not complain. The answer is that because timid Natives do not complain against such oppression, it is highly desirable that Government should take due notice of it. The Natives in the mofussil are treated by Europeans as beasts, because they are incapable of making their voice heard. Many instances of official oppression have occurred in the Ahmedabad District, and Government therefore were compelled to be severe in this case. Dr. Banks not only took the law into his own hands, but hurt the religious feelings of the Rabáris. Serious consequences would have followed from the doctor's proceedings if the villagers had been Rajputs or Mahomedans or Bhils instead of the mild Rabáris. [The Yajdán Parast (122), the Gujarát Mitră (77), the Kaiser-i-Hind (104) and the Gujaráti (97) of the same date express similar sentiments. The two last papers consider the sentence passed upon the doctor somewhat severe, and express a hope that Government will be good enough to reduce the punishment.]

Expresses satisfaction with the Government resolution dismissing Dr. Banks from the post of Civil Surgeon at Ahmedabad and a wish for visiting with the displeasure of Government certain local officials.

The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 10th April says:—The Bombay Government have manifested their desire for justice and spread satisfaction and loyalty among the mofussil public by their resolution dismissing Dr. Banks from the Civil Surgeoncy at Ahmedabad. Though the Government of Sir James Fergusson had set a good example against the oppression exercised by Europeans by punishing Mr. Hewett of the Revenue Survey Department at Ratnágiri, still the mofussil residents are much harassed by rash, inconsiderate and credulous Europeans. It is the duty of Government to deal impartially without having any regard for class distinctions or parties. Government have acted in the same spirit in the case of Dr. Banks. This action of Government has much increased the trust reposed in them by the mofussil public, which wishes for more examples of the kind with a view to restore confidence. The poor inhabitants of the mofussil worship as idols even mean European loafers who visit their villages, and supply them immediately with butter, sheep and other necessaries. The villagers tremble at their wrath and many a time do not even ask for payment. Those Europeans who are good pay them without being asked to do so, but occasionally the villagers do not receive payment for goods supplied by them. But the law-abiding people residing in the mofussil have never complained of it. This statement is borne out by the fact brought to light in the prosecution for libel of the Chandrodayă, a newspaper published some time ago at Ahmedabad, by Captain LaTouche. We cannot believe that any poor Native would speak against or behave rashly with such Europeans or their servants. We have found this out on enquiry. We gave only one-sided account of the case as received through an artifice from Dr. Banks' Wághri. In that account the poor villagers are charged with plunder, but the version clearly shows that the poor men have been oppressed beyond bounds. We therefore thank Government on behalf of the poor villagers for attending to the matter. But we think that if the Revenue Commissioner, N. D., and the District Magistrate Mr. Reid had in accordance with the orders of Government made an independent personal inquiry into the matter from the opposite party Government would have come to know many more things. But we are not now willing to say anything more on the subject from motives of mercy, though Dr. Banks has committed a very grave offence. Legally speaking Government have punished Dr. Banks very little in comparison to his offence; but when we had no hopes of this much even, we have no objection if our friends look upon the punishment as rather heavy. We would advise the poor villagers and the public to rest satisfied with what has been done in the matter. We do not think it right that Government should be satisfied with merely expressing regret for the opinion expressed by Mr. Reid. We have not seen a single satisfactory result in the many enquiries ordered by Government through Mr. Reid. The same is the case with the present enquiry. We do not think that he instituted with due care and impartiality the enquiry into the complaint made by about one hundred inhabitants of Ahmedabad against the chairman of the local municipality and city magistrate. When the public sees the same thing in another enquiry, we are compelled to say with regret that Government ought to reconsider the matter. Some strong measure ought specially to be taken against an officer who exercises control over an entire district and enjoys first class magisterial powers, and who, though cognizant of the oppression exercised, allows his friend or countryman to escape and the result of which is that the people remain displeased with Government. Though he was aware from the beginning of this unpleasant affair he did not move in the matter, and even when it appeared in public prints he did not of his own accord adopt proper measures. He deserves severe censure for supporting Dr. Banks in his serious offence in the report called for by Government. But when Government have let off him and the Revenue Commissioner with a severe rebuke, we ask the public to be satisfied with the decision, for the mofussilites did not expect even this much. If Government, however, were to transfer these officers from Ahmedabad for the sake of inspiring confidence and satisfaction among the people, we think that other officers would behave better hereafter. [The same paper, in another article, disapproves of the action of some of the local shethiás, who contemplate petitioning Government to show mercy to Dr. Banks. They ought to know that His Excellency the Governor has shown great mercy to him in not ordering a criminal prosecution against him. He entered the houses of the poor villagers without any authority and without any fault of theirs, stripped them naked and then whipped them, and committed the serious offence of extorting money from them. Moreover, he allowed deer to be killed by his Wághri before the very sight and in the vicinity of the village of the shepherds who respect animal life. The sepoy jivaidár (village watchman) of the police patel of the village asked for the production of the license for carrying the rifle, on failing to show which he confiscated it. The Wághri, with a view to revenge, misrepresented facts to Dr. Banks, on which, without making any enquiry or taking any care, he exercised oppression over the ignorant people. How virtuous are those then who ask for mercy for such a man? They ought to reconsider the matter and abstain from asking Government to do an unjust act. The same paper, in another part, warns Europeans residing in the mofussil not to be too credulous and place implicit confidence in the statements of fishermen, butchers, Wághris, and other low-caste people and thereby bring themselves into trouble and the British rule into discredit. The facts which have now come to light are quite different from the real ones. The poor villagers were in no way guilty save that they asked the Wághri to show the license for carrying the rifle, and as he did not produce it they took it to the police patel of the village. These facts have remained in the dark owing to the enquiry being not perfect. Dr. Banks committed a heinous offence by believing the statement of his Wághri without ascertaining its truth. Mofussil Europeans ought also to abstain from bringing pressure to bear on their subordinates or from giving recommendations to their European friends with a view to influencing the administration of justice. The judges ought also to pay no attention to facts which are not disclosed in open court.]

Approval of the dismissal of Dr. Banks from civil employ and of the movement to petition Government to show mercy.

The Samsher Báhádur (112) of the 11th April approves of the resolution of the Bombay Government dismissing Dr. Banks from the post of Civil Surgeon of Ahmedabad, and says that Government have preserved the principle of sacred justice by punishing Dr. Banks with a view to set an example to other rash European officers. Sir James Fergusson deserves honour for this. The Samsher expresses disapproval of the attack made on Government by the Times of India and says that it is unwise and irritating to the Natives that instead of praying for mercy some of the Anglo-Indian papers should resort to an attack on Government. The punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks is certainly not heavy when compared to his offence, but it is heavy in respect of the loss entailed on him thereby. If anybody is to be blamed for all this, Dr. Banks ought to blame his own luck. The Samsher does not wish on the grounds of the preservation of principles of justice and of setting an example to others that the punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks should be wholly remitted, but it has no objection to mercy being shown to him, as he and his family have repented for this unjust deed. Those Europeans who look with contempt on Natives ought to know, from the movement made by some leading citizens of Ahmedabad to petition Government to retain Dr. Banks at Ahmedabad and to reduce his punishment, how merciful and large-hearted Natives are and how kind they are to Europeans. [The Ahmedabad Samáchár (81) of the 9th April also expresses disapproval of the attack made by the Times of India on Government, denies that the punishment is heavy in comparison to that which would have been inflicted by a court of law for the grave offences committed by him, and says that Government have acted wisely in two ways by issuing this resolution. They have thereby increased the devotion of the Native public to British rule and led the people to believe that Government care for the people's safety and for the preservation of their rights. Haughty and strong-minded Europeans who oppress Natives will now stand in fear and know that they will be called to account for their unjust acts.]

Says that the ends of justice would have been met by transferring Dr. Banks to a less important station or by suspending him for a month or two from service.

In an article headed "Dr. Banks' case" the Indu Prakásh (9) of 7th April alludes to the resolution of the Government of Bombay, and remarks:—Taking, however, the facts as stated and admitted by Dr. Banks himself, it seems to us hard to allege anything criminal against the villagers and anything rendering them liable to a sentence of transportation, as observed by a contemporary. The Government were, under the circumstances of the case as brought officially to their notice, justified in observing in their resolution that "there is nothing to show" that there was anything "illegal and unjustifiable" in the conduct of the villagers "but the second-hand statement of the attendant" of Dr. Banks. He cannot reasonably rely upon that conduct in justification of his own. But while this is to be said against Dr. Banks, it is fair to concede in his favour that the account brought to him by the shikári was such as to put him out of temper for a time, and for a time only, and provoke him to revenge himself upon the villagers. In proceeding to the village of Juda and searching for the rifle which had been taken away, he may be said to have done nothing particularly objectionable. According to the strictly legal view it might be that he was not justified in searching a dwelling-house, unaided by the police, to recover his property, as the resolution puts it. But the rifle not belonging to him, and his shikári having given him an account calculated to embitter him against the villagers, this part of his conduct does not seem to us open to any very severe criticism. Provocation ought to be a sufficient plea so far. But the provocation lasted longer than it ordinarily should have. After the search, Dr. Banks had time to think better of what he should do. Instead of that, he took charge of the men and committed himself to a course of conduct which laid him open to the charge of wrongful confinement and extortion. There was a time for a calmer view of the affair being taken, but Dr. Banks did not avail himself of it. Here it is that his conduct becomes objectionable, and in justification of it he cannot reasonably plead provocation. What followed indeed after Dr. Banks had caused the villagers to be soundly thrashed and fined on his own responsibility shows that in dealing with the villagers in that illegal manner he was acting not through any vindicative spirit or under provocation but under the impression that there was nothing illegal in what he was doing. For, after having let the men free, he returned to the nearest Magistrate's camp and made over to him the amount received as compensation from the villagers "to be disposed of according to law." This does not excuse his conduct altogether; it does not save him from the legal responsibility, though it may seem to assist him so far as to acquit him to some extent of an intention to deliberately revenge himself on the villagers out of sheer vindictiveness. But a public officer of Dr. Banks' position can hardly and with fairness urge that he was ignorant of the fact that he could not take the law into his own hands. And the Government were therefore quite justified in making an example of him. Such a conclusion is justified by the facts as officially reported. We however agree that in this view of the case it would have been a sufficient vindication of justice if the Government had transferred him from Ahmedabad to a less known station or suspended him for a month or two from service instead of removing him altogether from civil employ. His conduct did call for something beyond a sharp rebuke and the expression of grave displeasure from the Government; at the same time his unhappy ignorance of the fact that he could sit in judgment upon the villagers and set up a sort of court-martial over them—an ignorance the existence of which is supported by the readiness with which he entrusted the amount taken from the villagers as compensation to the Magistrate to be disposed of according to law and made no secret of what he had done,—would seem to justify the view we have taken of this case.

Says that the punishment of Dr. Banks is unnecessarily severe and observes that the ends of justice would have been met by transferring him to a less important station.

The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 7th April alludes to the Government resolution on Dr. Banks' case and says:—The dismissal of Surgeon-Major Banks from civil employ and his relegation to military duty inflicts upon him a very considerable pecuniary loss which is out of all proportion to the offence with which he is charged. That Surgeon-Major Banks acted in an improper and illegal manner, and that he richly deserved to be severely censured and punished, cannot be and is not denied, but in the same way it is obvious to the understanding of any ordinary man that Surgeon-Major Banks has been dealt with by Government with unnecessary and undue severity. Even this disproportionate severity would have been justifiable if such cases as the one in which Surgeon-Major Banks has been implicated had been very frequent in their occurrence. But to the credit of the Bombay Civil and Military Services it must be frankly admitted that cases of this or similar kind are very rare; in fact it may be truly observed that Dr. Banks' case is the first of its kind. Under these circumstances it was not at all necessary to have visited Dr. Banks' offence with undue severity with a view to make an example of him to others who may be similarly disposed to go wrong. It is evident then that that element which would have justified an exemplary treatment of such a case was wanting, and therefore it would have been better if the Government of Bombay had taken into consideration the surrounding circumstances which go to extenuate Dr. Banks' offence, and also the additional circumstance that this was the first time that he had been generally commended for the discharge of his duties. It is necessary, we think, that whenever justice has to be meted out to anybody, that justice should be modified by mercy as far as possible except on those rare occasions when the enormity of the offence committed is altogether unredeemed by any surrounding circumstances of an extenuating character. The offence laid to the charge of Surgeon-Major Banks does not fall under the latter category, and we think the ends of justice would be met if Government modify their orders in a manner to admit of the employment of Dr. Banks as Civil Surgeon at a station of second rate importance, and this too temporarily. Let the punishment be proportionate to the offence, and everyone will be satisfied.

Says that the punishment of Dr. Banks is somewhat too severe.

In alluding to the Government resolution on Dr. Banks' case, the Din Bandhu (5) of the 6th April says:—We entirely agree with the opinion expressed in the resolution that by no form of law an aggrieved person in such circumstances can search a dwelling house without the assistance of the police to recover his property, and that although the greater part of Gujarát is unenclosed and the country-people as a rule suffer European gentlemen shooting game on their land, yet it does not follow that they will be equally indulgent to a single Native, a stranger to them, doing so. The resolution also administers a severe rebuke to Dr. Banks and removes him from civil employ. It is quite true that such high-handedness and lawlessness by a European officer should not be at all tolerated, but it would not be perhaps wrong to say that the removal of Dr. Banks from the service is rather a severe punishment. Would not his reduction in the grade have been a permanent and sufficient punishment? And would it not have served the right object of Government to prevent a recurrence of the ludicrous occurrence? But we cannot conclude this article without asserting that the Government resolution is certainly an impartial document dealing with the case.

Says that the punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks is not severe.

In noticing the report that several influential inhabitants of Ahmedabad regret the severe punishment inflicted by the Bombay Government on Dr. Banks and are about to submit a memorial to Government praying for a reduction in the punishment, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 10th April observes that the sentence passed upon the doctor is not at all severe. Looking to the interests of the Natives involved in the case the punishment is quite appropriate. The friends of the doctor would like to see the punishment reduced, and it is very natural they should request Government to do so. But before they ask for mercy they should admit the justness and appropriateness of the sentence. An Anglo-Indian newspaper asserted the other day that a judicial trial was held in the case and therefore Dr. Banks does not deserve the punishment inflicted on him. But the sentence passed upon him is not the punishment of imprisonment or fine: he has been transferred from one post to another. A trial of the doctor is desired by his European friends apparently on the ground that a jury of his own countrymen will not fail to be lenient to him, as it has been in numerous trials of accused Europeans. The so-called influential Natives of Ahmedabad ought to be careful that in asking merciful treatment of the doctor they do not overlook the interests of Natives.

Requests Government to reduce the severe punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks, the Civil Surgeon of Ahmedabad.

In noticing the case of Dr. Banks of Ahmedabad, the Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 6th April observes that after taking into account the circumstances pleaded by Government when condemning the conduct of Dr. Banks, and making every allowance for those suggesting the view it took of the same, the public must feel some sympathy for the officer who has been removed from his post, and will not endorse without reservation the course pursued by the Government. If the latter had severely reprimanded Dr. Banks or removed him from Ahmedabad to some other station after dealing out the reprimand, without subjecting him to disgrace and permanent heavy pecuniary loss, that would have sufficed fully to uphold the law and to preserve intact the confidence of the public in the power and desire of Government to protect its subjects. As the case now is, the Government is held to have acquitted itself in a manner unduly severe. The severity of the punishment has only served to evoke general sympathy in favour of the sufferer, whose long and meritorious services to the State and good behaviour in public and private life, not to say his uniform kindly disposition, are subjects of marked notice in the circles where he is at all known. The wish seems to be pretty general that Government may be pleased to reconsider its decision with a view to mitigate considerably the heavy sentence passed on Dr. Banks, especially as he has shown regret for his fault, which again is the first and only one of a deserving officer.

The Fracas at the Charni Road Level-crossing.

Approves of the amicable settlement arrived at in the case of the recent fracas at the Charni Road level-crossing.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 6th April says:—All is well that ends well, and we are glad Captain Fergusson has admitted his mistake, while Colonel Brown, Superintendent of Police, has rightly assisted his myrmidons. The characteristic feature of the whole affair is that the constables at the crossing, Natives as they were, showed an amount of pluck and briskness that does them credit. For the Native constable generally, the catching of a European offender has an instinctive horror, though it is hard to say whether it is innate or drilled into him. But we hope the recent occurrence will give them new courage, and whenever such an occurrence takes place they will not pusillanimously make themselves scarce from the spot, but will have the courage to assert themselves, be the offender a European or a Native.

Is glad that the assault case at the Chaupáti railway crossing has come to an end.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 6th April observes that the correspondence about the assault committed on the police at the level crossing at Chaupáti shows that Captain Fergusson has been ready to confess his fault in the matter and to express his regret for it. His amende honorable is considered satisfactory by Colonel Brown, the head of the Railway Police, who however, while upholding his subordinates in their attempt to do their duty, would seem to feel that the sepoy who provoked Captain Fergusson to use force against him was not free from an act of indiscretion. The whole affair, however, may be said to be at an end, which is such as to serve as a warning to all respectable people not to enact similar scenes.

Says that Sir James Fergusson is not likely to take no notice of the assault made by Captain Fergusson on the policemen at the Chaupáti railway level crossing.

With reference to the same the Rást Goftár (111) of the 6th April censures the local English papers for overlooking the occurrence for more than a week, and observes that the Captain's own statement shows that he entered upon the line while the crossing gates were being closed. He entered the gate when the train was due and in spite of the opposition made by the policemen. He also made an assault on them and attempted to unchain the gate. He moreover refused to give his name and address when asked to do so. Thus it seems that his conduct amounted to a trespass upon the line, and he was guilty of endangering the lives of the passengers in the approaching train. Had one of the policemen not taken the precaution to give the danger signal a serious accident would have occurred. Captain Fergusson admitted his fault and asked for pardon in a letter addressed to Colonel Brown, and the latter has accepted the apology after passing some censure on the Captain's conduct. No further steps have been taken. The Times of India finds fault with His Excellency the Governor for taking no notice of the occurrence. It appears that the matter did not reach the ears of His Excellency before he went. Sir James is not likely to pass over the faults of Captain Fergusson because he is His Excellency's nephew and Aid-de-camp.

Hopes that His Excellency the Governor will take due notice of the affray at the railway crossing at Chaupáti.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 6th April observes that the European officer on the Governor's staff who made an assault on the policemen at the railway level crossing at Chaupáti gave his name and address to the policemen. Some persons appear to believe that he did not give his name and address, but this is a mistake. He gave the information as he stepped into his carriage. Many of the persons who were assembled on the occasion recognized him. It is very strange therefore that neither the city nor the railway police have filed a complaint against him before the magistrate. It is to be regretted that the person who delayed a railway train for half an hour and endangered the lives of the passengers—an offence punishable with seven years' imprisonment—should not have been prosecuted. Since Sir James Fergusson has severely punished Dr. Banks, he will not, it is to be hoped, fail to take due notice of the offence committed by one of the officers on his own staff. [After writing the above the Gujaráti learnt from the Bombay English dailies that the officer mentioned above is Captain Fergusson, and that an explanation has been rendered by him. The Gujaráti censures the Times of India for not alluding to the affray until it was goaded to do so by the advocacy of Dr. Banks' cause.]

Makes some remarks in connection with the affray between Captain Fergusson and the policemen at the railway level crossing at Chaupáti.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 7th April observes that even accepting the defence made by Captain Fergusson in connection with the fracas with the policemen at the railway level crossing at Chaupáti, it looks strange that the policemen should have refused to open the other gate to allow the carriage of a European gentleman to pass on which had already entered one gate. Railway policemen are obsequious to Europeans. They allow them to break the strict railway rules in order to secure their favour; and hence it cannot be believed that the policemen at the crossing were so impudent as they are said to have been to Captain Fergusson. Colonel Brown appears to entertain the same doubt, and it is therefore strange that he should have allowed the matter to drop. What authority has Colonel Brown to compound a criminal offence? In this case he has encroached upon the powers of the Railway Magistrate and is guilty of a more serious fault than was committed by the District Magistrate of Ahmedabad in the case of Dr. Banks. Government ought to visit Colonel Brown with due punishment. Captain Fergusson admits that as he was annoyed at the conduct of the policemen he made an assault upon them, but it has been also proved that they beat him mercilessly. This conduct of the policemen deserves severe notice, and it is to be hoped that Sir James Fergusson will not fail to notice it.

Railways.

Censures the G. I. P. Railway Company for being partial to its European and Eurasian servants.

In alluding to the report that the G. I. P. Railway Company proposes to employ such Natives only as have passed the Matriculation Examination of the Bombay University, a correspondent of the Yajdán Parast (122) of the 6th April observes that several European and Eurasian servants of the Company cannot read and write English, or even speak it correctly. If the above rule is to be brought into force it should be held applicable to Natives and Europeans alike. The B. B. & C. I. Railway Company has proved beyond contradiction that efficient Natives, who are paid much less than Europeans, do better work than the latter. But the G. I. P. Railway authorities observe unjustifiable race distinctions and have laid themselves open to censure.

Disapproves of the scheme for subjecting old and tried clerks of the G. I. P. Railway Company who have served for years to an examination in certain elementary subjects.

The Native Opinion (10) of 6th April says that the authorities of the G. I. P. Railway in Bombay intend to subject all clerks who are already in the service or wish to enter their service to an examination in certain elementary subjects. The examination, it is said, is to be confined to six subjects and the questions are to be worked in fifty-five minutes. The Native Opinion considers the schedule of examination most absurd and the time allotted for answering questions altogether insufficient. Instead of subjecting Native clerks to undergo such a terrible ordeal, it would be better to turn them adrift at once. Considering the nature of the work which clerks in the employ of the G. I. P. Railway Company have to perform, there is no need for instituting such an examination as is contemplated; but even if such a measure is thought necessary, no necessity exists for subjecting old and tried clerks who have served for several years to such an examination. The Native Opinion considers that candidates for employment who have passed the public service certificate examination or the Matriculation of the Bombay University ought not to be subjected to this examination. They need not to be tested in any other subject except their handwriting.

A complaint against the Bhávnagar-Gondal Railway.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 10th April complains of the absence of fencing on the sides of, and want of gates and gatesmen at level crossings on, the Bhávnagar-Gondal Railway. The construction of gates at level crossings will not cost much. It is unpardonable that valuable lives should be brought into jeopardy by such niggardliness or negligence. It is necessary that an additional waterman should be kept at every station on the line in the hot season with the view of supplying water to passengers. Women and children cry out for water, but all of them cannot be supplied with it by one man during the short time that the train stops at the different stations.

Municipalities.

Says that improvements in the fort should not be made before removing the grievances of the inhabitants of the native quarters of Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 8th April observes that the proposal of the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay to make a road from the seashore to the Hummam and Apollo streets in order to open that quarter of the fort to the sea breeze should not be adopted until after the quarters of the town inhabited by Natives have been freed from the nuisances from which they are suffering. The sanitation of those quarters of the town in which Natives reside is not properly looked after, and they are allowed to remain in a dirty condition, nor are they provided with a sufficient supply of water, nor are their roads properly watered. These and other complaints of the Native constituents ought to be removed before any improvements in the comforts and ornamentation of any quarters of the fort are taken up. The Jáme of the 9th April remarks that the well-known house of Mr. Padamwála, opposite to the Presidency Pay Office, blocks the passage of fresh sea breeze to the crooked lane behind it, and if this building and the one behind it were purchased and demolished and a public road made on the ground occupied by them, a fresh sea breeze would reach as far as Bamanji Wádia's fountain in the Bazár Gate Street, which is very thickly inhabited by Pársis and Hindus. This work will cost a considerably smaller sum than the improvements intended to be made in the Hummam and Apollo streets. [A correspondent of the Jáme of the 11th April observes that the Koliwár and the Harmán Gali streets in the fort and the Bhoiwáda street near Bhuleshwar are very narrow and thickly populated and are in sad need of improvement. The road leading from Mhátárpákhádi to Dárukhána at Mázagaon Bandar has fallen into disrepair and has become dangerous. A heavy carriage and passenger traffic passes on this road from early in the morning till late at night, and yet it is neglected. The roads of this part of the town are not watered and the dust which accumulates on them has become a great nuisance. These grievances ought to be removed before paying any attention to the improvement of the Hummam and Apollo streets.]

Cruelty exercised on dumb animals at Surat.

The Surat Akhbár (79) of the 7th April complains of the cruelty exercised on dumb animals at Surat. Hungry and emaciated animals are loaded with 30 to 40 maunds and are constantly goaded with an iron pike an inch long. All municipalities have regulations on the subject of loading carts, giving numbers to conveyances plying for hire, and fixing the fares. But there is nothing of the kind at Surat, the reason for which cannot be found out. The dumb creatures deserve pity.

Native States.

Remarks about the state of affairs at Kolhápur.

The Shiváji (61) of 4th April says that although injustice has been done in ignoring the claims of those who had the strongest and best right to the gádi of Kolhápur, yet it must be admitted that the selection of the son of the Chief of Kágal as the future ruler of the Kolhápur State is a wise proceeding. It is very fortunate that the natural father of the young prince is his guardian as well as the head of the Kolhápur administration. It is to be hoped that the minority will be of short duration. Nobody will say that Ába Sáheb Kágalkar is not competent to discharge the onerous duties of his position as Regent. But notwithstanding his well-known ability, it is alleged that the administration of the Kolhápur territory is not so satisfactory as it ought to be. It is said that the Regent is entirely guided by the Political Agent of Kolhápur. The Shiváji does not mean to say that the Regent should not listen to the advice of the Political Agent, but he should not lose his independent position. The duty of the Regent is to look primarily to the interests of the Kolhápur State. This, however, is far from being the case. It is said that the inhabitants of the Kolhápur territory are not contented. If this be so, the state of things does not do credit to the Regent's administration. No noise is made with respect to the dissatisfaction prevalent in Kolhápur because the Regent allows himself to be entirely governed by the Political Agent who is appointed to supervise him. The newspapers which would have published complaints do not do so now on account of the result of the prosecutions in the libel case against Mr. Barve, and because they have been got over somehow by the Regent. The silencing of complaints by such means will not redound to the credit of the Regent. He should endeavour to govern righteously instead of giving money in different ways to newspapers.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
15*th April* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Expression of a wish that a commission should be appointed to enquire into and report upon the defects of the existing — system ... 6
Case of oppression on the steamer Bhima: Description of a —, which left Bombay for Goa and intermediate stations on 3rd April last ... 7
Civil Service of India:
  Disapproval of the refusal of the Secretary of State for India for increasing the limit of age for the entrance examination of the— 3
  Expression of regret at the Secretary of State for India having refused to alter the rules fixing the age of the candidates for the— 3
Educated Natives: Expression of opinion that the manners of the present generation of — are the natural outcome of a number of political and intellectual influences, the growth of which cannot be permanently chilled by rivalry and carping 3
European soldiers: Complaint that — annoy and assault foot-passengers on the road between Sátára and Máhuli 8
Judicial matters: Preference for the establishment of a Sessions Court at Nadiád instead of at Kaira 7
Land revenue assessments:
  Approval of the recent resolution of the Government of Bombay giving an exposition of its policy in regard to—
    The Bombay Chronicle 6
    The Gujaráti 6
  Remarks in connection with the cost and duration of the Survey and Settlement Department 5
Lepers in the Bombay Presidency: Expression of opinion that — should be located in places far away from populated localities in order to reduce their number, which has been increasing of late years 8
Police: Request to the — authorities of Ahmednagar to put a stop to the reprehensible practice of overloading bullock carts prevalent in that city 8
Polo:
  Complaint regarding the fresh concession made to the — players about playing polo on the esplanade 6
  Complaint that the Native cricketers have been virtually driven away from the esplanade in Bombay for the convenience of some six European — players 7

PART II.—Removal of Dr. Banks from the Civil Surgeoncy of Ahmedabad:

Approval of the decision of Government 10
  Ditto ditto and reflections on the importance of the Native press 9
Approval of the — and of the movement to petition Government to show mercy 12
Expression of opinion that the ends of justice would have been met by transferring Dr. Banks to a less important station or by suspending him for a month or two from service 13
Expression of opinion that the punishment of Dr. Banks is unnecessarily severe and that the ends of justice would have been met by transferring him to a less important station 13
Expression of opinion that the punishment of Dr. Banks is somewhat too severe 14
Expression of opinion that the punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks is not severe 14
Expression of satisfaction with the resolution of Government and of a wish for visiting with displeasure of Government certain local officials 11
Remarks on the —, on the importance of the press, and on the administration of Sir James Fergusson 8
Request to Government to reduce the severe punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks 15

Page.

PART III.—Fracas at the Charni Road Level crossing:

Approval of the amicable settlement arrived at in the case of the recent—
The Bombay Chronicle 15
The Native Opinion 15
Expression of opinion that Sir James Fergusson is not likely to take no notice of the— 15
Expression of a hope that His Excellency the Governor will take due notice of the— 16
Remarks in connection with the— 16

PART IV.—Railways—

Bhávnagar-Gondal Railway: A complaint against the— 17
G. I. P. Railway Company:
Censure on the—for being partial to its European and Eurasian servants 16
Disapproval of the scheme for subjecting old and tried clerks of the—who have served for several years to an examination in certain elementary subjects 17

PART V.—Municipalities—

Bombay: Expression of opinion that improvement in the fort should not be made before removing the grievances of the inhabitants of the Native quarters of— 17
Surat: Cruelty exercised on dumb animals at— 18

PART VI.—Native States—

Kolhápur: Remarks about the state of affairs at— 18

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C. R.
18208
INDIA OFFICE
13 MA 1884

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 19th April 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
12	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
13	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
14	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
15	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
16	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
17	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
18	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
19	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
20	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*21	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*22	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*37	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
38	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
39	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
40	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
41	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
42	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
43	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*50	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
51	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*53	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*54	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
57	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
58	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
59	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*60	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
61	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*62	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 127

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*66	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
67	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
69	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
70	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*71	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*73	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*74	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
75	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*76	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
77	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
78	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
79	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
80	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
81	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
82	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
83	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
84	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*85	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
86	„ Bombay Púnch	Bombay	Weekly	500
87	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
88	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
89	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
90	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
91	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
92	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
93	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*94	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
95	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
96	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
97	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*98	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
99	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*100	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
101	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
102	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
103	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*104	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
105	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
106	„ Lok Mitră	Do.	Weekly	800
107	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
108	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
109	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
110	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
111	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
112	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
113	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*114	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*124	, Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1735, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Remarks on the impoverishment of India.

In an article headed "Indian Pauperism, Free-trade, and Railways," the Native Opinion (10) of the 13th April alludes to the paper read by Mr. Connell before the East India Association in March last, and says :—It is all along patent that the Indian ryot is getting impoverished day by day. Though certain qualities of his own have contributed to his ruin, yet we think that these foreign civilizers have greatly to answer for his present abject condition. Our civilizing process has, it must be admitted, been too fast for us. Instead of our being invigorated by internal tonics, we have been constantly smeared with cosmetic to make us look ruddy. It is quite evident that all these appliances for opening India and stimulating her trade carry away India's blood in larger quantities than they put into her. India no doubt at first sight presents a glowing appearance. All the outward signs of civilization are here present, and no doubt she is carrying on a roaring trade. But whom does that trade belong to ? To the foreigner, it must be admitted. Though we are not prepared to go to the length Mr. Connell has gone and to attribute to our rulers selfish motives, yet we must say that the result is as true as he has demonstrated. We have often said that all these good-intentioned attempts for our regeneration are making us play into the hands of the English capitalists. Our outward appearance is indeed promising, but those who look attentively will not fail to detect that it is but the hectic flush that glows on India's face while consumption has caught hold of her centres of life. It sounds like a paradox, but is nevertheless true, that British rule, by giving security to India, has in a manner increased her evils, and that the railways have enhanced them. India is naturally a poor country and security of life and property has increased her poverty. Her population has increased frightfully, and unless provided for in some way threatens to land the country into disaster. In times of insecurity there were so many checks upon population that it never increased beyond the food supply. Constant warfare mowed it down and restrained it within due bounds. Again the country being purely agricultural, the increase of population has increased the pressure on the soil. In former times wars and local industries relieved this pressure and left a comparatively small number to feed upon land. But now all these local industries being stopped effectually by railways and free trade and the like, there is nothing left to our cultivators but to starve. Absence of capital and ignorance make them unfit to participate in the benefits of foreign capital and security deprives them of the means of checking population. Formerly before the introduction of foreign theories India was a self-supporting country. All that was reasonably required to support life comfortably was found within easy distance and there was happiness in the land. But when we were found thus idling our time in comfort our western rulers took compassion on our inactivity, and being imbued with economic ideas tried to apply to us wholesale the rules of political economy without a thought as to the requisite modifications rendered necessary by different circumstances. And the result is what we at present witness. The wealth of the country is in the hands of the foreigner and the masses are grovelling in the direst poverty. Free trade and competition were introduced and in a moment our industries have vanished and we are made to depend upon foreigners for supplying us with the merest necessaries of life. We have no doubt that our rulers are actuated with the best of motives. But some of their doings have given a direct support to the charges which Mr. Connell has launched against them. The recent abolition of the duties on Manchester piece-goods is a glaring instance of the kind. While the country was groaning under poverty it was thought expedient to abolish an important portion of its revenue. Such an unprincipled action, though unintentional, has deservedly exposed our Government to the charge of being careful only of English interests at the expense of India.

Disapproves of the refusal of Lord Kimberley to increase the limit of age for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th April says:—After the Secretary of State's unaccountable refusal to increase the limit of age for the entrance examination for the Indian Civil Service, it becomes the duty of every association in the country and every Native journal to press the question once more upon His Lordship's notice. Lord Kimberley is not much to blame for accepting the opinion of his colleagues that the Indians do not care for the reform. We must show how extremely anxious we are, not only in the interests of the candidates, but of good government that the age should be raised to the former standard. Lord Ripon is convinced of the justice of our demand, and if the wishes of the people are properly represented, we have little doubt that His Excellency will exert his utmost personally to obtain the reform. But people must ask for it, and ask in a manner not to be resisted. The great misfortune of the country is that its natural leaders do not act as they ought. In the matter of the Ilbert Bill they allowed precious opportunities to slip, and now they blame the Government for not having done this and that. The younger generation, who are more active and perhaps less selfish, have no discretion. They ask for fifty things in one breath and get laughed at in return. Take up questions one by one, those that are ripe for discussion first. It is no use asking for the impracticable. The best of friends cannot do what is impossible under the circumstances. This question of age is quite ripe, and it will be our own fault if we don't have it soon settled in our favour. Much larger is the question of holding simultaneously examinations in England and in India, and that must perhaps wait awhile. But no time should be lost in pressing the reform once more upon the Secretary of State. [The Suryă Prakásh (80) of the 12th, the Gujaráti (97) and the Yajdán Parast (122) of the 13th, the Bombay Samáchár (81), the Káside Mumbai (104) and the Surat Akhbár (79) of the 14th, the Akhbáre Sodágar (81) of the 15th and the Deshi Mitră (92) and the Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 17th April disapprove of the reply and advise the people of India to again memorialise the Home Government on the subject.]

Remarks in connection with Lord Kimberley's reply regarding the limit of age for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service.

In an article headed "The limit of age of the candidates for the Civil Service," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th April says:—The reply of Lord Kimberley should not, however, damp the spirits of those who think that the reform which he has denied is most desirable in the interests of the administration of this country. The question may be asked, what does it matter to India if the present limit of age for the competitive examination is not raised, since this country has another way opened to its people for admission into the ranks of the Civil Service? It may be pointed out that the question can no longer directly affect Natives. They have, it may be alleged, every year a fixed number of young men from amongst them admitted into the service, which fixed number they should not be able to count upon if their admission were made dependent upon competitive examination. Why, it is asked, should they complain if the conditions of the examination are such as to preclude them practically from taking advantage of them? Those who hold themselves to this view of the case forget, however, that the question should be looked at from a higher point of view than that put forward by them. The whole question of the administrative well-being of India depends upon it, not the interests of those only from among the Natives who may hope to get into the ranks of the Civil Service by passing the competitive examination. The present limit of age is considered too low, and under it we get men raw and young with their heads crammed with knowledge of a number of subjects without the advantage of a regular and well-trained growth of their intellectual faculties. The question cannot therefore be allowed to remain in the unsatisfactory condition in which Lord Kimberely is disposed to let it remain. Again, the Statutory Civil Service has already been pronounced to be based upon a wrong foundation. The opinion of both Natives and Europeans is clearly known to be opposed to the principles on which nominations to that branch of the service are made. Selection, which means patronage with all its attendant vices, cannot be counted upon as a right and safe principle, and it is believed that Lord Ripon has the question before him for his consideration. Cannot our public bodies take up the question of age as affecting the competitive service and ask His Lordship to bestow his attention on both the questions and press for reform in both directions? The only reform which will meet the case of the Statutory Civil Service is by throwing it open to competition like the other branch of it. Both should be treated on the same footing, and the interests of both, and still more the interests of the country, demand that those who seek admission into the ranks of either are fitted in every way to bear the responsible part they may be called upon to take in the government of this empire.

Says that the people of India ought to strengthen the hands of Lord Ripon by adopting memorials to the Secretary of State for India on the necessity of increasing the limit of age of the Civil Service candidate.

The Prabhákar (11) of the 15th April says:—The question about the desirability of raising the age of the Civil Service candidate is exercising the minds of the natives of India. The refusal of the Secretary of State to consider it has pained us as deeply as it has done the rest of our fellow-countrymen. But it will be to no purpose to sit quiet nursing our grief. The subject is one of the highest importance, involving as it does a great principle. We should not throw the whole onus of the burden on Lord Ripon, whose unaided efforts will avail nothing with the home authorities, unless the country as a whole moves in the matter. It is the duty of every Native association to represent the wishes of India to the authorities. We are assured that Lord Ripon holds most decided opinions on the subject, and that he will continue to do all in his power to induce Lord Kimberley to reconsider the matter. But the Secretary of State and his Council will pay ten times more attention to the House of Commons than to any representations Lord Ripon may make, especially if the latter does not succeed in securing the unanimous concurrence of his Council. If therefore our readers really care about the question, now is the time for them to strengthen the Viceroy's hands by sending numerous and influential memorials couched in moderate language and addressed to the Secretary of State. It should be shown that a general and strong interest is felt in the matter. If there be no demonstration of the kind we suggest, the authorities will take it for granted that the people are not interested in the matter. While we have a Viceroy of Lord Ripon's good disposition and high principles we should be culpable indeed if we did not make the most of our opportunities.

Makes suggestions for the reformation of the Council of the Secretary of State for India.

In an article headed "Reform of the Indian Council," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th April says:—To our mind it seems quite indispensable that the Council should be placed upon a better footing. With its limited powers it may be a question whether the existence of the Council itself is at all desirable or useful. But we cannot bring ourselves to think that its total abolition will meet with approval in Parliament. It is too radical a measure to be readily acceptable. The traditions of the Board of Control and the Court of Directors will probably be found too strong to permit the total abolition of their successor. But assuming its existence necessary, we think it should be extended so as to make it obligatory on the Secretary of State to consult it on certain occasions and to follow the opinion of the majority. In any case the personnel of the Council should be so composed as to put the Secretary of State in possession of all the requisite information relating to India. For this we propose that the Council should consist of members half nominated by the British Government and half elected by the different provinces of India. The nominees of Government may as at present be chosen from the class of retired Anglo-Indians. The elected members may be chosen from among the members of the Civil Service serving in India or eminent Native gentlemen capable of adequately representing the interests of their respective provinces. The term of office of all members should not exceed five years, but they should be eligible to be re-elected or re-nominated as the case may be. The cost of nominated members will stand as at present; that of the elective members should be paid from the provincial revenues. This distribution of the cost will no doubt increase the financial burden of India, but the better representation of interests which the arrangement will secure will, we think, be sufficient compensation for the increased cost. The infusion of new blood every five years will keep the Council abreast of the latest information regarding India's wants. The Secretary of State will receive more real assistance, and the prospect of an election for the membership of the Council may be an inducement for many Anglo-Indians in India to govern in the interests of the people.

Comments in connection with the advance of Russia in Central Asia and the worthlessness of any diplomatic arrangements in connection therewith.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th April, in an article headed "The Russian advance from the historical point," says:--Two weeks ago we showed how impossible it was for Russia, even if she tried, to halt half way in Central Asia. We said that history must repeat itself, that what the Romans did in Asiatic Turkey, what the British did during last century in India, the Russians must do in Central Asia. It is satisfactory now to observe that almost all the more moderate papers in England are discussing the question with intelligence and a clear insight. If there be one thing more than another that is freely acknowledged by the writers it is the worthlessness of any diplomatic arrangements. These have proved delusive over and over again. The Russians are discredited so far as their solemn promises and assurances go. These are only binding so long as no fresh opportunity is offered to violate them. England's difficulties in other parts of the globe have been Russia's opportunities. The Cossack has advanced nearer and nearer the confines of Afghanistan. Now all this must be admitted, and there is nothing very strange about it. Can history show a single instance of a great military power, either in times ancient or modern, that has adhered to its promise in such cases? Has England done so in her acquisition of the provinces of India? Can righteous England conscientiously say at this moment that in her civil relations with the 200 millions of the subject races of India she has always acted up to her promises and assurances, up to her charters and proclamations? Are the orders of the Crown strictly obeyed by its servants in India? Why, then, so much righteous indignation at the perfidy of the Russians? Is it not true, after all, that in spite of virtuous resolutions, in spite of pious proclamations, promising equal justice and so forth, England has often failed in practice to fulfil her kindly intentions? Everywhere in the world might is right. You freely confer equal rights on paper, you talk of impartiality, you talk of qualification and fitness without race or creed: and yet do we not see in your actions the principle of might overriding right? Then in the name of goodness, why inveigh against Russia's breach of promise, her perfidy and so on, as if she were the only nation on earth that was guilty of the crime? You say Russia is semi-barbarous. Well, that is an extenuating circumstance in her favour. But England is a civilised nation. She holds perpetually the moral handkerchief before her millions of Indian subjects. But does she always practise what she preaches? Now we are by no means unmindful of the superiority of British administration to any other we could think of. We do not mean to imply that we have cause to be quite dissatisfied with our present rulers. What we above assert is the impartial truth of history. The shortcomings of our foreign rulers in the administration of this vast country of many heterogeneous races and creeds are partly inevitable. With the gradual education of the average Englishman at home on matters Indian, and the curtailment of the powers of bureaucracy here, we may see a better and more satisfactory form of government—a government that shall with stable order give equal justice and equal laws, and otherwise make the masses happy and contented by wise measures conducive to material and political advancement. The Spectator here refers to an article on the "Government of the Indian Empire" which appeared in the January number of the Edinburgh Review and remarks:—Is it not a fact, so far as Russia is concerned, above all other European powers, save the English, that she is in a way obliged by the very circumstances of her geographical and political situation in Europe for the last 150 years to extend her dominion eastward in Central Asia? With the Baltic Sea closed to intercommunication for nearly eight months in the year, with powerful states in Central Europe, with the Black Sea closed against her till very late, with no seaboard to connect her capital and the important towns, is it not natural that Russia should gravitate eastwards, with the view ultimately of reaching an open seaboard, either on the Persian Gulf or on the eastern Mediterranean or on the Indian Ocean? What may we infer from the conflagration that may sooner or later be expected to spread over the eastern horizon of Europe? That each of the competing powers has a preponderating influence seawards on the Mediterranean, or the Black Sea, or the Danube. Such being the political situation in Europe, it stands to reason that Russia, being the nearest towards Asia, should endeavour to press upon Central Asia and Persia and perhaps Afghanistan and India. It is the current of European politics that is irresistibly drawing Russia nearer and nearer India, and we are of opinion that no nostrum, military or political, in the shape of the occupation of either Herat or Kandahar, or the delimitation of the Persian and Afghan frontiers, will in any way check her advance. The position is the result of the political evolution that first commenced with the "Eastern Question" of 1828,—a question that all the wars that have been fought between that year and now and all the diplomacy of statesmen living and dead have not succeeded in solving. But the solution is mathematically certain. As the Edinburgh Review properly observes, "upon every principle of political dynamics it is clear" that Russia's onward movement "must continue and will probably gather strength as it goes." In the very nature of things it must. As there is the inexorable law of gravitation and the equally inexorable law that regulates the tides of the ocean, so too there is the inevitable law of political dynamics that must work out in process of time the problem of Russian supremacy in Central Asia. But those who have been loudest against such supremacy appear to be almost wholly blind to the same force that is changing the situation of Asia. If the prophets of evil are crying aloud against the danger to the British Indian empire, they seem to be crying in the wilderness and remain unaffected by the slow political changes working their course elsewhere. We have to ask those who glibly talk of the occupation of Herat or Kandahar to consider seriously the eventualities foreshadowed by the writer in the Review. We ask them whether for the safeguarding of the Indian empire such an occupation is at all desirable—whether when the British have occupied that city, India will be absolutely secure. Are the new elements now brewing, and which a day may bring forth, to be ignored? What about the safeguarding of India on the north-west? What about the Burmese frontier? What about the collision between Russia or France and China? True statesmanship will dictate that true political wisdom lies in the British remaining wholly on the side of the defensive within their own frontiers west, north and east. By all means fortify them and make them impregnable. The empire as now consolidated is large enough in itself to absorb all the energies which a line of far-sighted administrators can bring to bear on the task, and which the condition of the finances can permit. Stretching the natural frontiers to military outposts will in the long run prove disastrous. India cannot afford to occupy Kandahar or keep up communication with Herat. To make the latter city a base of future military operations will be, in our opinion, a suicidal step. We believe more in the civilising influence of a railway to Kandahar. But though European powers are now pressing on the soil of Asia hither and thither, it may yet be a question how far their hold may be permanent. They are yet at the threshold. There is as much certainty that Russia, foiled in Europe, may press more vigorously in Central Asia, Kashgar and Afghanistan, as there is the other certainty that she may not do so if the Czar can rule well on the Bosphorus. The writer in the Edinburgh Review therefore properly questions "whether these extensions are to be permanent?" Time only will solve the question. But whatever may be the future of Russian occupation in Central Asia and Afghanistan, whatever the consequences of her political dynamics, it will be a suicidal policy for our rulers either to occupy Herat or Kandahar or establish diplomatic relations or treaties with the Amir. All will go in vain, and in the hour of need England will rue the day that dictated such a policy. England must only be able and ready to hold the gates of India against all comers. In this policy alone lies her best wisdom. We mean the frontiers of India on the west; not the occupation of Herat or Kandahar. This argument ought alone to weigh with our rulers. "Nor is there anything new in the fact that apprehensions of external danger may rather strengthen than shake the position of a skilful and resolute administration." [The Gujaráti (97) of the same date does not like that undue haste should be made in the matter of taking precautions against the Russian advance. Looking at the present condition of Russia, her military power and financial position, it cannot be supposed that she will commit the folly of making a descent on India. It is true that she is making advances in Central Asia, but it remains to be seen how long she can retain her newly acquired territories. As long as the people of India remain loyal there is not the slightest danger to the British ráj; but whenever that danger comes its origin must be attributed to the mistakes of officials.]

Advises the adoption of effective measures for arresting the Russian progress in Central Asia in the direction of India.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 13th April, in referring to the advance of Russia in Central Asia, observes:—The demarcation of the Russian, Persian, and Afghan territories, and clear, definite, and solemn treaty engagements on the basis thereof, will not of course form the sum total of the safeguards to be provided against risks arising from Russian intrigues against the British power in India and the peace and prosperity of British subjects in the country. A distinct understanding should be arrived at with the Amir for permanent observance between him and the British Government, securing him in the possession of his throne, at least as long as he should prove faithful to that Government and govern his people tolerably well. At all events it will be to the interest of both the Amir and the British that the money subsidy and other material assistance given to him should be avowedly understood as being part of the price of his fidelity to the latter in the strict sense of that word. No unnecessary delay should be suffered to take place in respect of the matter, so as not to give Russia the chance of seizing Sarakh on pretexts similar to those relating to the seizure of Merv and other districts in Central Asia during the last forty years.

Says that the next loan of 2½ krors of rupees should be raised in India and not in England.

With reference to the recommendation made in some quarters that the loan of 2½ krors of rupees which the Government of India wish to raise shortly should be opened in England and not in India, the Kaiser-i-Hind (104) of the 13th April observes that the ground on which this recommendation is made is that the money market of Bombay and other presidency towns is very tight; but the tightness of the money market is no sign whatever that India has no ability to subscribe for any more loans. The rate of interest has just now run up so high as 11 per cent. in India; but this has occurred not on account of her straightened financial condition but on account of an increase in the demand for money for mercantile ventures. Moreover, Government have reduced their deposits in the presidency banks. Whenever a new loan is to be raised Government wait until the demand for money becomes slack, and then they place it on the market. Whenever the English money market becomes tight the rate of interest runs up high, but this result is never considered by any sane person as a sign of England's inability to absorb new loans.

Says that the right of trial by jury should be conceded to Natives.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 15th April observes that the natives of India have long been requesting Government to concede to them the right of trial by jury. The Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Act has extended the right of trial by jury previously enjoyed by Europeans; and though Natives did not like this extension they allowed the Ilbert Bill to be enacted without opposition under the belief that Lord Ripon's Government would not fail to concede the same right to them also. His Lordship also gave an assurance that the concession would be made, but no action has been taken in the matter. Natives are perfectly competent to make a right use of the concession, which is urgently needed in order to protect them from the severe sentences passed upon them by some European officers for petty offences. The movement made in England by the natives of India residing in that country deserves great praise, and ought to be supplemented by memorials from India.

Says that the punishment inflicted on a postal clerk by name Govindráo for not saying "good morning" to the Director-General of Post Offices and the Post Master General of Bengal is harsh and out of all proportion to his fault.

In a paragraph headed "A hard case" the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th April says:—The ways of authority are sometimes inscrutable! Mr. Kisch, the Officiating Post Master General of Bengal, has degraded a postal clerk by name Govindráo, who had been employed at Calcutta in connection with the International Exhibition, and stopped his promotion for one year, because he did not recognise the former and Mr. James, the Director-General of Post Offices, and "wish them good morning" when they visited the Exhibition. The postal clerk pleads that he did not know either Mr. James or Mr. Kisch and had never before seen them and so could not recognise them. One might have felt inclined to justify the order if the clerk's plea had been rejected. But Mr. Kisch admits its correctness, for in the same order he says:—"Of course he (Govindráo) did not know that he was speaking to the Director-General on the morning of the 12th instant, and certainly he would not for his own sake be intentionally rude or disobliging to either the Director-General or myself." Again the order goes on:—"No doubt, Govindráo looked upon Mr. James as a private seeker after information and saw no reason to put himself out in any way in order to oblige him." Nevertheless, Govindráo should suffer, because in the opinion of Mr. Kisch it is "a very common thing for clerks of post offices as well as of other public offices to be disobliging to persons (both European and Native) with whom they are in no way officially connected." The order is from any point of view unjust. If Mr. Kisch thinks that want of politeness is so general, why did he wait till he himself had to experience it? He ought to have issued instructions as a warning to his subordinates long before that, and then if any instance of the kind had happened he might well have taken the step which he has taken in the case of Govindráo. The punishment meted out to the clerk is quite out of proportion to the fault for which he has been punished.

Considers the punishment inflicted on a certain postal clerk at the Calcutta Exhibition for not saláming certain high officials in the Postal Department unnecessarily harsh and contrasts this treatment with that given to Dr. Banks.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 13th April, in a paragraph headed "A hard case," says:—Premeditated incivility to official superiors may deserve punishment, but we have it seems come to times when even unpremeditated incivility or rather want of civility towards superiors in consequence of ignorance of their position has become a part of the official penal code. The Director-General and the Post Master General of Bengal happen to go to the Exhibition Post Office. Their identity not being known to the clerk in charge of the post office he treats them as strangers, but gives them all the available information they need, but omits to salám them. This is enough to send both these high dignitaries into a rage; a resolution is at once issued and the man is degraded, his ignorance of their position notwithstanding. Now ought not the rendering of all information in due form to be considered as a set-off against incivility proceeding from ignorance? In the case of Dr. Banks an admitted offence was considered worthy of being condoned by the official hierarchy, but in the case of this poor clerk even his ignorance came to be considered as criminal. Now we ask in sober truth our contemporary of the local Times, whose keen knowledge of legal technicalities has made him so punctilious, whether in these two cases justice has not been administered by two different measures or whether uniformity in this respect is to be observed in the case of Europeans only. His Excellency Sir James Fergusson may still find an opportunity to punish Captain Fergusson and thus assuage the virtuous indignation of our contemporary if it has not been atoned for already by a frank confession. But let our contemporary in the meanwhile take up the case of this poor clerk, ponder over and examine it for his edification, and say whether it was Dr. Banks or the poor clerk that has been undeservedly dealt with.

The flogging of respectable boys and remarks in connection therewith.

The Prabhákar (11) of the 17th April says:—Flogging has been for time immemorial considered appropriate punishment for bad boys in school and disreputable men in the army. In the one case the disgrace attached to it has not been so widespread as in the latter. Some very respectable boys have lately been disgraced for ever by some ignorant and prejudiced officials. A case is now reported of a magistrate in Chittagong mistaking his vocation as a law dispenser and taking upon himself the calling of common policemen, who must have been immensely grateful to the officious and undignified official for his voluntarily lightening their functions. It would be a great saving to Government if all such over-zealous justices were to receive an extra allowance to go about the streets and inflict summary punishment "with their own hands" on all delinquents who may be caught red-handed in the act of law-breaking. It would be the saving of pay of a couple of common sepoys. Really the high-handedness of officials is increasing on all sides, and yet in spite of this men like Dr. Banks are retained in office and Anglo-Indians generally are allowed exclusive privileges. How are we to impress upon the stolid officials that public flogging is a disgraceful punishment, only inflicted upon low criminals and not upon the sons of respectable citizens? Evidently the Anglo-Indians who make such free use of it are not personally inexperienced in such matters. We ourselves witnessed a case in a remote cantonment station where this disgraceful punishment was inflicted by the order of a boy magistrate on a respectable Eurasian for a trifling offence, while the boy-magistrate stood there gloating on the effect of a power which the Executive Government invested him with, the magistrate being only a lad of between 19 and 20 years. Is it not astonishing that the British Government should value the reputation of their Indian subjects so lightly as to place them at the mercy of every juvenile official fresh from school or college unaccustomed to power and social position?

Complains that indigenous articles are not purchased in sufficient quantities for the use of Government.

The Akhbáre Sodágar (82) of the 14th April regrets that in spite of Lord Ripon's merciful and beneficent orders to buy country manufactures and articles for the use of the State departments, there has been during the past three years a gradual increase in the value of the articles purchased in England for the use of the Indian Government. This increase, observes the Sodágar, took place in regard to articles of native manufacture, such as pasteboards, paper, wearing apparel, leather goods, beer and porter, and an injustice has been done to India. The European officials in this country and the Secretary of State for India in England are responsible for this, as they show an improper partiality for English goods and an unjustifiable desire to benefit their mother country. The natives of India ought to request Government to remove this injustice.

Suggests the creation of agricultural scholarships to enable young natives of India to go to England and study scientific agriculture in that country.

In a paragraph headed "Agricultural Scholarships," the Native Opinion (10) of the 13th April says:—The Government of Sir Alfred Lyall has in the wake of that of Bengal sanctioned a sum of Rs. 3,000 as a grant towards the completion of the agricultural studies of one Shri Lál at the Royal College of Cirencester in England. Bombay pretends to be ahead of the North-West Provinces, and yet with all her boasted superiority she has not done anything worthy of herself in this direction to give to, or create a fair chance for, any of our willing graduates to complete agricultural studies at the above fountainhead of scientific agriculture. We hope Sir James will see his way to the creation of one or two scholarships in this department of education and give our young men an opportunity to venture on the black waters in the pursuit of this knowledge.

Strongly condemns the proposal made in some quarters for allotting uncultivable plots of land in India to landless English farmers and making them permanent tenants.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th April, in an article headed "A very cool proposal," says:—It is amusing to see that very cool proposal of the Calcutta correspondent in the columns of Mark Lane Express to convert the culturable waste lands of India "as a possible field for the enterprise and skill of landless farmers of England, and a means of increasing and securing our supplies of breadstuffs." Though many of the observations of the writer as to the deep-rooted conservatism of Indian people and the tyranny of caste, which partially retards the material progress of the country, are just, we must demur to the proposal, if it is a serious one, to allot uncultivable plots of land in India to landless English farmers. The country is already groaning under a foreign agency; and it is now suggested that the landless English farmers should be invited as permanent tenants in order to strip its produce further for their own benefit! Who will profit by the arrangement? Of course, the foreigners. These have had a great deal their own way for the last 50 years. It was the indigo-planting enterprise that first enriched them. And we all know the economic results of their enterprise so far as the people of India are concerned. Neither are we insensible to the political mischief of the arrangement. Under the disguise of developing the resources of the country by private foreign enterprise India has been made to endure many an evil which those in power are pleased to call blessing. And here, under the pretext of making England independent of breadstuffs from America, we are coolly asked to try the experiment of inviting landless English farmers who by their high scientific farming are to give England cheap, abundant, and superior quality of wheat! They are to reap the profits, of course, of their enterprise, and to remit the same to their native country, so that the evenings of their lives may be spent in comfort at the expense of the poor Indian, much like the European civil and military servants. Why not by one decree invite every penniless adventurer, every famishing beggar who is now the recipient of the charity of the Poor-Law Board, to invade this country, grant them land under certain conditions in order that they might find in India very pleasant and profitable means of living? By all means fill the country with this new class of settlers; make them fixtures on the native soil on tenures which will bring next to nothing in the shape of land revenue to the State treasury, and proclaim to the four quarters of the world that "India is for the Englishman only."

Remarks in connection with Mr. Monteath's letter to the Bombay Gazette on the subject of taxing improvements made on their own lands by ryots.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th April says:—If the Government of Bombay is anxious that its ryots should be encouraged to dig wells and improve their lands under the assurance that improvements so effected shall not be taxed, it should make its language a little plainer than we find it in its resolutions on the subject. We are led to this remark by the controversy on this very subject between the Acting Under Secretary to Government and the Bombay Gazette. As an instance showing that although the law provides that improvements effected by the ryot from his private capital should not be taken into consideration at the time of fixing or raising the assessment on his land, yet in practice the law had not been adhered to at least in the matter of wells dug by the ryot. The Gazette cited the case of a Viramgám ryot, who some years ago petitioned to Government, asking whether if he dug a well the assessment would be raised at the ensuing survey and was told in reply that Government could give him no such assurance as he sought. Mr. Monteath denies that Government said anything of the kind, and he cites the resolution of the Government framed in reply to the ryot's petition. From it we find that Government consulted the Survey Commissioner, who in his turn suggested that the applicant should be simply answered in the language of Section 106 of the Land Revenue Code, which provides that improvements from private capital shall not be assessed. The gist of the ryot's enquiry was whether a well would be included in the term "private improvements" or not. And one would have supposed that by referring him to Section 106 the Government desired to assure him that it was so included. But mark what follows. The Survey Commissioner also desired it to be made known that though a well of the kind mentioned by the applicant "would not and could not be legally taxed," yet "the land watered by such a well and all land similarly situated with visible natural facilities for well irrigation from vicinity of water to the surface, whether a well had been sunk or not, would be most justly subjected to an extra assessment on account of the said natural advantage above the assessment on land without such advantage." Ordinarily construed, this would mean that though Government "would not and could not legally tax a well," yet if it appeared that such a well had been dug and yielded water to the land it would justify an enhancement of the assessment. If so, what then is the meaning of the assurance that a private well would not and could not be legally taxed? Either it is a contradiction of terms to say in one and the same breath that a private well would not be taxed but land watered and improved by it would be, or the Government mean something beyond the comprehension of those accustomed to the use of words as popularly understood. Mr. Monteath does not attempt to clear the ambiguity and the inconsistency. And yet he denies the Gazette's assertion that the Viramgám ryot was informed that Government could give him no such assurance as he sought. Either the resolution quoted by Mr. Monteath means something or it does not. If it means something different from what one would ordinarily understand from it, the Government ought to tell us what that is before the Gazette is subjected to the lash of the Secretariat and asked not to circulate false stories of Government policy. At present one is strongly tempted to think Government to be of the belief that language was given to man to conceal his thoughts.

Says that it is not so much the principles of collecting land revenue that are at fault as the system of assessment which does not leave enough to the ryot after paying the Government demand.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of 13th April says:—The Government state that the security or insecurity of agriculture is taken into consideration when the settlements are made. Consequently the assessments fixed are such as the ryots ought to be able to pay punctually every year whether there is a failure of the crops or not; that nevertheless when a scarcity does actually happen, the revenue is either suspended or wholly remitted according as circumstances require; that after failure of harvest enquiries are promptly instituted as to the extent of the calamity and the means of the ryots; and that arrears of revenue are only recovered from any surplus that there may be after sufficient is allowed for the subsistence of the ryots and of their families and for the restoration of their position as revenue-payers. All this looks very well on paper, and if the practice accorded strictly with theory there could be no hardship. But it is not always that the position and means of the tenants are viewed by the subordinate officers of the State landlord with sufficient fairness. The Collector has to institute enquiry, and the Collector delegates the duty to his subordinates, who cannot bring themselves easily to believe that anything which will diminish the revenue will be welcome to their superior and improve their own position. The enquiry is thus begun with an inclination of the mind directed to the interests of the revenue, not to the keeping of the ryot in solvency. When such is the case, cases of hardship are not unlikely, though it may be that the rules made by Government for the guidance of its officers are the best possible. It is not the principles of collection that are at fault so much as the system of assessment, which does not leave to the ryot much after paying the Government assessment and maintaining his family to lay by against times of short crops and short means.

Maintenance of European volunteer corps and remarks in connection therewith.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 13th April, in a paragraph headed "Our Volunteers and their expenses," says:—Looking to this quasi-military branch we see that Government has to incur an annual expenditure of Rs. 6,15,000 exclusive of the value of arms of precision and ammunition supplied to them at the public expense. One of the alleged grounds of the enactment of the Arms Act seemed to be that while there was a considerably large standing army at the elbow of Government it was absurd to allow its civil population to bear arms, and yet to make this absurdity still more absurd, it allows, nay arms, one part of its civil population at the expense of the other. The action of Government in this case amounts to a sad commentary upon its own consistency. If the arming of Europeans has become a necessity for the defence of the empire, is not a Native entitled to take part in that defence? And may we forsooth ask whose interests are greatly involved in the preservation of British power in India, the Europeans' or Natives'? Moreover is not a Native entitled to take part in a movement which is kept up entirely at his own expense? Or are we to believe that our rulers have still a lurking suspicion in their minds about the loyalty of Natives to the British Crown? If that be so, then we freely hold Government is determined never to acknowledge the loyalty of Natives so many evidences notwithstanding.

An assault made by a European officer of the Government Telegraph Department on a peon of his office at the Khandála station of the G. I. P. Railway.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 19th April states that on 12th instant he saw a European officer making a serious assault on a Mahomedan peon of his on the platform of the G. I. P. Railway station at Khandála. The brass badge worn by the peon bore the inscription "Assistant Superintendent Telegraph Department." The European officer went in the direction of Poona. The peon was severely beaten with a stick because he forgot to bring to the station with the rest of the officer's kit an old metal pot, which was however brought in time to the station by another person, who was probably a servant of the officer.

Says that a Native advocate should be appointed to the vacant post of the Clerk of the Crown in the Bombay High Court.

The Rást Goftár (111) of the 13th April has nothing to say against the appointment of Mr. Farran as Acting Advocate-General, because he is senior to Messrs. Badrudin and Mehta, and is quite fit for the office. The Goftár, however, observes that a Native advocate should be appointed to the Clerkship of the Crown which will be vacated by Mr. Farran. Most of the highly paid offices in the Bombay High Court are exclusively held by European barristers, and the appointment of a Native advocate to the vacancy would do some justice to the claims of Native barristers.

Complains of the injustice done to Natives by the exclusive nomination of Europeans to the post of Advocate General at Bombay.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 13th April, in referring to the appointment of Mr. Farran as Acting Advocate-General, Bombay, during the absence of the Honourable Mr. Latham on leave, says that it would be better if some remedy were now adopted against the frequent injustice done to Natives in connection with this post. If there be any objection to the appointment of Mr. Farran to the post, it is that among Natives Mr. Badrudin has superior claims to it. Mr. Badrudin is the oldest Native barrister in Bombay and commands great influence in his profession. To deprive him of his right and to give the appointment to another appears like purposely doing an injustice to Natives. There is no rule that the Advocate-Generalship should be held exclusively by Europeans; why then should Natives be deprived of their rights? Moreover it is not that Natives worthy to hold that office are not to be found. When the claims of worthy Natives are ignored, they cannot help believing that partiality and caste distinctions are observed in bestowing appointments. Is not this a serious evil?

Says that Dr. Hewlett, Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of Bombay, should be retained in his office for some years longer.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 13th April says:—Dr. T. Hewlett's period of service expires during the next few months and it is said that Government is thinking of asking him to stay one year more in the service. The Times of India thinks that by the proposed arrangement Government is doing serious injustice to the learned Doctor's juniors. Our contemporary has, we are glad, nothing to say against Dr. Hewlett personally, and it is only in the interests of imaginary justice that our contemporary objects to the extension. We really cannot understand on what principles the system of compulsory retirement can be justified if it cannot be on the much faulty system of patronage. The system of compulsory retirement is an evil that must be knocked off on the head at once; and the instance in point is sufficient to make any sane man think as we do. Supposing the counsels of our contemporary prevail and Government does not grant Dr. Hewlett extension of office, the only result will be that the present incumbent will draw his pension and some one will feed fat on the appointment. It is really astonishing that a representative of public opinion should show such ill-nature in grudging Dr. Hewlett an extension. It is our firm belief, and we have no doubt that the whole Presidency will share our belief, that Dr. Hewlett will only be too glad to make room for his successor, but the interests of the Department require that he should be at the helm for at least a few more years.

Complains that Native lads are not admitted into the Government Dockyard in Bombay for instruction in mechanical engineering.

A correspondent of the Rást Goftár (111) of the 13th April states that for some years past Native and European lads used to be admitted into the Government Dockyard at Bombay for instruction in mechanical engineering, and those who obtained a certain proficiency and knew English well enough were employed on steamers as apprentices. Of late Native boys are not admitted into the dockyard though several can be found that have studied English as far as the fifth or the seventh standard or who have passed the matriculation examination. European lads are now-a-days solely employed on steamers and steam-launches. The Rást Goftár recommends the grievance to the favourable consideration of Captain Hext, the Superintendent of Marine.

Makes remarks on the recently published lists of common and special jurors in Bombay.

With reference to the list of jurors recently published in the Government Gazette and to the request made by the Sheriff of Bombay that improvements in the list may be suggested, the Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 14th April observes that more than half the number of jurors will not be able to understand the proceedings of the court in cases in which they may be called upon to serve on the jury. The criminal sessions are held four times in the year. If 60 European and Native common jurors are subpœned at every sessions, no difficulty will be experienced in empannelling a jury. Thus 240 common jurors would suffice for one year, but the list contains so many as 1700 names—a number quite disproportionate with the actual requirements. The number of special jurors is reasonable, but the mode of selecting them is objectionable. Some justices of the peace are appointed special jurors, while others are nominated common jurors, without any sufficient reason. The partners of European mercantile firms and their assistants are appointed special jurors, while the partners of well-known Native mercantile firms are nominated common jurors. All European brokers are put upon the special jury list. This shows that no fixed principle is observed in the preparation of the list, which appears to be made up on the number and character of the recommendations received from influential parties. The reason for including the names of certain Pársi gentlemen in the list of special jurors is quite incomprehensible. Special juries are convened in murder cases alone, and it is dangerous to elect to serve on them persons whose education has not extended beyond the second or third standard of the educational school course. Mr. Nasarwánji Mánakji Petit was formerly a special juror. He has now been degraded to the position of a common juror without any adequate cause. If Native mill agents are placed among common jurors, why should European mill managers be made special jurors? The European Vice-principal of the Elphinstone High School was always put among special jurors, while the name of the Native Vice-principal of the same institution appears in the list of common jurors. Two hundred common jurors and one hundred special jurors will suffice for all requirements. A committee composed of two experienced Europeans and an equal number of Hindus, Pársis and Mahomedans presided over by the Sheriff should be appointed to frame the list. [The Yajdán Parast (122) of the 13th April expresses similar sentiments.]

Complains that the officer in charge of the medical dispensary at Rânder frequently absents himself from his duties.

The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 13th April states that cholera has made its appearance at Rânder. On Thursday last three residents of Doctor Uttamrám's house were attacked. The officer in charge of the medical dispensary was not to be found that day. He left the place at 11 A.M. for Surat and returned home at midnight. It is said that he absents himself frequently from his post. But his absence becomes a serious matter when it occurs at a time when the epidemic is prevailing in the town. [A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 14th April expresses similar sentiments.]

Necessity of closing the Mahomedan cemeteries near Sonápur, Bombay.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th April says:—There is considerable force in the objection raised in many quarters against the Mahomedan burial-ground near Sonápur. The existence of the grave-yard in this locality is a standing menace to public health. But we are not for peremptory action in a matter which affects the feelings of a community. Perhaps the best plan would be to request Mahomedan leaders to consider the advisability of shifting to another quarter.

Ravages of a tiger in the village of A'njarla in the Dápoli Táluka of the Ratnágiri Collectorate and a suggestion to the authorities about his destruction.

The Vichárshil (72) of the 7th April says that a tiger is committing fearful ravages on human beings and property in the village of A'njarla in the Dápoli Táluka of the Ratnágiri Collectorate. The inhabitants are disarmed and consequently they are unable to protect themselves against the attacks of wild animals. The Vichárshil trusts that the district authorities will take measures without delay to destroy this beast.

Want of repairs to the road near the Borwali station of the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

In a paragraph headed "The road near Borwali Station," the Indu Prakásh (9) of 14th April says:—The public has heard to tiresomeness the complaints made about the wretched condition of the road near the Borwali station of the B. B. & C. I. Railway. We have inserted in this paper several letters from correspondents drawing the attention of the authorities to the grievance and similar letters have appeared in other papers. We publish to-day another letter on the same subject. Can it be that the authorities whose assistance is invoked in this matter are not aware that the road requires repairs?

Removal of Dr. Banks from the Civil Surgeoncy of Ahmedabad.

Disapproves of the rumoured remission of the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks by Government.

In noticing the statement that appeared in a recent issue of the Times of India that Government have remitted the punishment meted out to Dr. Banks of Ahmedabad and appointed him Civil Surgeon of Surat, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 18th April observes that this statement was not confirmed by the Government Gazette of the 17th instant, nor is it likely that in the absence of the Governor the punishment has been remitted. But the Times of India represents in this matter the opinion of the Anglo-Indian press, and it is well known that this section of the public press is very powerful. However it cannot be believed, at least for the present, that the Bombay Government have admitted that they were wrong in passing the sentence against which the Anglo-Indian newspapers have raised their voice. In the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill the English press in India annoyed Lord Ripon so much as to force him to swerve from his original just aims. The Anglo-Indian papers threaten to boycot the European officials that go against their wishes, and the threat seems to frighten the latter. In the matter of the uninterrupted use of the Esplanade in Bombay by the Native cricketers and of the misunderstanding that arose between the Governor and the High Court Judges about the precedence of the latter at the gubernatorial levées Sir James Fergusson showed weakness by undoing what he had himself previously done, and this leads to the inference that the statement made by the Times might prove true. [The Akhbáre Sodágar (82) of the 17th April expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Is strongly of opinion that Dr. Banks' punishment should not be reduced.

The Prabhákar (11) of 17th April says:—If the Times is to be credited, the Bombay Government have, as the Government of India did in the Ilbert Bill affair, changed their mind with regard to Dr. Banks, who, instead of being dismissed from the service with ignominy, is only to be transferred from one station to another, where perhaps he will repeat with impunity the insolence of which he has been guilty in his dealings with his Native fellow-subjects. Perhaps the punishment has been deemed very severe. But, we think, persons of Dr. Banks' calibre should not be kept a single moment in the service of Government; for by their acts they will make the name of the British Government stink in the nostrils of the people of India. In the Jurisdiction Bill as well as in the case of Dr. Banks the Government would seem to have primarily acted with due deliberation, but they shortly afterwards allowed it to be seen that they were not quite right in the matter—a painful illustration of the pernicious influence of Anglo-Indian counsels. In both these cases principle has been sacrificed to a system based upon race pride on the one hand and the official arrogance of a certain class of snobs and upstarts on the other.

Treatment of Natives by Europeans and the case of Dr. Banks.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 13th April says:—It is natural that our English contemporaries should make a common cause in favour of Surgeon-Major Banks. Their sympathy is genuine and deserves to be respected. But looking into the merits of the case once more, we regret we are unable to find anything like an argument against the Government resolution. We are opposed on principle to the executive usurping the functions of judicial officers. But in matters of this kind responsible courts of law have so often failed the Native complainant, that the people have very nearly lost faith in them. It is, again, an idle assumption to say that Dr. Banks' case is the first of its kind. We could cite a score of them in one breath. A notable instance is again referred to by the Amrita Bazar Patrika in the course of some biting remarks. The case in which two or three Europeans ill-treated a Native woman at Allahabad, and the way in which it was disposed of by Mr. Justice Tyrrel, will always remain a blot upon the manhood of the European soldier and upon the fame of British justice in the country. If ever there is another mutiny in India, it will arise from the maltreatment of women by English ruffians. This Allahabad case still rankles in the hearts of the people, and will continue to do so. If many more cases like it do not come before the courts, some of which we might assume to be trumpped up, it is because of the delicate nature of the charge. Next to these cases in the mofussil are the shikár cases, in which Native villagers are mistaken for animals by the shikári, their fields and cottages broken into, and their rights otherwise trespassed upon, for momentary excitement. Many of these cases of wrong-doing are hushed up at an early stage, as the aggrieved are invariably poor or ignorant. When a few reach the magistrate, they are generally mismanaged. A light fine or a warning is all that the offender gets. With these facts before us it would be dishonest to underrate the gravity of Dr. Banks' offence or to justify the action of the Collector and the Revenue Commissioner. Having said this much, we are free to admit that the punishment appears somewhat excessive. On this account Dr. Banks might appeal to Government to reconsider the case on a suitable opportunity. And this is all Government could do. It is out of the question to withdraw the sentence. They could not do so without stultifying themselves. Nor would we appreciate interference in the matter by the Government of India or the Secretary of State. Responsible authorities on the spot are the best judges. If Sir James Fergusson values public opinion next to the dictates of his own conscience, he must stand firm. His Excellency has so often shown himself to be uncertain that we are really anxious as to the result of the agitation that is being promoted by Dr. Banks' friends and countrymen.

Some remarks in connection with Dr. Banks' case.

The same says:—Had Mr. Reid at once proceeded to the scene of the scuffle and examined the Wághri shikári as well as the villagers, he would not only have realised the enormity of Dr. Banks' offence, but might also have heard another version of the affair. That version is that it was not the villagers who snatched the musket from the low-class shikári, but that it was the police patel or his subordinate who did it in his official capacity as the shikári could not show his licence pass for the musket, nor would he take the man to his master. Further, the musket was produced as soon as Dr. Banks asked for it, and the cruelties he perpetrated were subsequent to the production of the weapon. If this version is to be relied upon, it may be taken for granted that Government knew more about the matter than they have cared to publish in their resolution. The reticence, if any, may be due to one cause or other which we have no desire to pry into. But we would not be much surprised if in the absence of full explanation the Anglo-Indian press fastened upon one or two apparently weak points, and condemned the action of Government as being vindictive and undertaken with a view to conciliate popularity with the Native public. This would be ungenerous criticism, we know, but Anglo-Indian writers never pretended to be more than human.

Says that Dr. Banks has been leniently dealt with.

The Prabhákar (11) of the 15th April says:—We think Dr. Banks has been somewhat leniently dealt with, though perhaps on departmental grounds. One writer in defending this officer's peccadillos is strangely inconsistent in his statement about the absence of the police in the scene of the outrage, while in the same account he goes on alluding to certain Native village authorities and while it is stated that Dr. Banks was himself residing with a magistrate. We hope the military authorities will not pass over this officer's crime, and try him by court-martial to deter others from following his pernicious example. Sir James Fergusson's Government has been most unjustly blamed for their action in the matter, and it has been asked why no steps have been taken against the villagers who have acted quite naturally under the circumstances. They find a shikári—perhaps a well-known budmash—committing havoc on their fields and perhaps also endangering their lives. Beyond the bare statement of this shikári there is nothing to show that he was authorised by anyone. In fact, the villagers acted as a lot of ignorant clod-hoppers would have done under the circumstances, but for an educated man like Dr. Banks to have behaved as he did is to say the least unjustifiable. The villagers are lawless by nature; not so a superior being like Dr. Banks who belongs to the governing race. It was not for him to set the example of lawlessness, or to meet lawlessness by lawlessness. There has not been a case like this for some time at least on this side of India; unless indeed we except that other act of supreme arrogance by which a poor police sepoy was most cowardly assaulted for doing his duty. Indeed it is a matter for surprise that a disgraceful scene like this, which occurred in broad daylight and on the public road, was not dealt with like all police cases of the kind. We hope the Government will take cognisance of this case in default of the departmental authorities, who show a criminal reticence where one of their own class is concerned.

Approves of the punishment of Dr. Banks.

The Shiváji (62) of the 11th April in alluding to the decision in Dr. Banks' case says that Dr. Banks has been leniently dealt with because he happens to be a European, but if the same high-handed proceedings had been carried on by a Native officer he would have been perhaps sent to jail. However the authorities must be praised for the punishment which they have inflicted on Dr. Banks and for the notice which they have taken of the complaints of poor and inoffensive villagers. The Europeans look upon Natives as mere nothing and often act towards them in defiance of all law. Hence some such example like that of Dr. Banks was necessary in order to keep them under control. It is absurd to contend that the faults of Europeans should be leniently dealt with because the instances in which Europeans have been found ill-treating Natives occur rarely. By leniency Government will be affording encouragement to Europeans to deal harsh treatment to Natives. In conclusion, the Shiváji expresses its dissent from those Native newspapers which are urging for a reduction in the punishment of Dr. Banks.

Remarks in connection with Dr. Banks' case.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 14th April, in alluding to Dr. Banks' case, says that the punishment inflicted upon him is very slight when compared to his offence. Dr. Banks is an educated and cultivated man. That such an individual should in a fit of anger so far forget himself as to arrogate to himself all kinds of authority and should inflict and recover fine from poor and ignorant villagers is a most extraordinary proceeding. Dr. Banks ought to have known that he was acting illegally. He deserved a much greater punishment for his fault than that with which he has been visited. The punishment of Europeans found guilty of assaulting Natives is one of the most marked characteristic of Sir James Fergusson's administration. In the case of Mr. George Hewett, Sir James Fergusson showed a most commendable sense of justice. The English people plume themselves on being just and righteous in their treatment of subject races. If their actions really corresponded with their professions they would be venerated by humanity and would benefit the Natives. The East India Company was particularly careful how its European servants behaved towards Natives. If the rules and regulations regarding the conduct of Europeans in India which existed in the time of Lord Cornwallis were enforced now, some dissatisfaction would be created amongst European officials, but the advantages of such a step will be enormous.

Comments on the action of the Bombay Government in Dr. Banks' case.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 13th April says that the English newspapers have been for some time abusing Government for removing Dr. Banks from civil employ, but the action of the authorities is perfectly justifiable. Although it is untrue that all Europeans ill-treat Natives, yet it cannot be denied that as a general rule Europeans treat Natives harshly. There are not a few European officials who dislike Natives to approach them in their country-shoes. Similarly most Europeans show resentment if Natives do not salute them on the public road. The practice of using opprobrious epithets towards their Native subordinates is a common thing among Government officers. The Native clerks in public offices are made to work excessively hard and are subjected to gross ill-treatment if they are even so slightly dilatory in the discharge of their duties. Even in courts of justice in cases between Europeans and Natives the former invariably win although justice might be on the side of the latter. The petitions of Europeans are disposed of at once, but the greatest delay is made in deciding those of Natives. The Native Opinion here alludes to the case of a certain postal clerk in Calcutta whose pay was reduced from Rs. 100 per mensem to Rs. 30 because he did not salute the Post Master General of Bengal and the Director-General of Post Offices. Will this treatment seem just to Europeans? How is it that the case of the postal clerk is not noticed in English newspapers while so much hue and cry is raised regarding Dr. Banks' case. The Native Opinion praises Sir James Fergusson for his just action in Dr. Banks' case.

Movement led by influential Europeans and Natives of Ahmedabad for reducing the punishment of Dr. Banks.

In a paragraph headed "Dr. Banks' Case," the Indu Prakásh (9) of 14th April says:—We have nothing particular to say against the movement let by the influential European and Native residents of Ahmedabad on behalf of Dr. Banks, but it is desirable that the Native gentlemen who have joined it out of sympathy for Dr. Banks should take care that they attempt nothing which may seem to weaken the hands of the Government. If they really think that Dr. Banks has deserved their good opinion and is popular with the natives of Ahmedabad, one should not object to their asking the Government to pass a lighter punishment on the Doctor. But beyond this it would be absurd to proceed. It is undeniable that Dr. Banks committed an illegal act so as to incur the grave displeasure of the Government, but we see the plea urged for him by a contemporary that the Government should not have taken the law into their own hands and punished him because he had dared to take the law into his own hands. It is straining argument to urge that in noticing Dr. Banks' conduct and departmentally punishing him for it Government have been guilty of anything like taking the law into their own hands. It was quite within their competence to deal with him as a public servant. Sir James Fergusson's action in the matter can hardly be deprecated as hasty or unauthorised, and Dr. Banks' case is not improved to his advantage by those who defend him upon the erroneous theory that the Government have not only misjudged him but have infringed the law.

Disapproves of the memorial which the leading Native citizens of Ahmedabad are about to submit to Government in favour of Dr. Banks.

With reference to the report that the leading Native citizens of Ahmedabad are preparing a memorial for submission to Government praying for a mitigation of the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks, the Rást Goftár (111) of the 13th April observes that the would be memorialists do not seem to pity the unfortunate villagers who were maltreated by Dr. Banks on the bare assertions of his Wághri servant, but express sorrow that punishment has been inflicted on the person who ill-treated them. Very probably some kind of pressure has been brought to bear upon the leading citizens to prepare a memorial in favour of the doctor who has been guilty of several offences. He committed criminal trespass, frightened the poor villagers into whose houses he entered without legal authority, threatened a breach of the public peace, assumed the powers peans in India which existed in the time of Lord Cornwallis were enforced now, some dissatisfaction would be created amongst European officials, but the advantages of such a step will be enormous.

Comments on the action of the Bombay Government in Dr. Banks' case.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 13th April says that the English newspapers have been for some time abusing Government for removing Dr. Banks from civil employ, but the action of the authorities is perfectly justifiable. Although it is untrue that all Europeans ill-treat Natives, yet it cannot be denied that as a general rule Europeans treat Natives harshly. There are not a few European officials who dislike Natives to approach them in their country-shoes. Similarly most Europeans show resentment if Natives do not salute them on the public road. The practice of using opprobrious epithets towards their Native subordinates is a common thing among Government officers. The Native clerks in public offices are made to work excessively hard and are subjected to gross ill-treatment if they are even so slightly dilatory in the discharge of their duties. Even in courts of justice in cases between Europeans and Natives the former invariably win although justice might be on the side of the latter. The petitions of Europeans are disposed of at once, but the greatest delay is made in deciding those of Natives. The Native Opinion here alludes to the case of a certain postal clerk in Calcutta whose pay was reduced from Rs. 100 per mensem to Rs. 30 because he did not salute the Post Master General of Bengal and the Director-General of Post Offices. Will this treatment seem just to Europeans ? How is it that the case of the postal clerk is not noticed in English newspapers while so much hue and cry is raised regarding Dr. Banks' case. The Native Opinion praises Sir James Fergusson for his just action in Dr. Banks' case.

Movement led by influential Europeans and Natives of Ahmedabad for reducing the punishment of Dr. Banks.

In a paragraph headed "Dr. Banks' Case," the Indu Prakásh (9) of 14th April says:—We have nothing particular to say against the movement let by the influential European and Native residents of Ahmedabad on behalf of Dr. Banks, but it is desirable that the Native gentlemen who have joined it out of sympathy for Dr. Banks should take care that they attempt nothing which may seem to weaken the hands of the Government. If they really think that Dr. Banks has deserved their good opinion and is popular with the natives of Ahmedabad, one should not object to their asking the Government to pass a lighter punishment on the Doctor. But beyond this it would be absurd to proceed. It is undeniable that Dr. Banks committed an illegal act so as to incur the grave displeasure of the Government, but we see the plea urged for him by a contemporary that the Government should not have taken the law into their own hands and punished him because he had dared to take the law into his own hands. It is straining argument to urge that in noticing Dr. Banks' conduct and departmentally punishing him for it Government have been guilty of anything like taking the law into their own hands. It was quite within their competence to deal with him as a public servant. Sir James Fergusson's action in the matter can hardly be deprecated as hasty or unauthorised, and Dr. Banks' case is not improved to his advantage by those who defend him upon the erroneous theory that the Government have not only misjudged him but have infringed the law.

Disapproves of the memorial which the leading Native citizens of Ahmedabad are about to submit to Government in favour of Dr. Banks.

With reference to the report that the leading Native citizens of Ahmedabad are preparing a memorial for submission to Government praying for a mitigation of the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks, the Rást Goftár (111) of the 13th April observes that the would be memorialists do not seem to pity the unfortunate villagers who were maltreated by Dr. Banks on the bare assertions of his Wághri servant, but express sorrow that punishment has been inflicted on the person who ill-treated them. Very probably some kind of pressure has been brought to bear upon the leading citizens to prepare a memorial in favour of the doctor who has been guilty of several offences. He committed criminal trespass, frightened the poor villagers into whose houses he entered without legal authority, threatened a breach of the public peace, assumed the powers of the police and searched the houses, arrogated to himself magisterial powers and fined the villagers in the sum of Rs. 20, and flogged the unfortunate rustics. Similar offences are sometimes committed by overbearing European officers in the mofussil, and to give them warning a severe example has been made of Dr. Banks. Such an example was needed. It is sure to do good to the mofussilites. The Anglo-Indian papers have severely attacked Sir James Fergusson's just decision in the case, and the Natives ought to support Government against the unjustifiable attack. If in spite of these facts the leading Native citizens of Ahmedabad submit the memorial to Government, they will come under the censure of having betrayed the true interests of their country. [The Gujarâti (97) and the Yajdân Parast (122) of the same date and the Deshi Mitrâ (92) of the 17th April express similar sentiments.]

Says that the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks should be remitted.

The Jâme Jamshed (101) of the 15th April wishes that the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks should be remitted and a severe censure only should be passed upon his conduct. The Jâme however disapproves of the movement made in Ahmedabad by certain leading Natives of that city for preferring a memorial to Government praying for an abatement of the punishment, and advises the would be memorialists to leave that work to the Native press. The recommendation made by the Jâme in a previous issue for taking a severe notice of Mr. Reid's omission to take due cognizance of Dr. Banks' serious fault before the matter reached the ears of Government is repeated once more. The doctor's past good conduct makes the remission of sentence desirable, and it would be unjust to make a severe example of him, because many Europeans have been guilty of a similar offence.

Remarks on the criticisms of the Bombay Gazette on Dr. Banks' case.

The Subodh Patrikâ (15) of 13th April says:—The Bombay Gazette is nothing if not original. Not content with condemning the recent resolution of Government in Dr. Banks' case as unduly severe, it seeks to call in question the whole conduct of Government as being illegal. It surely required to be told that the head of any establishment is not at liberty to dismiss one of his servants if he finds him ill-treating a member of the establishment and that the proper and only course for him to take is to hand the offender over to the police. This is rather a hard proposition for us to understand. Then again it calls the information regarding Dr. Banks' conduct towards the villagers second-hand, and hence not worthy of being acted upon, though the facts were communicated to Government by its officers after due inquiry of Dr. Banks himself. Moreover be it noted there is not the remotest hint that the facts stated in the Government resolution are not correct. What is insinuated is simply that if Dr. Banks had been placed upon his trial he should have added to the statements already before the Government so as to be able to ground a defence thereon. It is impossible to believe that when the District Magistrate instituted the inquiry at the instance of Government Dr. Banks did not know what he was about in making his statements. Such arguments are at the best very ingenious but fail to carry conviction. We do not suppose Sir James Fergusson will be moved by them to cancel his resolution, which no doubt was considerately framed. No doubt the Anglo-Indian Press may, if it please, try to make out that the punishment was too severe for what Dr. Banks did. But an effort to overhaul the whole thing as illegal only lands one into absurdities.

Railways.

Approves of Sir John Strachey's views on the rapid extension of railways in India.

In noticing Sir John Strachey's evidence before the Parliamentary Committee now sitting to enquire into the means of internal railway communication in India and of its improvement, the Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 13th April observes that Sir John's extensive knowledge of Indian affairs and of the wants of the country in respect of the means of internal communication would always entitle him to rank as a great authority and to be listened with respect as to what he may have to say on the subject. Whatever might be his mistakes when at the head of the Finance Department of India or when pronouncing on the comparatative merits of the broad versus metre guage systems of railways, his views have not been at fault as to the absolute importance of constructing as many railways, as its resources would permit either for meeting the capital charge or the interest thereon; nor have his sympathy and zeal been inferior to that of any other public man, European or Native, in the country for pushing on the construction speedily with due regard to expedience and economy. Sir John Strachey's evidence is in favour of rapid railway extention, as demanded by the necessity of the country and warranted by the advice of reliable experts. He would give to India as fast as practicable all the railways that its resources would warrant in the wisdom of those who are responsible for its public safety and public credit. He would, when doing so, proceed with the caution and prudence begotten of experience as to the methods to be adopted and the agency to be employed for constructing railways and working them. People might differ from some of his views. But when giving his evidence he would appear to have based his statements upon his long experience and the dictates of ripe judgment. [The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 14th April expresses similar sentiments.]

Complains of the exaction of overwork from the employés of the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 13th April, in a communicated article, asks whether it is not cruel to exact 12 hours' continued work from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M. and from 6 P. M. to 6 A. M. from railway employés. Mill hands are better off in this respect since they have to work for a somewhat less period of time and in company with others. But some of the railway employés have to be on duty alone and for 12 hours continuously. What can a man do when he has to perform for 12 hours the duties of the station master, the coaching clerk, the signaller and the luggage clerk combined at a petty station, when trains may be frequently running, without any holiday, Sundays even not excepted? Owing to overwork serious accidents happen every year, causing loss of life and property. An accident arising from this cause recently occurred near Kánkrákhádi station of the B. B. & C. I. Railway. The station master was prosecuted and punished, but is it not shameful that such accidents should often occur from niggardliness? It is said that Government officials enquired into the matter, but it is not known whether any action was taken against the fearful exaction of work for a long period and for preventing the occurrence of similar accidents in future. The railway authorities ought to make proper arrangements in the matter. If they do not do so, Government should intervene and insist upon the Company not to overwork its servants.

Complains of ill-treatment of passengers on the B. B. & C. I. Railway.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 14th April states that on the occasion of the last Chaitri Punam fair at Chándod large number of passengers left the Vishvámitri and the Goa Gate stations on the B. B. & C. I. Railway for the fair by special trains. The railway authorities did not attend to the comfort and convenience of these passengers, who were either made to crowd themselves in third class carriages or to sit either in covered or open waggons. The Goa Gate station building is very small and large numbers of passengers had to wait in the sun until the arrival of the train by which they were to travel.

Municipalities.

Complains that a recommendation made at a meeting of the municipality of Vengurla for filling up a vacancy among the non-official members was negatived by the president.

The Vichárshil (72) of the 14th April says that the place of a non-official member of the Vengurla municipality fell vacant a short time ago. At a meeting of the municipal commissioners a discussion took place. The majority of the members present selected one Mr. P. A. Mahájan, a Vakil, and recommended their president to sanction the appointment. But the selection of Mr. Mahájan did not meet with the approbation of the president, who nominated the school-master of the local vernacular school to the vacancy. Mr. Mahájan being a member of an independent profession is not likely to approve always the doings of the president and hence his appointment was negatived. This action is in conformity with the policy of imperialism inaugurated in 1877.

The school-master who has been made a member of the Vengurla municipality will never be able to act independently. The vernacular school-masters are in some respects subordinate to the district revenue authorities, and hence they will never be in a position to give their opinion with independence. If they did, they are sure to be made to suffer for their boldness. The noble scheme of local self-government inaugurated by Lord Ripon is not likely to be successful if the district authorities do not respect the opinion of local bodies.

A complaint against the municipality of Broach.

The Broach Samáchár (88) of the 17th April complains that the meeting called by the municipal authorities of that city to consider the introduction of the scheme of local self-government was not publicly notified and hence the leading members of society were absent from it. Neither advertisements or handbills were issued nor was the meeting publicly proclaimed. It is necessary that an explanation should be forthcoming on the subject. [The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the same date complains of the indifference of Mr. Reid, the Collector, in not calling a public meeting to consider the introduction of the scheme of local self-government into that city.]

Native States.

Condemns the Bráhmans of Poona for blaming the Gáekwád of Baroda for bestowing appointments on his his own caste-people.

In an article headed "Are some of the Poona Bráhmans against the Gáekwád of Baroda or not" the Din Bandhu (5) of the 13th April says:—We regret to observe that most of the Native papers conducted by Bráhmans in Poona have, as it were, made it a point to criticise every action of the Gáekwád of Baroda. This is because the Gáekwád has of late been making improvements in the various branches of administration and is naturally aiding the people of his own race. We maintain that the Gáekwád as a wise and intelligent prince could not help doing this. Did not the Peishwas assist their own caste people? Was not education then monopolised by the ruling race (the Bráhmans) and the other people kept in intellectual thraldom? If one were to read attentively the accounts of the administration of the Peishwas, he would certainly be struck with horror at the wicked deeds committed and oppressions exercised by them upon the people of the other castes. We are certain that this and other causes brought to a premature close the ráj of the Peishwas. Will any one deny that there is a Higher Being who castigates the wicked and the demoralised when the cup of sin is full? We hold however that it is no wonder that the Peishwas aided their own caste people, for their conduct was only natural. We hail with feelings of gratitude the advent into India of the British, who laid open to us the people of other castes, the inestimable fountain of knowledge, the result of which was that the tricks of the Bráhmans were exposed. It is the duty of princes like the Gáekwád to afford every possible encouragement to the people of other castes by bestowing upon them high and low offices according to their abilities. Why should not the Gáekwád do his duty towards his own caste people? We assert that the opinions expressed by most of the Native papers in Poona relating to the Gáekwád of Baroda are biassed and therefore worthless.

Does not approve of sending the Mahárája of Kolhápur to England for his education at so young an age.

The Poona Vaibhav (51) of the 13th April says that it is given out at Kolhápur that the Regent intends to send the young Mahárája to England for his education. This information cannot be altogether without foundation, since the Political Agent referred to this matter during the festivities which took place at the time of the ceremony of adoption. The Vaibhav does not altogether approve of the Regent's idea. To send the Mahárája at so young an age to England for study is a little out-of-the-way proceeding. It is rather doubtful whether the climate of England will agree with his constitution. Besides there is no reason why he should not receive here the education which is to be imparted to him in England. What advantage is to be got by removing the Mahárája far from his own subjects? The Vaibhav trusts that the Regent of Kolhápur will deeply consider the above points before sending the Mahárája to England.

Requests Government to pass without any further delay a resolution on Major Hancock's report on the alleged mismanagement of the Nándod State.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 18th April observes that it is more than two months since the enquiry into the mismanagement of the Nándod State was completed by Major Hancock, and yet Government have passed no decision on the subject. The delay in the disposal of this case has given rise to various rumours for the suppression of which Government ought at once to publish their resolution and the papers relating to the enquiry.

Complains that some subjects of the Rájkot State have been subjected to ill-treatment.

The Gujarát Mitrá (77) of the 13th April observes that the Chief of Rájkot has begun to annoy Ranchhod Dhársi, the Vahivatdár of Kuwádia, without good reason. The Vahivatdár has been accused of petty mismanagement and an aspirant for employment under the State has been appointed to enquire into the accusations. The latter is said to have fined some persons, put fetters on others and severely beaten some ryots of Kuwádia. The Political Agent ought to enquire into the matter and afford relief from the alleged oppression.

Berár Affairs.

Suggests the appointment of public prosecutors in the districts in Berár.

The Pramod Sindhu (12) of 14th April says that much inconvenience is felt, particularly in sessions cases, because there are no public prosecutors in the Berárs. Sometimes in this province Superintendents of Police or their assistants or magistrates are charged with the duty of conducting cases for the prosecution in the Sessions Courts. Now, however much a magistrate may be versed in law or a police officer expert in detecting crime or apprehending criminals, it is not likely that they would be able to conduct a case with the ability of a practical vakil. The cases which are tried in Sessions Courts are usually difficult and intricate, and hence a skilful legal practitioner is required to conduct them. The Pramod Sindhu trusts that steps will be taken before long to revive the office of public prosecutor in Berár.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
22nd April 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

- Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
  - Advice for the adoption of effective measures for arresting the — in the direction of India 8
  - Comments in connection with the — and the worthlessness of any diplomatic arrangements in connection therewith 6
- Agriculture:
  - Condemnation of the proposal made in some quarters for allotting uncultivable plots of land in India to landless English farmers and making them permanent tenants 10
  - Suggestion for the creation of agricultural scholarships to enable young Natives of India to go to England and study scientific — in that country 10
- Appointments:
  - Complaint regarding the injustice done to Natives by the exclusive nomination of Europeans to the post of Advocate-General at Bombay 13
  - Expression of opinion that a Native advocate should be appointed to the vacant post of the Clerk of the Crown in the Bombay High Court 13
- Assault made by a European officer of the Government Telegraph Department on a peon of his office at the Khandála station of the G. I. P. Railway: Mention of a case of — 13
- Cemeteries: Necessity of closing the Mahomedan — near Sonápur, Bombay 14
- Civil Service of India:
  - Disapproval of the refusal of Lord Kimberley to increase the limit of age for the entrance examination of the— 4
  - Expression of opinion that the people of India ought to strengthen the hands of Lord Ripon by adopting memorials to the Secretary of State for India on the necessity of increasing the limit of age of the candidates for the— 5
  - Remarks in connection with Lord Kimberley's reply regarding the limit of age for the entrance examination of the —... ... 4
- Flogging of respectable boys: Remarks in connection with the — ... 10
- Government Dockyard in Bombay: Complaint regarding the non-admission of Native lads into the—for instruction in mechanical engineering... 14
- Impoverishment of India: Remarks on the — 3
- Indian Council: Suggestions for the reformation of the —... ... 5
- Juries:
  - Expression of opinion that the right of trial by jury should be conceded to Natives 8
  - Remarks on the recently published lists of common and special jurors in Bombay 14
- Land Revenue Assessments:
  - Expression of opinion that it is not so much the principles of collecting land revenue that are at fault as the system of assessment, which does not leave enough to the ryot after paying the Government demand 12
  - Remarks in connection with Mr. Monteath's letter to the Bombay Gazette on the subject of taxing improvements made on their own lands by ryots 11
- Loans: Expression of opinion that the next loan of 2½ krors of rupees should be raised in India and not in England 8
- Non-purchase of indigenous articles in sufficient quantities for the use of Government: Complaint regarding the — 10
- Public Service:
  - Complaint that the officer in charge of the medical dispensary at Ránder frequently absents himself from his duties... ... 14
  - Expression of opinion that Dr. Hewlett, Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of Bombay, should be retained in his office for some years longer 13

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—continued.

Punishment inflicted on one Govindráo, a postal clerk at Calcutta, for not salaming the Director-General of Post Offices and the Post Master General of Bengal:
  Expression of opinion that the — is unnecessarily harsh— ... 9
  Do. do. and a contrast between this treatment and that given to Dr. Banks 9
Ravages of a tiger in the village of A'njarla in the Dápoli Táluka of the Ratnágiri Collectorate: Complaint regarding the — and a suggestion for his destruction 15
Roads: Want of repairs to the road near the Borwali station of the B. B. & C. I. Railway 15
Volunteer Corps: Remarks in connection with the maintenance of European— 12

PART II.—Removal of Dr. Banks from the Civil Surgeoncy of Ahmedabad:

Approval of the punishment of Dr. Banks 17
Comments on the action of the Bombay Government in regard to the—... 18
Disapproval of the memorial which the leading Native citizens of Ahmedabad are about to submit to Government in favour of Dr. Banks ... 18
Disapproval of the rumoured remission of the sentence passed on Dr. Banks by Government 15
Expression of opinion that Dr. Banks has been leniently dealt with ... 17
Expression of opinion that Dr. Banks' punishment should not be reduced. 15
  Do. do. do. should be remitted ... 19
Movement led by influential Europeans and Natives of Ahmedabad for mitigating the punishment of Dr. Banks 18
Remarks in connection with Dr. Banks' case:
  The Indian Spectator 16
  The Indu Prakásh 17
Remarks on the criticisms of the Bombay Gazette on Dr. Banks' case ... 19
Treatment of Natives by Europeans and the case of Dr. Banks ... 16

PART III.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway:
  Complaint regarding the exaction of overwork from the employés of the— 20
  Ill-treatment of passengers on the— 20
Extension of railways in India: Approval of Sir John Strachey's views on the rapid— 19

PART IV.—Municipalities—

Broach: Complaint against the municipality of— 21
Vengurla: Complaint that a recommendation made at a meeting of the municipality of — for filling up a vacancy among the non-official members was negatived by the president 20

PART V.—Native States—

Baroda: Condemnation of the Bráhmans of Poona for blaming the Gáekwád of — for bestowing appointments on his own caste-people ... 21
Kolhápur: Disapproval of the intention to send the Mahárája of — to England for his education at so young an age ... 21
Nándod: Request to Government to pass without any further delay a resolution on Major Hancock's report on the alleged mismanagement of the — State 22
Rájkot: Complaint that some subjects of the — State have been subjected to ill-treatment 22

PART VI.—Berár Affairs—

Public prosecutors in the districts in Berár: Suggestion for the appointment of— 22

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 26th April 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
12	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
13	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
14	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
15	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
16	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
17	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
18	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
19	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
20	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*21	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*22	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*37	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
38	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
39	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
40	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
41	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*50	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
51	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*53	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*54	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
57	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
58	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
59	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*60	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
61	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*62	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 139

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*66	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
67	" Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
68	" Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
69	" Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
70	" Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*71	" Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
72	" Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*73	" Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*74	" Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
75	" Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*76	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
77	" Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
78	" Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
79	" Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
80	" Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
81	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
82	" Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
83	" A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
84	" A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*85	" A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
86	" Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
87	" Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
88	" Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
89	" Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
90	" Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
91	" Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
92	" Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
93	" Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*94	" Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
95	" Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
96	" Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
97	" Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*98	" Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
99	" Gul'Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*100	" Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
101	" Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
102	" Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
103	" Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*104	" Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
105	" Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
106	" Lok Mitră	Do.	Weekly	800
107	" Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
108	" Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
109	" Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
110	" Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
111	" Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
112	" Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
113	" Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*114	" Saurásthtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
115	" Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*116	" Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
117	" Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*118	" Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
119	" Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
120	" Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
121	" Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	" Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*124	" Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
125	" Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*126	" Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	" Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Some remarks about the acquisition of India by the English.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 20th April, in an article headed "How have the English conquered India?" says that when the agitation regarding the Ilbert Bill was going on, the English in India declared that India had been won by the sword and that therefore it was disgraceful to place Englishmen on a level with Natives. But this contention is not true. India was not conquered as, for instance, Persia was conquered and subjugated by Alexander the Great. Tamerlane defeated the Emperor Tugluk and Baber established his dynasty at Delhi. The invasions of the conquerors mentioned above may be said to have been performed by the aid of the sword. But the same assertion cannot be made with respect to the company of English merchants who originally came to India for trading purposes and who gained an empire by treachery and by creating dissensions among Native princes. In the writings of Macaulay admiration is expressed that England should have in the course of a century subjugated a country so extensive as Europe as India is; but this is simply an empty boast when it is remembered that in the battles of Plassey, Buxar and others, more than two-thirds of the army was composed of Native troops. Again it must be noted that when the English came to India and commenced to extend their dominion gradually there was hardly any Native who was capable of realising the disadvantages of foreign domination. India was acquired by the British with the assistance of Native troops, who were trained in European tactics by them. There is nothing to boast in this achievement. England did not spend a pie in the acquisition of India. The English Government took money from Native princes under various excuses and false promises and ultimately gained their object. After the disruption of the Mogul Empire there was universal anarchy in India. At such a juncture various adventurers secured territories for themselves, and the English did the same. The people here were accustomed to foreign rule and therefore they did not hinder the English in the policy which they were pursuing. Such being the fact, it is absurd to contend that the natives of India were conquered and that the British did anything grand in this achievement. Suppose that in the year 1760 the Pársis in Bombay had revolted against the authority of the Peshwas and established their own kingdom, it could not be legitimately said that India had been conquered by the Pársis. The acquisition of India by the English is somewhat similar. This being so, it is absurd to make empty boast about the conquest of India by the sword. People should think well before they make statements. The Native Opinion considers that the English are about the best of all the foreign rulers which India has had, but they should be careful not to speak of the acquisition of India by the sword or of keeping their domination by the same means.

Complains of the indifference of England to the welfare of India.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 20th April, in alluding to the count out in the House of Commons on Mr. Slagg's motion regarding the abolition of the Indian Council, observes that it cares more for the interests of England than those of India. The indifference of Parliament in this matter shows how much it cares for the welfare of India. Even some members of the Ministry are careless of the interests of this country. Lord Kimberley's refusal to increase the limit of age of candidates for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service is an instance in point. Though the claim of the Indian public was ably supported by facts and arguments, and though it had been allowed to indulge in high hopes respecting its fulfilment, Lord Kimberley did not pay the slightest attention to it. His reply is one of the heaviest and most deadly of blows; and it is this unwillingness to confer any substantial good on this country that prevents Lord Ripon from boldly carrying out his policy. Lord Ripon wishes to remove the grievances which justify the people here in speaking against England, but they cannot be entirely removed as many difficulties come in the way. The English people only think of carrying away as much money as possible from India. For instance, the military expenditure has much increased and is still increasing, but no measures are taken for curtailing it. While the British officials who go to serve in Ceylon, Australia and Canada receive the same salaries as those given in England, those who come to serve in this country receive double and treble the amount. The reason is plain. It is the wish of the home authorities to maintain the English middle class at the expense of India. If that is not their object, they would adopt some remedy and save India. But they have no inclination whatsoever to save her; they anyhow only want to get money from her. They do not wish for reforms. This is no secret now. The local and Imperial Governments are often blamed by the people of India; but there is no valid ground for this, considering the way in which Indian matters are managed in England and the conduct of the British public, the Ministry, and both Houses of Parliament. If the home authorities wish to make their Indian subjects happy and to improve their condition, they can easily do so; but they do not really care. As long as they are apathetic in the matter, it is absurd for Natives to attempt to make any progress or to acquire new privileges. What is the reason that no measures are taken to prevent the loss by exchange? The reason is that treble the amount is thus sent out from this country; and who would give up his own interest?

Says that the high-pitched bureaucracy of India will require a succession of strong and liberal Viceroys to bring it down to a low key.

The Subodh Patrika (14) of the 20th April says:—Now that Lord Ripon's tenure of office is running through the last year of its course, rumour is busy in finding him a successor. New Viceroys are being made and unmade on conjectures well or ill founded. It is not for us to throw out any guesses of our own. It is sufficient to note the likelihood of the Liberal ministry continuing to command the confidence of the English nation for some time to come. Consequently the choice of a successor to Lord Ripon will of course fall among the ranks of the Liberals. It is no doubt possible for Liberals to be illiberal towards the orientals. But a Liberal successor of Lord Ripon will, we venture to think, not leave the lines of policy marked out by the most eminent Liberal Viceroy of India. Added to it is the possibility that the Radical wing of the Liberal party may furnish us a Viceroy who will sympathise to the full with the work of Lord Ripon in this country. The high-pitched bureaucracy of India will require a succession of liberal and strong-minded Viceroys to bring it down to a low key.

Says that the experiment of an agricultural bank made by Government is not on a sufficiently large scale so as to produce tangible results.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 26th April is glad that the disinterested exertions of Sir William Wedderburn for opening agricultural banks have borne some fruit, and observes that Lord Ripon's Government have sanctioned the opening of a bank in the Purandhar Táluka as an experimental measure for one year. The territorial extent and the period in which the experiment is to be tried are very small, and if the trial fails it will not be right to give it up finally. If a discouraging result follows from the present experiment banks should be opened in other agricultural districts for giving another trial to this useful project. The Samáchár admits the utility of last year's legal enactment for giving pecuniary aid to agriculturists for the purpose of sinking wells and constructing tanks, and points out the necessity of opening agricultural banks. Sir William Wedderburn deserves praise for his unremitting efforts in convincing Government and the public here and in England of the great usefulness of the schemes brought forward by him.

Complains of the increase in drunkenness in India.

The Ahmedabad Samáchár (81) of the 23rd April refers to the complaint made by a deputation which waited on Lord Kimberley on the subject of the increase in drunkenness in India and says that the complaint is well-founded. Drunkenness is undoubtedly increasing in this country, which is clearly shown by the increase in the number of liquor shops in towns and villages notwithstanding the imposition of heavy duties by Government. The complaint appears to be true that the rules made by Government for the manufacture and sale of liquor encourage drunkenness. The imposition of heavy duties and the consequent rise in the price of liquor have only prevented poor people, who stood in need of good and wholesome liquor, from using it. This is the only advantage resulting from the levy of heavy duties. But the rich and high caste-people who are prohibited by their religion from drinking liquor remain unaffected. Moreover, liquor is not so good or wholesome as it was formerly. In order to sell it cheap it is adulterated with inferior stuff and is therefore injurious to health. The Samáchár exhorts the educated and other classes to abstain from the use of liquor, and says that it is necessary that some changes should be made in the ábkári rules, for at present the poor only suffer by them while those that ought to be discouraged freely indulge in the vice. The number of liquor shops, which is daily on the increase, should be reduced, for temptation increases with their number.

Complains of the smallness of the pay of the Native soldier.

The Military Instructor (131) of the 20th April complains of the smallness of the pay given to Native soldiers. The recruits are advanced a sum of Rs. 30 on their entering the army to provide themselves with necessaries. This amount is insufficient, for the new recruits have to spend about 20 or 25 rupees more than the sum advanced for buying and completing their accoutrements. As Rs. 2 are deducted from the pay of the recruit every month in part-payment of the advance, he only receives Rs. 5 as pay for a period of about two years. How can he maintain and clothe himself on this sum? The advance should be raised to Rs. 50 or 55 in order to prevent the Native sepoy from starving.

Some remarks in connection with the rules promulgated by Mr. Livingston, Principal of the Krisnagar College for punishing students in his charge.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 21st April in a leading article observes that in Lower Bengal the Government have become very strict and severe in their treatment of the youths who are being educated in schools and colleges. In the scuffle which ensued between the students and the police at Dacca, the Magistrate adjudged some of the former guilty and ordered them to be whipped. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal approved of the punishment although the action of the Magistrate was condemned by the entire Native press and the respectable portion of the population. This affair was hardly over, when Mr. Livingston, the Principal of the Krisnagar College, promulgated certain harsh rules for maintaining discipline among the students in his charge. This policy of Mr. Livingston, which is pretty sure to meet with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor, is calculated to drive away all spirit and self-reliance from the rising generation. Government perhaps think that the education which is imparted in schools and colleges is making young men self-willed and audacious, and it is with the intention of putting down this new spirit that they are resolved to make them soft and yielding by subjecting them to whipping and other harsh punishments. In European countries whipping and other brutal punishments are strictly prohibited from being resorted to in educational institutions, and it is therefore difficult to conceive why a different course should be followed here. Perhaps this variation in the treatment of Native youths is on account of the fact of India being a conquered country. The rulers of India ought to know that Natives have begun to appreciate western learning and western ideas, and that the spread of them both is sure to make them independent and self-reliant and that nothing can or will avert the ultimate consequences. If this be so, it is absurd to take measures to prevent what is inevitable from happening. Do Mr. Thompson and Mr. Livingston think that by treating the younger generation harshly they are likely to become loyal towards the British Government? Do they believe that the stability of the British rule is increased thereby? They are greatly mistaken if they think so. Lord Dalhousie retired from India after estranging the minds of the people, and his successor had to suffer the consequences of his high-handed policy. The Indu Prakásh hopes that the successors of Messrs. Thompson and Livingston may not have to suffer the evil results of their extraordinary measures.

Remarks on the taxation of improvements made on land by ryots with their own capital.

In an article headed "The new departure in land revenue survey and assessment" the Indian Spectator (1) of the 20th April says:—Here is the State declaring in a solemn document that the construction of wells and the improvements on the land arising therefrom are exempted from increased assessment. And yet, in the same breath, it gives utterance to the absurd doctrine that lands supposed to have subsoil water will be liable to a higher rate! Then, where will be the advantage if wells are dug after such enhanced assessment? Whatever immunity the ryot is offered under the resolution is nullified by this process. The object of the Viramgám applicant, if not plain at the date of his application, is quite plain now. He did not intend to apply the thin end of the wedge of permanent settlement, as has been suggested by the Times of India, but only demanded a categorical assurance from Government as to the non-assessibility of the land for a higher rate in case of the sinking of a well. The ryot apprehended that Government might snatch more than the just due with the one hand while offering freedom from taxation on the well with the other. It is precisely like the apprehension the Honourable Mr. Mandlik expressed in connection with the so-called freedom and financial independence allowed in the Local Self-government Bills. The sheep is let off at the one door in order that it may meet the wolf at the other. Government will not assess improvements which the construction of a well may bring to the ryot; only it will assess the land watered by the well, and thus recoup itself with a greater revenue! This is what is really meant when all the persiflage of official language is cleared away. The theory has now received its quietus, and no new charm will justify it. It is entirely opposed to the intentions of the Government of India. The plea of sacrifice of revenue that may be urged is untenable. The Government of India does not wish to have the land revenue increased by a policy that on the face of it is not only unjustifiable but most mischievous. In fact the policy aggravates the malady it seeks to cure. The remedy is worse than the disease. It cuts at the very root of the policy, which demands the improvement in the condition of the ryot and the cultivation of the land, apart from the higher subject of mitigating to a great extent the evils of famine. There is much to be said yet on the subject. Officials are apt to be vexed when the game they are at is smelt by the outside public. When Government is anxious to take the more intelligent Natives into confidence in the discussion of public questions, it must give out its confidence unreservedly. If an impartial discussion conducive to public good is the object, then the sooner it goes to work in a straightforward manner the better. It must not resent criticism which its own inconsistency provokes. Nor should it threaten to "revert to its former position of isolation and reserve" if setting aside precedents it is not desirous of subjecting itself to healthy criticism on its acts. Intolerance of public criticism is its one great vice, and when the public fails to chime in with its views, it goes into sulks like a child and threatens to hide itself in a corner! What a spectacle for a powerful Government, and yet it talks of enlightening the public!

Condemns the imposition of enhanced rates on land in the Nagar Táluka.

In an article headed "The land revenue policy of Government" the Dynán Prakásh (8) of the 21st April alludes to the Government resolution dated the 4th instant reviewing the revision operations in the Nagar Táluka of the Ahmednagar District, and says:—In the first place it must be remembered that the Ahmednagar District is one of the four districts which have been for the last four years under the operation of a special and exceptional law for regulating the ordinary transactions between agriculturist debtors and their creditors. By the enactment of special legislation Government admitted the existence of an abnormal indebtedness among the people of those four districts. Now what we lay the greatest stress on is that Government having interfered with and suspended the ordinary relations between agriculturist debtors and their private creditors in the interests of the former, it behoved the Government to suspend for a time at least the ordinary relations between itself and the agricultural classes in the same area. It does really appear very strange that when the Government by its legislative enactment compels the private creditors of the debtors of agriculturists to forego a considerable portion of their profits in the interests of the latter, the Government as a public creditor should enforce the levy of its own profits irrespective of the abnormally indebted condition of the agricultural classes. It is generally admitted that the Government land revenue demand has been as much the cause of this abnormally indebted condition as the joint action of the civil courts and the unfairness of the sáwkárs. Mr. Hope himself admitted this to be the case in his opening speech at Simla in the Supreme Legislative Council on July 17th, 1879. On that occasion Lord Lytton and Sir John Strachey made similar admissions, while the then Lieutenant-Governor of the Panjáb, Sir Robert Egerton, dwelt very strongly upon this point also. With all these admissions the reader is quite familiar. But we shall state here a fact which may not be generally known that Mr. Woodward, who early last year was appointed on special duty under the orders of the Secretary of State for India to enquire into and report upon the working of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act, bears unqualified testimony in his report, submitted to Government in July last, to the existence of a widespread opinion among all classes of the people in these four districts that the Government land revenue demand has more to do with this abnormal condition than Government is willing to admit. And though this subject did not properly fall within the scope of his inquiry Mr. Woodward says in his report that he would be wanting in his duty to Government if he did not draw its attention to the existence of such a widespread opinion, which is not confined to non-official classes only, but which is very largely shared by the official classes also. When there is such evidence on its own records, an evidence which one cannot but regard as damaging to the existing system, it is surely very surprising that the Government should utterly disregard it, and should unblushingly enhance the assessment in a portion of this exceptionally situated area. As we remarked on a former occasion, in the very year which saw the introduction of the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act enhanced rates were introduced in a large portion of the Purandhar Táluka of the Poona District, and during the last four years, if we mistake not, another táluka was similarly treated; and now comes the turn of the Nagar Táluka. As regards the Ahmednagar District, of which the Nagar Táluka forms a part, it should be specially remarked that of the four districts which form this area the Ahmednagar District is by general consent considered to be the worst in point of agricultural distress,—an opinion which is confirmed by Mr. Woodward also. It should be also further remembered that Mr. Stewart, the Survey and Settlement Commissioner, has given it as his deliberate opinion that the lands are fast slipping out of the hands of their present holders—an operation which in his opinion has received an additional stimulus from the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act. And notwithstanding all this evidence before it the Government quietly proceeds to discharge its ordinary duty just as though there were no circumstances calling for a suspension of the ordinary procedure!! One would have thought that a Government professing so much solicitude for the welfare of the people committed to its so-called fostering care as the Bombay Government does would have at least suspended the enhancement of its demand and would have thus set an example to the money-lending classes to be less exacting. And after this we are really to believe that the Bombay Government is anxious "to aid impoverished cultivators in improving their position"!!! How can this be really believed when, as we pointed out clearly in our last impression, the Government of Bombay displayed no scruples whatever in appropriating to itself the profits from improvements effected at the expense of the local funds—a source of revenue which is as much private as anything? What right had the Bombay Government to appropriate to itself any share, howsoever small, of the profits from such improvements? And even after a proceeding of such doubtful propriety we are told by the Governor in Council that he has treated the ryots of the Nagar Táluka very generously. We are of course open to correction as regards our facts if we have been unconsciously led into misstating them; but if the facts be as we have stated them to be,—and we have no doubt that they will be found to be substantially correct,—then we can only say this that language fails us in characterizing this proceeding as strongly as it deserves. It is to be hoped that the Government of India will duly consider this subject and suspend the enforcement of the revised rates until a full enquiry is instituted into the would-be consequences of this rash proceeding on the part of the Government of Bombay.

Assessment of wells and remarks in connection therewith.

The Prabhákar (11) of the 23rd April says:—From the discussion that is going on in the Bombay Gazette regarding the land revenue assessment, the actions of the revenue authorities do not come out in a favourable light. Their intention of abandoning the assessment on wells does not seem to be worth much in the face of their avowed determination to assess all lands additionally, whether the subsoil water they contain is used or not. It would seem that this so-called sacrifice of revenue has been made on grounds of pure expediency, as is acknowledged by Sir Barrow Ellis, so that it is an open question that when, by temporarily abandoning the revenue on wells, they have fairly induced the poor ryots to sink more wells with borrowed money, they will not revert to their former assessment. Indeed, the change of officials is so universal that what one officer promises in good faith his successor may not see the desirability or expediency of fulfilling. In fact, the main object of the officials is revenue, no matter how collected. Their motto would seem to be "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." It is not the largeness of the revenue but the quick and easy collection of it that they look to. It is, in short, the unstatesmanlike view they take of revenue administration. It is difficult to believe in the sincerity of authorities when, after acknowledging that the sacrifice of revenue from wells will be as nothing compared to the gain not only to the community but to the State also, they proceed forthwith to make up for this alleged loss by an unfair taxation on all lands containing subsoil water. We confess we are unable to understand the contention of our contemporary that land which has the advantage of water-supply within reasonable distance of the surface should pay more than land which has no such advantage, unless, indeed, the water-supply has been provided by Government.

Approves of the land revenue policy of the Bombay Government as depicted in a recent resolution on the subject.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 20th April observes that the two local English dailies have been engaged in a somewhat excited controversy on certain points suggested by the recent Government resolution on the subject of the revenue survey and assessment system. This discussion has served to show to the greatest advantage the merits of the new policy of the Government as based on broad principles and being in every respect clear, well-defined, generous, and above all just to the cultivator and the State. The letter of Mr. Monteath to the Bombay Gazette, apart from serving the particular occasion which called it forth, shows the liberal spirit in which the Government have been practically acting for years past in respect of the land revenue demand. The ryot in the Presidency may now be held to have got nearly all the assurance and safeguard which may be supposed as being in the power of the Government to give, that the latter will leave to him all the fruit of the expenditure of his skill, labour, and capital in the cultivation of his land. There is no doubt such will be the opinion of all clear-headed readers of the recent literature on the subject, in spite of the differences apparently observable in the polemical writings of editors anxious for the promotion of the public weal.

Remarks in connection with the bungalows in the Marine Lines, Bombay.

In noticing the condemnation of the buildings in the Marine Lines occupied by military officers and the recommendation to replace them by substantially built bungalows, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 21st April observes that the buildings are not so wretched as described in the Bombay Gazette. The Gazette says that these edifices are built of bamboo and mud and are thatched. This is true; but they are not so bad as the huts of the poor people, as asserted by the Gazette. Though these buildings are thatched they have wooden ceilings. The mud and bamboo walls have a thick coating of fine lime and have therefore an appearance of walls built of mortar. The glass windows add to the comfort and beauty of these buildings. The edifices have both in front and at their back well kept gardens, and being on the sea beach on the west coast of the island they are airy. Their occupants no doubt enjoy great comfort and convenience. The Gazette accuses Government of charging high rent, but it is wrong in its calculations. Though the edifices themselves are not costly, the plots of ground on which they stand are valuable, and hence the rent charged to the occupants is not exorbitant at all.

However it cannot be denied that the thatched edifices are more liable to catch fire than pucka-built bungalows, and their floors being of mud get damp during the wet season. Since the occupants of these bungalows are military officers who are compelled to reside in them, they ought to be improved so as to remove any cause for complaint. Care however must be taken that the new buildings are not built so close to each other, nor lofty so as to obstruct the free ventilation of air in the fort and the esplanade. [The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Requests His Excellency the Governor to take proper notice of the recent fracas at the Charni Road level crossing, Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 25th April requests Sir James Fergusson to take proper notice of the affray that occurred between Captain Fergusson and the railway police at the Chaupáti level crossing. The Captain was wrong in having infringed the Railway Act by attempting to cross the line while the gates were being closed, and the Railway authorities should be asked by His Excellency to prosecute Captain Fergusson for his fault. On the other hand, Captain Fergusson should be directed to prosecute the railway police for having made an assault upon him. Captain Brown, the Superintendent of the Railway Police, deserves severe censure for having suppressed the affair after Captain Fergusson had communicated to him that he was the European officer who had created the affray. Captain Brown had no authority to act in this way, and he would not certainly have done so had the offender been a well-to-do Native.

Complains of the wretched condition of the civil court-house at Surat.

The Suryă Prakásh (80) of the 19th April says that it is much to be regretted that while thousands of rupees are spent every year by the Public Works Department at Surat the repairs to the wretched civil court-house at that station are neglected. The court-house does not give sufficient accommodation. In the rainy season and at the time of floods the place becomes simply wretched to stay in. There is no suitable accommodation either for suitors or vakils. The Assistant Judge's court was swept away in the recent floods and the Subordinate Judge's court narrowly escaped meeting with a similar fate. It is very strange that nothing has yet been done to improve the condition of the court-house. Mr. Fulton ought to take up the matter and remove the inconvenience suffered by the public of Surat. It is to be hoped that the authorities will attend to this matter.

Over-crowding of passengers in the steamship Bhima.

A correspondent of the Maháráshtră Hitechchhu (42) of the 21st April says that he was a passenger on board the steamer Bhima on 1st April from Bombay to Ratnágiri. The over-crowding of passengers was so great when the steamer left the Bombay harbour that it was impossible for anyone to move. The passengers on the lower deck were unable to breathe owing to the fearful crowding. The correspondent expresses surprise that Government should take no notice of the disgraceful conduct of the captain of the Bhima in allowing it to be literally crammed with human beings. If the lower animals are ill-treated the persons doing so are made to account for their conduct. It is therefore surprising that no notice should be taken of the ill-treatment of human beings. The correspondent is of opinion that Government officers should be deputed at each place where steamers anchor to go and see that steamers are not over-crowded.

Suggests the constrution of a parapet wall round two large holes near the custom house adjoining the Purnagad ferry.

A correspondent of the Satyă Shodhak (59) of the 20th April says that on the side of the hill-passage leading to the Purnagad ferry-boat and very close to the custom house there are two large holes from ten to fifteen feet deep. This path is very much frequented by postal runners and travellers. Owing to the want of a parapet wall round these holes or of some similar protection, there is considerable chance of human beings and animals falling into these pits during dark nights. The correspondent suggests that the authorities who have the disposal of the local funds should take steps to construct a parapet wall round the holes.

Says that a band of men exists in the village of Bhámburda near Poona who make their living by giving false evidence in courts of justice.

The Din Bandhu (5) of the 20th April says that in the village of Bhámburda near Poona a company of men exists who make it their business to live by giving false evidence in courts of justice. The head of this band is a Bráhman. He has been living in Bhámburda for several years. He has in reality no means of obtaining his living, but apparently carries on the business of a broker or a writer. His house is the rendezvous of the gang. In civil suits or criminal trials one or more of this company are ready to give evidence on one side or the other. In the cases which have been tried within the last three years it can be proved from the records of the civil and criminal courts in the Poona Collectorate that one or more of this gang have been witnesses in them. The men of this company also take part in settling disputes which arise in the village of Bhámburda. That the Bráhman who is at the head of the gang is an untruthful and unreliable person can be proved from the records of the courts in the Poona Collectorate. It is to be hoped that the authorities concerned will take steps to put down these men who make their living by giving false evidence.

Asks the Superintendent of Police of the Surat District to take security for good conduct from certain mischievous Pársi boys of Bulsár.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 25th April observes that some five or six Pársi boys at Bulsár are great vagabonds. They go about at night and plunder persons across whom they happen to come. Their leader Bhiku is a damaged character. The Superintendent of Police of the Surat District ought to compel them to give security for good behaviour in future.

A complaint regarding the delivery of the mails at Gadhaka.

A correspondent of the Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 24th April says that the post is now received at Gadhaka twice a week instead of on every alternative day as previously. Merchants have to suffer much inconvenience and loss in this cotton season by this arrangement. It would be conferring a blessing on the people if the post were to be delivered every alternate day, as was the case formerly.

Transfer of Dr. Banks to the Civil Surgeoncy of Surat.

Remarks on the mitigation of Dr. Banks' punishment.

In a paragraph headed "Dr. Banks' case," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 21st April says:—We have it on the authority of the Times of India that the Government have withdrawn their resolution on Dr. Banks' case removing him from civil employ, and have inflicted a milder punishment upon him by transferring him from Ahmedabad to Surat. At the latter place. Dr. Banks will not, it is said, enjoy the advantages of lucrative practice which he had at the former. It may be urged that if that is the only result of the transfer, Dr. Banks can hardly be said to be punished for what he did. The case has, however, been discussed from all points of view, and the attention which it has drawn is of itself calculated to prevent the recurrence of such acts of lawlessness as Dr. Banks committed. Dr. Banks' best apologists have not pleaded that he did not deserve censure. While on the other hand it must be borne in mind that the story which his shikári gave him of the treatment received by him from the villagers accounted for part of his conduct. The case will, we hope, prove a warning in future and the discussion will now end.

Is glad that Government has yielded to public clamour.

Referring to Dr. Banks' transfer to Surat, the Mahrátta (2) of the 20th April says:—We must confess we did not find fault with Government for having been too severe in awarding the punishment, for we were of opinion that there must have been ample evidence before it. The Government has now mitigated the punishment, and we are not prepared to find fault with this procedure either. Some of our contemporaries are inclined to infer that the articles in the Times of India and other English papers induced Sir James Fergusson's Government to reduce the punishment. We are not at all sorry for this. We wish that public opinion in India should always dictate the policy of Government and that it should always be so strong as to make it impossible for Government to go against it. In this matter Government has shown that it is always open to correction, and that should there ever be injustice in any case it would only be too glad to confess its error of judgment. We wish we had a Government like this in Madras. It would have at once declared the Salem victims innocent and restored them to liberty.

Approves of the remission of the severe sentence passed on Dr. Banks.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 20th April observes that the Government may be conceded the credit of having shown deference to public opinion in the matter of its first decision in the case of Dr. Banks. That decision, though intended to uphold the majesty of the law and to show the anxiety of the Government to prevent the least molestation of the more helpless members of the community by powerful neighbours, especially when the latter may be clothed with the semblance of strength derivable from official position, was both hasty and severe. The harsh punishment proposed to be inflicted on the doctor for his first and only fault during his long and useful term of service evoked the sympathy of the public in his favour. Far and wide was spread the cry for the reconsideration of the sentence pronounced on him, and the result of it has been that Government has been induced to show leniency. The forbearance has been shown in good time and with good grace, and this is creditable to the authorities and satisfactory to the public.

Remarks in connection with Dr. Banks' transfer to Surat as Civil Surgeon at that station.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 20th April says:—A contemporary has appointed Dr. Banks to be Civil Surgeon at Surat. This is more than the Government of Bombay could do. It does not appear that Dr. Banks has joined his post, or that the military authorities have allowed him to do so, under instructions from the Times of India. Probably the wish has been father to the thought. But knowing as we do the power of organised Anglo-Indian opposition, which so often obstructs the smooth administration of the empire and impedes the progress of the people, and knowing too the pliant good nature of the Governor of Bombay and his want of experience, we would not be surprised if the resolution of 27th March came to be rescinded scarcely before the ink in which it was written was dry. A surrender like this would imply that the British Government, costing Natives about twenty-four krors of rupees a year, exists only to execute the will of a lákh and a half Anglo-Indian subjects, who, in their turn, take away from the country fifteen krors of rupees annually. We appeal to every honest Englishman, liberal or conservative, official or non-official, to say if such a state of things or even an impression or suspicion as to its being so would be desirable?

Says that Government has shown weakness in reducing the punishment of Dr. Banks.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 20th April says:—Dr. Banks' case has been reconsidered and a fresh proof given of our Governor's weakness. Impulse and weakness seem to characterise the public conduct of Sir James Fergusson. Instead of taking the case to the proper tribunals he officiously interfered and fulminated a resolution depriving the shikáring and flogging doctor of civil employment. But as soon as a hubbub is raised by some partisan papers who arrogate to themselves the dignity of being the only exponents of public opinion, he gets frightened and reviews the case and puts Dr. Banks in the civil surgeoncy of Surat. We think that out of the two courses the latter is more erroneous and wide of the correct line than the former. Public justice remains yet unsatisfied, and the poor villagers have got for their sufferings under the whip the only consolation of seeing their whipper transferred from Ahmedabad to Surat. We hope the proper course will yet be followed and Dr. Banks will be put upon his trial.

Says that by reversing the sentence passed on Dr. Banks Government have created an unwise precedent.

The Subodh Patrika (14) of the 20th April says:—We are told that Government have changed their mind with regard to Dr. Banks' case. He will, it appears, be now transferred to Surat. If so, we cannot help remarking that Government have considerably damaged the cause which by their first resolution they intended to serve. If they had in the first instance degraded Dr. Banks instead of dismissing him from civil employ altogether we should not have had much to complain of. But by reversing the punishment which they at first passed on due enquiry they have created an unwise precedent which will most eagerly be appealed to whenever similar occasions arise in the future. It is well-known that whatever the merits of the case, where a European is involved in any matter, there is generally no lack of advocates for him in the Anglo-Indian press. The present instance will only serve to encourage such indiscriminate advocacy. Moreover since the date of the resolution certain facts have been brought to light which give the version of the story from the villagers' point of view. According to it, it was the police patel or his subordinate who snatched the rifle from Dr. Banks' shikári, as he was unable to produce a license for it and would not moreover take the man to his master, and that the rifle was forthcoming as soon as Dr. Banks asked for it. This is the other side of the picture, which paints Dr. Banks' offence in bolder colours than his own version of the matter does. We hope that Government satisfied themselves by due inquiry as to the correctness or incorrectness of these statements before their reported reconsideration of the case took place. Natives however may justly complain when they find that it is the European and never the Native servants of Government, whatever their standing in the Government service may be, that succeed in getting their cases reconsidered.

Fickle conduct of Sir James Fergusson in connection with Dr. Banks' case.

The Kesari (38) of the 22nd April says that by yielding to the clamour raised by the English press in favour of Dr. Banks, Sir James Fergusson has shown to the public that he has no strength of character. Ought the Governor of Bombay to attach so much importance to the row made by the English public so as to withdraw a resolution deliberately passed? If a Native officer had been found guilty of the offence of which Dr. Banks was found guilty, not only would he have been deprived of his appointment but he would have been tried and sentenced to a couple of years' hard labour. For a similar misconduct Dr. Banks' removal from civil employment was not at all a harsh treatment. In the case of Surendranáth Bánerji the whole of India pleaded for mercy, and in the defamation cases against the editors of the Kesari and the Mahrátta newspapers the people in the Bombay Presidency begged Government to remit their sentence, but no attention was paid to these humble and respectful requests. In the case of Dr. Banks, however, it was considered right to cancel a resolution deliberately passed after making due enquiries started by Government itself and to remit the punishment. The public had only just begun to applaud the conduct of Sir James Fergusson, but by his fatal fickleness he has shown that he is not worthy of the praise which was bestowed upon his policy. Fickleness and partiality in high places are calculated to create dissatisfaction and to drive away all feelings of loyalty from the minds of the people.

Remarks in connection with the reduction of the punishment awarded to Dr. Banks.

The Poona Vaibhav (51) of the 20th April says that Government have after all reduced the heavy punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks and have only transferred him to Surat. In Native States it is alleged that promotion and reduction of officials are uncertain and capricious. In these matters however it was always understood that the British Government acted with due deliberation and on principle, but the above change of front has shown that the policy of the British Government was not what it was supposed to be. It would have been better if Government had in the first instance dealt leniently with Dr. Banks' offence. The treatment of Dr. Banks will however have one good effect. Europeans who usually treat Natives in the most reckless manner will now hesitate a little before they venture to ill-treat and ill-use them. This is the only advantage resulting from the action of Government and for which the people must be grateful to Sir James Fergusson.

Disapproves of the reduction in the punishment of Dr. Banks.

The Din Bandhu (5) of the 20th April alludes to Dr. Banks' case and remarks:—We learn from the Times of India that the agitation in favour of Dr. Banks has at last resulted in his transfer to Surat as a Civil Surgeon without any other punishment. If this news be correct it will no doubt be received with surprise all over the country, for the people will now say that the resolution was issued to elicit public opinion, which it seems has no value. It must be admitted that Dr. Banks committed a great fault, for he actually took the law into his own hands. But because the punishment awarded to him was rather severe, therefore the subsequent result should be correspondingly trifling, strikes somewhat peculiar. It would have been far better had Dr. Banks been let off before, if Government thought it proper. But we have every confidence in the impartiality of the Government of Bombay. Perhaps they thought that to a man in Dr. Banks' position the mere resolution was a sufficient castigation and this is quite true. But justice should be equally distributed, and hence we object to the letting off of Dr. Banks.

Disapproves of the mitigation of the sentence passed on Dr. Banks.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 23rd April observes that the Native public has received with disappointment and fear the news of the reduction of the sentence passed by Government on Dr. Banks and his transfer to Surat. This is one more instance of Government surrendering to the pressure exercised by Europeans and the denunciations launched by the Anglo-Indian press. Sir James Fergusson has destroyed the good effects of the Government resolution ordering the punishment of the doctor.

Observes that the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks should not be cancelled.

In noticing the report that the sentence passed by Government on Dr. Banks has been remitted and that he has been transferred to Surat, the Rást Goftár (111) of the 20th April observes that it is simply impossible that the punishment awarded by Government should have been modified by a telegram from the Governor, who has gone to Aden; but if the sentence has been withdrawn, the proceeding is highly objectionable in the interests of justice. If in spite of this view of the case the punishment is modified, it will simply prove that the Anglo-Indian press is arbitrary and wilful and that Government being afraid of it do not scruple to withdraw their promises and assurances in the matter of the rights of Natives. The people will have no more confidence in the resolutions and acts of the Bombay Government. The sentence already passed by Government on Dr. Banks is just, though severe, because he practised various oppressions on poor villagers and it was necessary to make an example of him. Many instances of wilful conduct of Europeans have occurred in the mofussil and they have all been overlooked. The police and other authorities of Ahmedabad did not take any notice of Dr. Banks' case, which reached the ears of Government through a vernacular newspaper. The district magistrate, though aware of the offences committed by the doctor, not only did not punish him but neglected to report the matter to the Commissioner of the Division. And when the authorities were called upon to submit a report on the subject they thought that the offences committed by the doctor were trifling. This shows that what Dr. Banks did was a common occurrence and the Europeans in the mofussil consider it is their birthright to commit such acts of oppression. It is said that Dr. Banks entertained a wrong suspicion that the villagers forcibly took away his gun. The rifle was under the Arms Act snatched from the Wághri servant of the doctor by the patel, who did not know that it belonged to the doctor and to whom the servant did not produce the license to carry it about when called upon to do so. When the patel knew that the gun belonged to the doctor he immediately produced it. This version of the story looks probable. It cannot be believed that the timid villagers should have been so bold as to have taken away the gun of a high European officer. There was no evidence except that of the Wághri servant that the villagers took away the gun, beat the Wághri and gave offence to the doctor. Dr. Banks believed every word of what the Wághri told him and searched the cottages of the villagers and flogged them. [The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad states that the villagers were made to take off their clothes and the lashes were administered on their bare backs. This statement also looks probable. It is further said that at one time it was intended to prosecute the villagers for the offences alleged to have been committed by them, and that some of them were either brought or were about to be brought to Ahmedabad; but on the facts coming to light they escaped further oppression. Under these circumstances the sentence passed upon Dr.

Banks should not be cancelled or mitigated. The Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date expresses similar sentiments. The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the same date wishes that Government should not mitigate the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks.]

Remarks in connection with the mitigation of Dr. Banks' sentence and his transfer to Surat.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 23rd April says:—Sir James Fergusson appears to have repented at the severity of the punishment inflicted on Dr. Banks and has made amends by now transferring him to Surat. We are glad that he has escaped the gross injustice which Government sought to inflict upon him. We hope that the doctor will benefit by the experience he has acquired in the matter. This solitary instance will not check the high-handed and disgraceful conduct of Europeans towards poor villagers, but it is feared that it will encourage such conduct. Sir James has shown his weak and hesitating nature even in this case and made the haughty Europeans laugh in their sleeves. An impression will be made upon their minds that however much they may exercise cruelty towards Natives, and whatever may be the punishment inflicted by Government, the cry raised by the Anglo-Indian newspapers will not fail to compel such a weak Governor as Sir James to change his former resolution. It would have been very creditable to Government if Dr. Banks had been in the first instance let off with a severe censure. Sir James has proved such a Governor as the public will not repose confidence in his resolutions in future. We hope that from the experience Sir James has acquired in this case he will issue resolutions hereafter bestowing his best and most careful attention upon them.

Railways.

Does not approve of the too rapid construction of railways in India.

In an article headed "A warning voice as regards Railways in India," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 21st April alludes to the paper read by Mr. Connell before the East India Association and remarks:—With much of this we entirely disagree. We do not believe that all the evils here pointed out are to be laid to the account of railways. We do not think railway administration as hitherto conducted has been an unmitigated curse and the mother of all of India's misfortunes as here contended for. We are not unmindful of the cheap, quick, and pretty comfortable conveyance which railways have placed within the reach of the poorest among us. We cannot forget how greatly useful and convenient railways are in conveying goods and merchandize from place to place, opening up markets to products which heretofore rotted for want of conveyance. We cannot ignore the services which railways perform in times of scarcity or famine by distributing food cheaply and quickly. We do not think the decay of home industries, such as weaving, can properly be charged to railways alone. It is, we think, the result of inevitable economic laws. Greatly as we deplore that decay, we do not believe it can be arrested by abolishing railways. Many of the opinions expressed by Mr. Connell are contrary to the teachings of political economy. But though thus far differing from Mr. Connell, we agree with him in thinking that one of the effects of railways, though an indirect effect, is the impoverishment of the labouring classes by bringing them in competition with the capitalist class. By facilitating conveyance of goods they have contributed to an accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few, whereas in former times there was a less unequal distribution of wealth. It cannot be denied that by enabling the capitalist to obtain the highest price for Indian commodities the railways have helped to increase the general wealth of the country, but particular classes have suffered, and among these classes the artizan class has suffered most. The decay of industries other than agricultural and the poverty of a majority of the population are grim facts, and cannot be negatived by prosperous trade returns or the glitter of mercantile cities. To these evils railways have in a measure contributed, and though they cannot be condemned and abolished because of these effects, since their usefulness in increasing the wealth of the country generally is beyond dispute, yet these facts teach one lesson which cannot be wisely ignored. The lesson we mean is that in our present rage for railways we are having too much of a good thing all at once. Railways are an excellent means of developing the trade of the country. But our country is in such a chronic state of inanition that any attempt to resuscitate her too suddenly must end in disaster. Like a famine-stricken person she must be cautiously fed. If too much food is given to her all at once the result would be fatal. All reform to be beneficial and lasting among any people must be commensurate with their intelligence and advancement. Until railways are made necessary by the special wants of our people, they ought not to be too rapidly extended. As a cheap and quick conveyance in times of famine, railways are invaluable. But at other times the usefulness of railways depends on the productive power of the country, and unless there is an assurance of this productive power it is sheer madness to press on railways. Another point about which we cannot be too cautious is the increase of our liabilities. Railways, whether constructed by the State or by private agency must add to the liabilities of the State in the shape of interest, which means an addition to the home charges. Any addition to this item of India's liabilities signifies heavy loss on exchange. Unless there is an assurance that this loss will be recouped by the railways paying profits or otherwise affecting the money-market, an excessive zeal for railways will be ruinous if not properly restrained.

Says that the construction of railways is detrimental to the interests of India.

The Arunodayă (16) of the 20th April, in alluding to the same subject, observes that it has frequently urged that the railways have been one of the most potent causes of the impoverishment of India and Mr. Connell's remarks are also to the same effect. He says that in constructing railways the object of Government is principally to facilitate the introduction of English goods and commodities into all parts of India and not the enrichment of India itself. Such an observation proceeding from a native of India would be at once pronounced disloyal; but of course Mr. Connell cannot be charged in the same way. He asserts that railways are constructed in India not in the interests of the inhabitants of India but in those of the merchants in England. This assertion is rigidly true. Again Mr. Connell says that the English moneyed classes have sent as it were a sword in the shape of railways to India to ruin its inhabitants. This language is perhaps too strong and Native papers would do well not to repeat it, but of its truth there can be no doubt whatever. Although the natives of India are to some extent responsible for the destitution which prevails here, yet it cannot be denied that these so-called foreign improvements are to a great extent answerable for their degraded and destitute condition. These so-called improvements are extracting the very life-blood of India. They have already destroyed the Indian indigenous industries. Outwardly India appears to be thriving and the volume of the trade seems immense; but it must be remembered that the whole of the commerce is in the hands of foreigners. The British Government has brought tranquillity in its train and with it an enormous increase in the population of India, who have but one profession, and that is agriculture. Before the introduction of western civilization into India this country was able to supply all the wants of its population, but this is not the case now. If the present fearful state of things continues the result is appalling to contemplate. The multiplication of railways enhances the consumption by the natives of India of English commodities, which causes an increase in the remittances to England. The construction and maintenance of railways are done by means of costly European agency, which again has the tendency to aggravate the necessity of making remittances of money to England in some shape or another. Thousands of Natives who make their living by different industries are thrown out of employment, and the number of consumers being larger in proportion to the amount of corn raised from land the price of corn necessarily rises and consequently the land revenue demand of Government is raised also. Upon the whole the railways do not in any way benefit India. It is to be hoped that the views enunciated by Mr. Connell will have some effect on the policy of Government.

Municipalities.

Indifference of Mr. Reid, the president of the municipality of Ahmedabad, in the matter of the new election of municipal commissioners.

The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 24th April says that the Bombay Government cannot be so inconsiderate as only to ask for the opinion of the people of Surat with regard to the new election of municipal commissioners and not of the people of Ahmedabad, which is superior in every respect to Surat. The reason for this difference perhaps is to be found in the fact that Ahmedabad has Mr. Reid as the president of the municipality. While a public meeting convened by the municipal authorities was held at Surat to consider the matter the Ahmedabad public neither knew the intentions of Government nor has it been asked to give its opinion. Towards the close of the last general committee meeting a conversation ensued on the subject of the elections, but no proposal was formally laid before it. If what the Hitechchhu has heard be true, it is stated in the proceeding book of the municipality that many commissioners are of opinion that the board should consist of 28 members, half the number of which should be elected by the people. According to the statement of its reporter, the Hitechchhu says that some of the members present expressed themselves in favour of having an additional representative from each of the Sháhpur and Dariyápur wards in case Government fixed the number of elected commissioners at 14 instead of 12. Besides this some conversation took place on the qualifications of voters. If notwithstanding that it is written in the proceeding book that Ahmedabad is willing to fix the number of commissioners at 28 and that half of them should be elected, and if a similar representation be made to Government, then it is much to be regretted that such should be the case. It is wonderful that district officials should even disregard the special orders of Government and misrepresent matters. Will not Government call the Ahmedabad officials to account? Will Government leave them uncontrolled and quietly look at whatsoever ruin they may bring on the people? While it was unanimously resolved at the public meeting held at Surat that the Government should be asked to fix the number of commissioners at 33, two-thirds of whom should be elected, unfortunate Ahmedabad is stated in the municipal proceeding book as being contented with 28 commissioners, half of which should be elected, though the latter were not at all consulted in the matter. Government ought specially to pay attention to this subject. The Hitechchhu requests Mr. Reid for the sake of the public good to publish the orders he may have received from Government in the matter. It is true that the strong authority hitherto exercised by the president would be reduced by an increase in the number of elected commissioners, but it is not creditable that public interests should be sacrificed to love of power. The Hitechchhu understands that orders have been received from Government on the subject of the new election. If this be not true and if Mr. Reid were to give any explanation in connection with the subject it would willingly publish it.

Election of members of the local fund boards at Ratnágiri.

The Bakul (18) of 20th April says that the registration of voters who are to elect the members of the future local boards is now going on and that the elections of members will probably take place in July or August next. The Bakul considers these two months extremely inconvenient for holding the elections, because during that time most of the people will be engaged in cultivating their fields. It is to be hoped therefore that the election of members will be postponed till February or March 1885, by which time the people will have become sufficiently well acquainted with the scope and requirements of the new law.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
29th April 1884.

---

u

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Acquisition of India by the English: Some remarks about the— ... 3
Agricultural bank: Expression of opinion that the experiment of an— made by Government is not on a sufficiently large scale to produce tangible results 4
Bungalows in the Marine Lines, Bombay: Remarks in connection with the— 8
Civil court-house at Surat: Complaint regarding the wretched condition of the— 9
Drunkenness in India: Complaint regarding the increase in— ... 4
Fracas at the Charni Road level-crossing, Bombay: Request to His Excellency the Governor to take proper notice of the recent— ... 9
Indifference of England to the welfare of India: Complaint regarding the— 3
Land Revenue Assessment:
  Approval of the land revenue policy of the Bombay Government as depicted in a recent resolution on the subject ... 8
  Condemnation of the imposition of enhanced rates on land in the Nagar Táluka 6
  Remarks on the taxation of improvements made on land by ryots with their own capital 5
  Remarks in connection with the assessment of wells 8
Native soldier: Complaint regarding the smallness of the pay of the—... 5
Over-crowding of passengers in the steamship Bhima: Complaint regarding the— 9
Parapet wall round two large holes near the custom-house adjoining the Purangad ferry: Suggestion for constructing a— ... 9
Perjury: Statement that a band of men exists in the village of Bhámburda near Poona who make their living by giving false evidence in courts of justice 10
Police: Request to the Superintendent of — of the Surat District to take security for good conduct from certain mischievous Pársi boys of Bulsár 10
Postal matters: Complaint regarding the delivery of the mails at Gadhaka. 10
Rules promulgated by Mr. Livingston, Principal of the Krisnagar College, for punishing students in his charge: Remarks in connection with the— 5
Viceroyalty of India: Expression of opinion that the high-pitched bureaucracy of India will require a succession of strong and liberal Viceroys to bring it down to a low key 4

Part II.—Transfer of Dr. Banks to the Civil Surgeoncy of Surat—

Approval of the remission of the severe sentence passed upon Dr. Banks. 11
Disapproval of the reduction in the punishment of Dr. Banks—
  The Bombay Samáchár 13
  The Din Bandhu 12
Expression of joy at Government having yielded to public clamour ... 10
Expression of opinion that Government have shown weakness in reducing the punishment of Dr. Banks 11
Expression of opinion that by reversing the sentence passed on Dr. Banks Government have created an unwise precedent 11
Expression of opinion that the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks should not be cancelled 13
Fickle conduct of Sir James Fergusson in connection with Dr. Banks' case 12
Remarks on the mitigation of Dr. Banks' punishment—
  The Indian Spectator 11
  The Indu Prakásh 10
  The Jáme Jamshed 14
  The Poona Vaibhav 12

Page.

PART III.—Railways—

Construction of railways in India:
  Disapproval of the too rapid— 14
  Expression of opinion that the —is detrimental to the interests of the country 15

PART IV.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Indifference of Mr. Reid, the President of the municipality of —, in the matter of the new election of municipal commissioners... 15
Ratnágiri: Election of members of the local fund boards at— ... 16

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 3rd May 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
12	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
13	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
14	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
15	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
16	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
17	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
18	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
19	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
20	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*21	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*22	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*37	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
38	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
39	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
40	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
41	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*50	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
51	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*53	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*54	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
57	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
58	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
59	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*60	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
61	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*62	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

C. R
201
INDIA OFFICE
27

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*66	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
67	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
69	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
70	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*71	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*73	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*74	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
75	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*76	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
77	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
78	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
79	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
80	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
81	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
82	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
83	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
84	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*85	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
86	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
87	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
88	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
89	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
90	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
91	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
92	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
93	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*94	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
95	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
96	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
97	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*98	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
99	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*100	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
101	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
102	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
103	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*104	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
105	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
106	„ Lok Mitră	Do.	Weekly	800
107	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
108	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
109	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
110	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
111	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
112	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
113	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*114	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*124	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Remarks in connection with Lord Kimberley's refusal to raise the limit of age for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service.

The Kesari (38) of the 29th April, in alluding to Lord Kimberley's reply on the age of Civil Service candidates, observes that owing to foreign domination the natives of India are forced to learn the English language. If they did not do this, even the low-paid clerkships in railway and merchants' offices would be given to the children of poor Europeans and the Natives would be reduced to the utmost verge of destitution. It would be difficult to conceive the incalculable waste of mental energies which takes place owing to the forced and compulsory study of the English language. At the age at which the Civil Service candidates are allowed to compete, very few Natives would be able to stand the mental strain which is required in order to attain the requisite proficiency in the English language. The rulers of India could have had no other object in reducing the age of candidates for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service than the complete exclusion of Natives from it. Lord Lytton clearly said so. Lord Kimberley remarked that since 28 Natives presented themselves for the Civil Service examination during the last six years, the reduction in age could not have acted as a hindrance to any appreciable extent to Natives to their appearing at the competitive examination. But Lord Kimberley did not state how many of these 28 succeeded in passing. Comparing the populations of India and England, four-fifths of the Civil Service appointments should be given to Natives and the remaining one-fifth to Europeans. If Englishmen were compelled to pass an examination in the vernacular similar to that which Natives have to undergo in the English language in competing for the Indian Civil Service, very few of them would pass. The natives of India do not want any favour. They would be satisfied if the limit of age for the entrance examination is raised to 23 and the examination itself held simultaneously in England and India. The system of nominating Natives to Civil Service appointments is based on a wrong principle and therefore should be done away with. In conclusion, the Kesari alludes to the immense increase in the home charges consequent on the employment of Europeans in India, and observes that this country will not be able to bear this enormous drain for any lengthened period. Its ultimate consequences will be ruinous to the conquerors and the conquered. It is to be hoped that Lords Kimberley and Ripon will consider this subject deeply and raise the limit of age for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service and that Parliament will order the holding of the examination simultaneously in India and England. [The Samsher Báhádur (112) of the 25th April disapproves of the Statutory Civil Service and advises the Natives and public associations of India to continue the agitation for increasing the limit of age of candidates for the Civil Service.]

Disapproves of Lord Kimberley's reply to the deputation from the Indian Reform Association urging Government to raise the standard of age of candidates for the Indian Civil Service.

In noticing the reply of Lord Kimberley to the deputation from the Indian Reform Association, which urged Government to raise the limit of age of candidates presenting themselves for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service, the Rást Goftár (111) of the 27th April observes that the reply is disappointing to the natives of India. It would have been better had His Lordship plainly stated that the Civil Service was closed to Natives. It is practically impossible to the Natives to prepare and compete successfully at the examination held in London at the early age of 19 years. This was pointed out conspicuously by the deputation. Lord Kimberley in reply alluded to the deceptive arrangement made by Lord Lytton in regard to the Statutory Civilians and remarked that 28 Natives were under that arrangement admitted into the Civil Service within the last six years. But the Secretary of State forgot to point out at the same time that an invidious distinction was observed as regards the pay, rights and status of the Statutory Civilians and those of the Civilians who entered the service by the door of open competition. He however confessed that Lord Lytton, when making the recommendation for the institution of the Statutory Civil Service, suggested to the then Secretary of State for India to get an Act of Parliament passed for the purpose of preventing Natives from becoming Civil Servants, but if that could not be done, then the age for passing the Civil Service examination should be lowered, which practically would have the same effect. In reply to the remark made by the London Times that the agitation made for reducing the limit of age proceeded from the private tutors who prepared students for the examination, the Goftár observes that Mr. Wren's advocacy of the raising of the limit of age cannot but prove beneficial to the natives of India. In a letter from Mr. Gurney to the Rást Goftár it is remarked that his firm had not the pleasure of passing a single native of India, because they did not get a single student young enough.

Says that the merchants of Lancashire should help India in obtaining the repeal of the duties on gold and silver ware imported into England.

The Subodh Patrika (14) of the 27th April alludes to the agitation relating to the repeal of the English duties on gold and silver manufactures and the abolition of the obnoxious system of hall-marking, and says :—Cannot the weight of Lancashire be brought in to aid us in this matter? We had to give up our duties on English cloth for the sake of Lancashire. Ought it not now to insist upon the repeal of these duties as being protective as it insisted that our duties on English cloth were? Surely rich England can afford better to dispense with them than poor India could her duties on cloth. The benefit which the latter country will derive both from the increased demand for silver and for her manufactures of silver will be very great indeed. Besides the English consumer will get these articles very cheap. We believe the subject of these duties has aroused sufficient attention both in this country and in India to ensure a continual agitation being kept up till they are finally abolished whenever that happy time should chance to come.

Remarks concerning the conduct of certain European officials towards a zamindár in the Nuddea District under certain circumstances.

In an article headed "An episode in the Bengal Mofussil life," the Native Opinion (10) of 27th April gives the facts of the Nuddea case as described in the Hindu Patriot and says :—Taking the best possible view of the doings of Mr. Taylor (the Magistrate of Nuddea) and Mr. Ritchie we cannot but think that both of them transgressed their duty very egregiously. They seem to have been offended at the temerity of Bábu Nuffer in taking away the property of their friend Mr. Savi. But though Mr. Savi is a European, what is he, we should ask, that his property should not be purchased by anyone when offered for sale by a third party who had become the owner, and all along he making no attempt to purchase it, though time was expressly given him for doing so? As to the promise of giving notice to him alleged to be made by Bábu Nuffer we have our doubts. But even if that was so, what more notice did Mr. Savi want of the purchase? He was on the estate going to be sold and must have known all about it. Instead of thanking Bábu Nuffer for the indulgence he had given the first time, though at great inconvenience to himself, Mr. Savi idling away the time of grace has the effrontery to complain of bad treatment from the Bábu simply because he at last purchased the property. Surely it could have never been meant by the Bábu that he would never purchase it for how long a time even if Mr. Savi should fail to purchase it for himself. That is clearly unreasonable. To put such an interpretation on what the Bábu may have said on the first occasion seems quite ridiculous and we cannot understand the indignation of Messrs. Taylor and Ritchie at his purchase, except by viewing it in the light of chafing at the wilful disobedience of their commands, of course conveyed under the garb of dissuasion. What did Mr. Ritchie mean by threatening Bábu Nuffer with the danger of forfeiting the esteem and good-will of the European community of the district? Had that forfeiture to do anything with the false charge by the woman or with the petition of the ryots? Surely it sounds very ludicrous when the Lieutenant-Governor says that though Mr. Taylor would have exercised a wiser discretion if he had abstained from any interference at all in the matter, he (Mr. Rivers Thompson) does not see that any charge of abuse of official authority can fairly be laid against him. Now we are sure that the false charge by the woman as well as the petition by the ryots cannot have been directly due to the offence given by Bábu Nuffer to the Magistrate and Collector of the district. But in the mofussil whenever it is known that a certain person has fallen under the displeasure of the sáheb, there are very many individuals to be found who find it a fine opportunity of wreaking all their old grievances on him and do their utmost to injure him as much as possible. Besides such a development of charges and counter-charges the behaviour of officers in the position of Mr. Taylor and Mr. Ritchie is calculated to produce far greater injuries. They had no business to dabble in such matters. We have much to thank the circumstance that the Bábu in this case was a man of means, and we leave our readers to imagine what would have been the result if a poor man had been in similar circumstances.

Recommends that the powers exercised by Judicial Courts in the contempt of court cases should be brought under a reasonable check.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 1st May observes that the Calcutta contempt of court case of last year in which Mr. Surendranáth Bánerji was sentenced to two months' simple imprisonment has proved that the courts exercise enormous power in such cases, which ought to be placed within reasonable bounds by a legal enactment. The Subordinate Judge of Ráneegunj has recently served the Indian Mirror with a notice calling upon it to show cause why legal steps should not be taken against the libel and contempt of court committed by it. Without waiting for the result of the latter case the Native public ought to memorialize the Supreme Government requesting it to place under proper check the gigantic powers exercised by the courts in this matter.

Advocates the separation of the magisterial and executive functions in the administrative branch of the Civil Service.

In a paragraph headed "Duties of Civil Servants," the Native Opinion (10) of the 27th April says:—What the proposal of Keswál made in the Bombay Gazette on this subject practically amounts to is separation of magisterial and other executive duties from the revenue, and we shall hail the day on which this separation is carried out. Keswál rightly states that an experienced Mámlatdár as a magistrate is as good or even better than an European Assistant Collector; and were a scheme to be devised under which the magistrate Civilian is relieved of his judicial functions, it would be a great gain to the country pecuniarily. A cheaper machinery of competent Natives to conduct these duties in the first instance must of course reduce the number and cost of the Covenanted Civil Service and give to the Indian tax-payer the much-needed relief. The people's resources have been heavily taxed and they will only prosper when expenditure is cut down considerably. Keswál's proposal, as we understand him, is quite in time and we hope our rulers will seriously consider it.

Says that the revenue officers have more duties thrown on them than they can properly perform.

The Prabhákar (11) of the 1st May says:—Some time last week the correspondence which has passed between the Home and the Indian Governments regarding the incapacity of several members of the Civil Service to maintain the labours of district work was published. Those who know the comfortable way in which most officials go through their work must be surprised to learn this. We would suggest the advisability of Government looking more closely into the interior economy of departmental working instead of looking out for robust men previous to sending them out for service in India. The selection of young men for such work, and their living in the same style as they do in England, may after all be the causes of this incapacity. From the official reports it seems that this incapacity is peculiar to Bombay alone. At first it was discovered that most of the Bombay Civilians were getting mad; now the objection is that they are not "robust" enough. For our part we think both these charges, for which there is abundance of ground, are amply proved by the evidence which we have had of the way in which Civil Servants perform their duties. "Keswál" in the Bombay Gazette seems to gauge the merit of the question at its true value, for he agrees with us, and the quiet humour with which he takes the above journal to task for its defence of the Bombay Civilians can only be appreciated by those who look beneath the surface. But Keswál attributes all this want of robustness and lunacy to "overwork, worry and responsibility." We think the hampering a revenue official with judicial functions is enough to disable any robust official and render him a fit inmate for the lunatic asylum, especially the class of men who think they are in duty bound to uphold the Government revenue system as magistrates and judges. There ought to be, as Keswál points out, separate magistrates and separate statistical officers. It is owing to this system of expecting one officer to perform the triple functions of office work, out-door work and judicial work also that the public find the statistical reports so meagre and otherwise defective. Altogether Keswál makes out a strong case in favour of the revenue and district officers, who appear to have more duties thrown upon them than they can properly perform.

Disapproves of the system of making officials to retire compulsorily from the public service both on financial grounds and in the interests of the efficiency of the service.

The Máhrátta (2) of the 27th April says:—The system of granting pensions to European officials and allowing them to retire from the public service has already enormously injured the finances of this over-taxed country. We have read of persons who offer all sorts of inducements to their superiors in grade that they may retire and thus give them a lift. The short-service system has added insult to injury. The facilities offered to covenanted servants for retirement have done mischief which is still greater, and the pension list is every year swelling and it is feared that if the present arrangements are allowed to continue we shall very soon have to starve a few millions more and make up the deficit caused by the heavy pension demand after having exhausted our surplus of exports to the last pie. It is to the interest of the Anglo-Indians and their organs that they should always support the claims of officials for early retirement from service and cry down the action of Government that may be opposed to this system of patronage, and the latest instance of such a cry is that of the Times of India in finding fault with Government for allowing one year's extension to Dr. Hewlett, our present Sanitary Commissioner. Let us see what the effect of the extension will be. The Sanitary Commissioner draws Rs. 24,000 every year and when he retires will draw a proportionately handsome sum on account of his pension. The post will be filled by his immediate subordinate and thus one more highly-paid Anglo-Indian will be put in. The interest of a few individuals may be saved by asking Dr. Hewlett to retire, but those of the millions will be injured. We neither support nor overlook the claims of individual officers, but what we protest against is the system of compulsory retirements. Government should also allow its subordinates to serve so long as they can do so without affecting efficiency, and even the opponents of Dr. Hewlett's extension have not been able to urge such a plea. Official reports bear testimony to the fact that Dr. Hewlett has been very popular and has done immense service to the department, which he has organized and well conducted, and the Presidency cannot afford to lose the advice of such an experienced head, especially at a time when the introduction of self-government has not sufficiently advanced.

Asks the natives of India to request Government to allow them to form volunteer corps of their own.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 28th April says:—Recently some of the clerks in Government service in the Panjáb applied to the Commanding Officer of the Panjáb Volunteer Rifle Corps for permission to be enlisted as volunteers and pointed out that some Native gentlemen at Quetta had already been allowed the privilege. The reply states that "the constitution of the First Panjáb Volunteer Rifles does not permit of the admission of pure Asiatics as members of the Corps." This is certainly disappointing, but it seems to us that the best way to go about this matter is not by asking for admission into the volunteer corps composed of Europeans and Eurasians but for the formation of corps consisting of Natives exclusively. Experience has shown that when Natives seek admission into the former, a technical difficulty of some kind or other is raised and the applicants are non-plussed. It is a question worth agitating why Natives should not be allowed to have volunteer corps of their own, when the country is made to pay heavily for the European volunteer forces. In the year 1884-85 these latter cost the country one lákh and a half of rupees, and it is estimated that in the next official year they will cost the State more than six lákhs. Why should the people of India be made to pay for the volunteers when they themselves are excluded from the privilege?

Says that the appointment of Sir William Wedderburn as Chief Secretary would have been more creditable to Government.

The Prabhákar (11) of the 2nd May alludes to the appointment of Mr. Richey as Chief Secretary and says:—While at Ahmedabad he was not liked by some khatpat demagogues, still by the majority of the people he is spoken of as a quiet, good-natured, unassuming gentleman, and we are glad to find that in this instance his just claims have not been overlooked. While expressing our satisfaction at the appointment we would ask whether it would not have been far better and more creditable to Government had they appointed Sir W. Wedderburn to the post of Chief Secretary? Sir William Wedderburn has on previous occasions acted as Secretary to Government, and in appointing him to the post Government would have placed the right man in the right place.

Strongly disapproves of granting Dr. Hewlett an extension of service as Sanitary Commissioner.

In an article headed "A rumoured injustice" the Native Opinion (10) of the 27th April says:—When an officer like Dr. Hewlett who has always stood in the great good books of Government is announced as standing a chance of having his period of Deputy Surgeon-Generalship extended beyond the regulation period of five years, not only will there be positive injustice done to the other equally, if not more, deserving and meritorious officers of the service, but Government will be stultifying their own action, namely, of making a rule and breaking it to suit individual tastes or interests, without any regard to the interests of a service which forms a highly important and useful branch of their own constitution. Personally we do not grudge Dr. Hewlett a few more thousands and few more pleasant Bombay and Poona seasons. He is an able man, full of energy. He can write well and can send up to Government voluminous reports when wanted. He knows how to make a department work well and all the rest of it. But if to-day Dr. Hewlett leaves the Sanitary Commissionership, there are other men who are equally, if not more, qualified to do the needful. What special claims Dr. Hewlett has on such extension as is contemplated the service has a right to inquire. We fail to see why to favour an already favoured officer others should be unjustly treated, unless it be to keep Dr. Hewlett well within the way of succeeding Dr. Beatty as Surgeon-General next April when Dr. Beatty's term of office expires. It need not be said that Dr. Hewlett must retire on pension if he gets no extension. Dr. Hewlett has always had the good fortune of enjoying the loaves and fishes of the Medical Department. He has been a pluralist. For a long time he was Health Officer and Coroner of Bombay, two most important and incongruous duties. When he got tired of the filth and dead bodies there was the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital ready to receive him with open arms as its illustrious head. From time to time he acted as Sanitary Commissioner and was sent to Karáchi as Deputy Surgeon-General on the retirement of the much respected and now lamented Dr. Joynt. It is to be hoped that in the interest of the service Government will deem it expedient not to perpetrate an act of flagrant injustice, and thus set an unworthy example to those whom it is their privilege to rule.

Expresses gratitude to the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army for his scheme of employing pensioned Native soldiers as peons in military and other offices.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 1st May is grateful to the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army for his scheme of employing pensioned Native soldiers as office peons in military and other departments. The Jáme observes that such employment will lend material help to their small pensions and will at the same time secure honest and tried servants. General Hardinge should however do one thing more for the Native soldier before he retires. He should with the consent of the Supreme Government devise a scheme for the encouragement of English education among them by opening appropriate educational institutions and by giving rewards and promotion in the ranks to those who should attain proficiency in that language.

Says that the local funds should not be drawn upon for the guarantee to the Bombay International Exhibition Fund.

In alluding to the report that the Government of Bombay intend to give from the local funds of this Presidency one-fourth share of the guarantee fund of the coming International Exhibition, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 29th April observes that the local funds are made up of contributions from the agricultural classes and are intended to provide them with new roads, bridges, tanks, and other useful agricultural and commercial conveniences. A large amount is collected every year on account of these funds and the same is spent, yet most of the wants of the agricultural population still remain unprovided for. It is therefore unjust that a large sum should be taken away from the fund and made over to the International Exhibition. It is true that the agricultural classes will be benefited by holding an exhibition, but all other classes of the subjects will also be benefited, and there is no reason why the former alone should be made to pay for what all will enjoy. Five lákhs of rupees will be quite enough for the coming exhibition, but the persons entrusted with the work of making arrangements for the exhibition being ambitious, hope to raise a fund of ten lákhs. The exhibition committee may after a long delay succeed in raising the large amount, but it is extremely doubtful whether the proceeds from the exhibition will be sufficient to cover its cost. It is therefore not quite safe that a guarantee should be given from the resources of the local funds to the extent of two and a quarter lákhs of rupees. It would also be still more objectionable to pay for the exhibition buildings from local fund sources which Government have promised to buy from the exhibition committee after the exhibition is closed. It would be very shameful to Bombay, which would be benefited by the purchase of the building, that the money of the agricultural classes should be diverted to her benefit. The amount of the one-fourth of the guarantee fund promised by Government should be provided from such a department of the State as will not be inconvenienced by the diversion of a lákh of rupees, which ought to be the contribution from the State treasury.

Describes how two women were plundered near the Sátpáti creek and the indifference of the police pátil of Khárákuran in the matter.

The Shetakaryáncha Kaivári (13) of the 1st May says that two women living at Máhim near the Tangar Tank got into a railway carriage on 15th March at the Dádar station of the B. B. & C. I. Railway and got out at the Pálghar station. The name of one was Mánaki Munderi and of the other Jini. They intended to travel to Nándgaon in the Thána Zilla. When they arrived at the Sátpáti creek it was high tide and therefore they waited on the bank until the subsidence of the water. Here a robber by name Kika attacked and plundered them and severely injured the toe of one of them. When the water had somewhat subsided the two women wanted to cross, but had no money to pay for the ferry which takes passengers across the creek. They somehow managed to reach Khárákuran, where they reported to the police pátil Jiwan Mukun how they were plundered and the injury to the toe of one of them. The police pátil however made no enquiry. The women finding that they had no chance of obtaining redress proceeded to Nándgaon. Some time ago a woman of the Bhandári caste was similarly plundered, but the robbers have not been discovered. This state of lawlessness is a reproach to the British Government. It is to be hoped that the police will make enquiries without delay and will leave no efforts made to discover the robbers and get them punished.

Strongly approves of the suggestion made in the Times of India that Government should confer a pension on the family of the late Professor Chhatre.

The Subodh Patrika (14) of the 27th April says:—We are glad to find the Times of India recommending Government to confer a pension upon the family of the late Professor Chhatre. An excellent suggestion like this needs few words of recommendation. It is well-known that the deceased Professor was too deeply engrossed in his scientific researches to devote much attention to the ordinary cares of a paterfamilias. His studies also made large demands on his purse. Add to this the openhanded liberality with which Professor Chhatre gave help where it was needed among students as well as other people. The result is a magnificently small sum left to survivors to shift themselves with as best they can. None the less it is the duty of the public at large, as represented by the Government of the country, for whom persons of the stamp of Professor Chhatre labour, to do for their family what they themselves were unable to do. Such after-provisions, while they cheer up the devotee of learning, are highly gratifying to the community to which he belongs. We therefore very gladly raise our humble voice in support of the suggestion of our contemporary. No doubt our other English daily will lend its countenance and the whole of the Native press follow suit. The proposal thus duly supported will claim the attention of Government, and Sir James Fergusson will earn the thanks of the whole Native community by such graceful recognition of the services of a life spent not in the glare of the world but in the recesses of study in acquiring knowledge and in carrying on researches. [The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 28th April hopes that the suggestion will not go in vain. It will be admitted on all hands that Professor Chhatre deserved this mark of respect on the part of Government. The number of those who spend their lives in the cause of scientific research is not in this country large, and should the Government of Sir James Fergusson be pleased to carry out the suggestion made by the Times of India it would be encouraging the students of science to pursue their studies with the singleness of purpose which distinguished Professor Chhatre.]

Recommends a provision for the destitute family of the late Professor Kero Lakshman Chhatre.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 27th April observes that the very thoughtful suggestion made by the Times of India that the Government of Bombay should make a suitable compassionate allowance to the family of the late Professor Chhatre has the hearty support of all who have heard of it. The Government by carrying it out will do a graceful and highly becoming act, which will have the warm approbation of even the most rigid advocate of economy in public expenditure. The State and the public owe much to the great mathematician now no more. To see that those who depended upon him for support during his lifetime do not suffer from poverty and want after his death will simply be an act of gratitude towards the deceased. It is to be hoped that the Government will not be slow to act upon the suggestion of the Times of India.

Complains that the Collector of Broach holds his office at his private residence.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 28th April states that since the 18th idem, the day on which the Collector of Broach returned from the district, he (the Collector) has been holding his office at his own private residence, and consequently the Collector's subordinates and the persons who have to transact business with him are obliged to walk a long distance in the sun and are much inconvenienced thereby. They do not moreover get water to drink at the bungalow, which is not a small inconvenience in these hot days.

Complains that the crimes of theft and robbery have considerably increased in the town of Kapadvanj.

A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 29th April observes that thefts and robberies have of late considerably increased in the town of Kapadvanj, the police of which are quite incompetent to discover the evil-doers. The townspeople are quite uneasy about the security of their property.

Transfer of Dr. Banks to the Civil Surgeoncy of Surat.

Approves of the mitigation of Dr. Banks' punishment.

The Samsher Báhádur (112) of the 25th April approves of the transfer of Dr. Banks to Surat and says that Natives ought to be satisfied with the mitigation of the punishment when it is remembered how many Europeans escape scot-free. What more is wanted when Dr. Banks has repented for his misdeeds? The punishment inflicted on him is not quite adequate to his fault. The resolution regarding the mitigation of sentence ought to have been couched in strong terms in order to inspire awe in the minds of other haughty Europeans.

Says that European officials and non-officials who make common cause when a European offender is to be saved are setting a dangerous example to Natives.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 27th April says :—In the course of a public discussion a few months ago Sir James Fergusson observed that he would leave Bombay the most unpopular Governor rather than yield to his conviction. His Excellency could have had then no idea how soon he was to falsify the word by the act. Possibly he uttered that magniloquent boast to overawe the Native public. For to-day we find the Government of Bombay withdrawing an important State resolution as if under compulsion from half a dozen Anglo-Indian newspapers, which are as far from representing the public opinion of India as the late Cetewayo was from representing the glory of the ancient Persians and Medes. We have no wish to judge His Excellency harshly, nor is this the time to pronounce judgment on the career of a well-meaning administrator. But it may be mentioned in passing that of all his erratic and ill-considered measures yet recorded his action in regard to Dr. Banks' removal will stand longest to his discredit. In the first place His Excellency ought to have acted more deliberately, consulting responsible advisers before he fired off the blunderbus of an abortive resolution. We can understand his desire to do justice even at the risk of stultifying himself where he sees he has erred from excess of zeal. But here he deals boldly with a case of lawlessness, setting the Native mind at rest as to the impartiality of his Government. His act elicits the warmest applause from the entire Native public. And still, in less than a month, because the Anglo-Indians, as is their interest, cavil at his decision, he sets it aside, completely ignoring the existence of the Native public. Is such conduct fair to that public or to himself? In common decency Sir James ought to have explained why he changed his mind so soon. But that is not to be expected from a man of warm impulses. As to Dr. Banks, we cannot blame him for this change of front on the part of Government. It is not impossible that had he been simply degraded a step in the first instance the present ill-feeling would have been avoided. A word to our Anglo-Indian contemporaries might not come amiss in this connection. As we have often complained, they set a dangerous example to the Native press. Whenever they find a European the object of public opprobrium, they make a point of siding with him and denouncing the other party, be it the Government itself or the Native press. Anglo-Indian opinion ought to be unanimous on such an occasion. All this is perhaps inevitable, but it is none the less dangerous policy. The Native press is being convinced that Government is apt to be intimidated by Anglo-Indian opinion. We have tried so long to resist this impression. But it is hopeless to struggle against it longer. Anglo-Indians rule the mofussil, they rule the town, and we now see the Presidency to be under their rule. Officials and non-officials make common cause where a European offender is to be saved. All these facts as brought out in actual practice are not lost upon the Native public. That public will not be slow to pick up the successful tactics of the opponents. Already there are signs of a solid combination the elements of which have been supplied so abundantly by their European fellow-subjects. And when a small knot of foreigners can do so much, it can be easily conceived what united Native India can effect for good or evil.

Says that the petition got up by certain persons in Ahmedabad in favour of Dr. Banks is not a genuine expression of the opinion of the people of Ahmedabad and approves of the first resolution of Government in Dr. Banks' case.

A correspondent of the same newspaper, writing from Ahmedabad, says :—The Europeans of course are crying down the Government resolution in no measured terms, and I have heard some of them denounce the Governor. They think it a shame that a lordly Briton may not lick the niggars without being hauled over the coals in this ugly fashion. They perceive that if it is the doctor's case to-day, it may be the case of one of themselves to-morrow. They claim immunity in all cases in which their opponent is a Native. On the other hand Natives here unquestionably approve of and applaud the Government action in this matter and consider that Dr. Banks has only his temper and his over-weening conceit to thank for the mess he has got into. This is the general opinion among Natives here, in spite of a petition that is being surreptitiously got up by sundry interested persons in favour of Dr. Banks. I consider this petition to be entirely the offshoot of khatpat, and if the underhand manner in which it is being prepared were brought to the notice of Government, it is not likely to do Dr. Banks any good. There are here one or two men of certain status and some local influence who are at the bottom of this petition movement. They know or rather calculate they are adding to their influence amongst Europeans here by interesting themselves in Dr. Banks' behalf, and that they lose nothing if they don't succeed. These men have been going about or sending their familiar friends from house to house canvassing for signatures to the petition. Even the Nagarshet Premábhái Hemábhái has been induced to lend his name in this underhand manner, much against his better judgment, and his name being pointed out to others, it is enough of course (considering the servile temperament of uneducated Gujarátis) to induce them to follow suit. This is the modus operandi, but it is to be hoped the Government will treat such a petition as merely so much waste paper. If the people of Ahmedabad are anxious to retain Dr. Banks, and are sincerely persuaded that he has been too severely punished, let them call a public meeting and express their views in a public manner. Any opinion so published would certainly be entitled to consideration and respect; but I assert, no such feeling of sympathy in favour of Dr. Banks exists in this place, and I challenge him and his friends who are working behind the scenes to show the contrary. On the contrary any mitigation of the sentence would, I am sure, be looked upon as nothing less than a stultification of Government and mere empty vapouring, after the stern and justly severe manner in which Government have taken up the matter and dealt out reproof or punishment to those who have so richly deserved it. The people of the city are not such abject fools as to meekly accept kicks and yet turn round and pray for the well-being and happiness of the man who administers them because he is a sáheb, and yet that would be the case if this petition (to be called I believe 'the Petition of the people of Ahmedabad') were anything but an empty farce, and not the production of a few time-serving khatpat-breeders. In the matter of the famous Peacock case at Viramgám, when Mr. Lely—whose sporting propensities were content with the slaughter of pea-hens—was removed from this district, there was much dissatisfaction at his having been so lightly let off. Again there was the case of Captain French, who under very much the same circumstances as in the recent case of Dr. Banks, horse-whipped some villagers of the village of Normal in this neighbourhood. The villagers complained and the Magistrate fined Captain French Rs. 500; but he appealed and the fine was reduced to Rs. 50. This was altogether inadequate punishment, and gave much cause for murmuring. Whilst these and other such cases are still fresh in the memory of the people here, is it likely that they would be so squeamish as not to accept with the utmost approbation the excellent example Government have spotaneously made, in the present case, for their especial protection? I say a stern example was urgently needed to repress the lawless high-handedness that prevails in the mofussil. People are perfectly well aware of this, and when the example is made (and I only hope it will have a lasting effect) it would be sheer nonsense to suppose that the people would not appreciate and approve of it in its entirety. I say, therefore, that this petition which is now being circulated snatching at signatures is not the genuine expression of the opinion of the people of this place anent Government action in the case; and it no way deserves to have any weight attached to it, after all that has happened. People here have had quite enough of this shikar-loving Civil Surgeon, and I can safely predict he will not be missed when he leaves the place.

Censures the people of Ahmedabad for thinking of requesting Government to reduce the punishment inflicted upon Dr. Banks.

The Satyă Mitră (113) of the 27th April severely censures the leading citizens of Ahmedabad for thinking of requesting the Bombay Government to repeal the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks, and observes that the doctor was guilty of serious offences and the punishment inflicted upon him is appropriate and just. The people of Ahmedabad are foolish in desiring the mitigation of Dr. Banks' punishment.

Dr. Banks' transfer to Surat as Civil Surgeon at that station and remarks in connection therewith.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 29th April alludes to Dr. Banks' transfer to Surat from Ahmedabad and says:—If a transfer from Ahmedabad to Surat involves no degradation, we have certainly to find fault with the Bombay Government either for hasty judgment or for culpable leniency. If Dr. Banks was really guilty of having ill-treated a few innocent subjects of Her Majesty he ought not to have been let off mere transfer, because such a course will not improve him and his impet and rash nature will have no less opportunities of transgressing the limi law at Surat than it had at Ahmedabad. For aught we know Surat has al the same attractions for wanton shikaring as Ahmedabad has. The pe round about Surat are equally mild in their temperament as those a Ahmedabad. But if the transfer means loss in grade, it cannot fail to re the doctor every time he goes out shikaring that he has been put to that p for his shikaring habits, and that unless he really meant to go back to his ment or at least to a still lower grade he should not indulge himself too in his wild notions about shikaring and the law. Under any circumstan though we are prepared to find fault with Government for one thing or ot we are certainly not prepared to say that Government has meanly submit to Anglo-Indian cry raised by Anglo-Indian papers. Those who say so proba belong to that class of thinkers who abused Lord Ripon right and left for settlement of the jurisdiction controversy. In such cases we think it is perfe constitutional to ask Government to place before the public the reasons that have induced it to arrive at a particular conclusion. The Government of I most prudently did this, and it was the resume of the reasons published silenced all imprudent opposition. The vernacular press is very unfortuna this respect. It is at times driven to opposition, Government withholding information from it. The Anglo-Indian press being more or less conne with the official world, or being the vehicle of official opinion on any partic subject, often misleads the vernacular papers and the result is that there b no data furnished to go upon the vernacular papers find out such loophole are left in the writings of the English papers and expose them. This is t to be vehement opposition and the opinion expressed through the colum the vernacular press is set down as poor, biased, vindictive and what not is therefore necessary that when such test questions crop up Government sh take care to publish as many facts as it can, and there is chance that mu the unnecessary difference will soon disappear and that much of it as wil remain will be honourable opposition and difference of opinion for which section shall have to thank and respect the other.

Does not approve of the mitigation of Dr. Banks' sentence and his transfer to Surat as Civil Surgeon of that station.

The Kesari (38) of the 29th April says that in one of the discus which took place in the Bombay Legislative Co last monsoon relating to local self-governmen James Fergusson sharply observed that he rather leave India as the most unpopular Gov than give up views deliberately formed. In g utterance to the above somewhat contumacious ment Sir James Fergusson ought to have duly weighed the strength c character and should not have been over-confident. Within a year from time he gave expression to the above opinion Sir James Fergusson be afraid of the clamour raised by a few interested Anglo-Indian newspapers cancelled a resolution deliberately passed in the case of Dr. Banks. Kesari observes that its readers would be able to judge for themselves wh a fickle-minded individual like Sir James Fergusson was justified in admo ing such a strong and resolute person like Ráo Sáheb Mandlik. The peans should not be so vain as to imagine that they have nothing to from Natives because the latter are a conquered race. With all his fa Ráo Sáheb Mandlik is firm and unbending in his resolutions. If Sir J Fergusson had taken him as model, he would not have had to bea reproaches of the Native public. The punishment awarded to Dr. Banks not at all disproportionate to his guilt. Government committed a se blunder in entirely exonerating him from all blame. To say to Native plicants that Government cannot interfere in their case and to cancel re tions deliberately passed in the case of Europeans will not make Na estimate highly the impartial character of the British administration.

Does not approve of the mitigation of Dr. Banks' punishment.

The Shiváji (62) of the 25th April, in alluding to Dr. Banks' case, obs that it is difficult to conceive in what respects h been punished for his misconduct by simply tra ring him to Surat as Civil Surgeon at that statio a Native officer had been found guilty of the c proved against Dr. Banks, he would indubitably have been dismissed fron service and would have had to suffer imprisonment. But it is surprising tha European officers should escape scot-free whatever may be the nature of thei offence. In the Ilbert Bill controversy the Europeans objected to give Native authority to try European criminals on the ground of the latter's race antipathy but this charge would now equally apply to the former. The extraordinar conduct of Sir James Fergusson in Dr. Banks' case shows that he is hardly fi for the high office which he holds. If he has yielded to the clamour of Europeans and cancelled the former resolution which was perfectly right, suc change of front shows that he is not fit to occupy a position of responsibility It does not do credit to Sir James Fergusson that he should stand in such aw of the European public. [The Bakul (18) of the 27th and the Shubh Suchak (63 of the 25th April, in commenting upon Dr. Banks' transfer to Surat, make somewhat similar observations and request Government to publish the paper connected with his transfer and the reasons which have led Government t cancel their first resolution.]

Denounces the Bombay Government as a chameleon Government.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 27th April says that the Bombay Governmen have been constantly changing their colour like th chameleon. Their actions are not straightforward they are very awkward, improper, thoughtless an rash. They do no credit to the political prudence o Government and give an amount of pain to the public. The actions of the Government of Sir James Fergusson are the result of whims. The Governor and hi colleagues have cut a very bad figure in the case of Dr. Banks. The Gujarát praised the Government for the impartiality displayed in the first resolutio on the subject, but the evident partiality of their subsequent action is a matte for regret. The transfer of Dr. Banks to Surat is simply scandalous, especiall when no reasons are assigned for such a measure and when ocular and conclusive proofs are found against him. If Dr. Banks had been brought into civi employ after being kept for about six months on military duty, the presen severe censure would have been avoided. But the Government do not in th least care for their honour and for what the public might say regarding thei actions. The people have now no confidence in them. It is not easy to gues what reasons led Government to reinstate Dr. Banks in civil employ. Th public consider the resolution regarding Dr. Banks' transfer as a disgracefu farce. Is the cry raised in certain respectable quarters that the Bombay Government are short-sighted, vacillating and ignorant in politics true? It is ver much to be regretted that there exist sufficient reasons for this imputatio [The Broach Samáchár (88) of the 1st May condemns the irresolute policy o Government, and adds that Government have as if encouraged Dr. Banks i his high-handedness, for he will have more remunerative private practice a Surat than he had at Ahmedabad.]

Requests Government to publish the resolution cancelling the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks.

The Rást Goftár (111) of the 27th April requests Government to publis the resolution cancelling the sentence of relegatio to military duty passed upon Dr. Banks and appointing him Civil Surgeon at Surat, and observes that th doctor's advocates maintained that their client di not commit any crime, that he was condemned without sufficient enquiry, and that he was wrongfully punished. It is therefor desirable to know what causes have induced Government to cancel the punishment—whether Government have seen their mistake of passing the sentenc or whether mercy has been shown to him. If mercy has been exercised in th case the doctor deserves it, for he has had to withstand a thick shower of hars words for his faults; but it places Government in the undesirable positio of being weak and vacillating. [The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the same dat expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Disapproves of the cancellation of the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks.

The Yajdán Parast (122) of the 27th April observes that the withdrawa of the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks and his reappointment as Civil Surgeon of Surat are nothin less than a piece of flagrant injustice, wilful ruling success of oppression and a shameful disregard o the interests of the Native subjects of the realm. The second resolution in th doctor's case has once more proved that Sir James Fergusson is a w His Excellency seems to have been frightened by the loud complaint the Anglo-Indian press and certain selfish Europeans. Dr. Banks eight different offences under the Indian Penal Code, and yet he ha lowed to remain in civil employ and justice has been set at naug conduct of the Bombay Government has proved that it has one set o dispense justice to Europeans and quite another set to mete out Natives. The second resolution in the case has created dissatisfacti Natives.

Education.

Disapproves of the admission of European children into the Civil Engineering College at Roorkee.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 3rd May observes that the Eu India receive the lion's share of the loaves in the Government service but they are no They object to a portion of the subordina being reserved for the natives of India on th that when this is done the Europeans are from that branch of the service. When the Europeans are told i this objection that since some posts are exclusively reserved for the lar arrangement ought to be made for the benefit of the Natives, th that if the subordinate service were reserved exclusively for Natives peans that are permanent residents of the country and the Eurasi education is limited would be debarred entrance into Government se remove the second objection it is right that no posts under Governm be reserved for Europeans or Natives, but all should be bestowed on persons without distinction of race or religion. The Europeans d even this just arrangement. Whenever a Native is appointed to a po for Europeans the latter raise a loud complaint against the appoint continue to harp upon the subject for a long time. The substan protestation is that all Europeans, whether their education be good or should be provided with posts under Government, and the remain should be conferred upon Natives. The Samáchár then alludes to issued by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal for including among N children of Europeans permanently residing in India for the purpo admission into the Civil Engineering College at Roorkee, and ob since Natives and Europeans are brought upon the same level the for be deeply grateful to Mr. Thompson if he would throw open to them reserved for Europeans only. But this is not at all likely to occur.

Railways.

Complains that certain employés of the B. B. & C. I. Railway Company are mercilessly overworked.

The Gujarát Mitrá (77) of the 27th April observes that since accident at Kánkrákhádi Government have the authorities of the B. B. & C. I. Railwa less work from their subordinates than the doing of late, but these instructions do not have borne fruit. Hitherto a station mast during day and his assistant did duty at night. It has been now rule of them should perform day or night duty for a week by turns, and has to work twelve hours a day. At several stations the station r required to work for 17 hours and sometimes for 24 hours. At sever between Ahmedabad and Wadhwán there is a single station mast station and in the working season he has to work for 24 hours. T guards are made to work for 15 hours; signallers, pointsmen and required to be present at their posts for 12 hours. In addition to t ships the railway employés do not get sufficient leave of absence are heavily fined at times and considerably annoyed by their super treatment of these subordinates must shorten their life. Governme interfere and prevent this cruelty.

Municipalities.

Deficient supply of water in Girgaum and Kándewádi.

The Prabhákar (11) of the 2nd May says:—For the last fiftee inhabitants of Girgaum and Kándewádi a from an inadequate supply of water, and at of three or four days we find the pipes cl for a whole day. On account of this scanty supply of water people are obliged to make use of well water, which is for the most part dirty, stinking and unhealthy, and we are afraid that by a frequent use of this dirty water there is every likelihood of cholera breaking out in the city. Our daily English contemporaries have not said a word about this water famine, perhaps because the Europeans living at Breach Candy and Malabár Hill get a sufficient supply of water and so they have no cause of complaint. But what are our Native Corporators doing? They certainly ought to have brought this subject before the Corporation and stopped the nuisance. At this time some of the members of the Corporation are fond of showing their oratorial powers by making long and empty speeches. We think it will be far better and more creditable to them if they learn to pay more attention to the real wants and interests of the rate-payers than they do at present. Had they been careful from the beginning to do their duty, with a little moral courage thousands of rupees washed on the drainage system which is on the verge of failure would have been saved to the municipality. But the members wanted to please Sir Richard Temple, and so in pleasing him they neglected the interests of their constituents.

Approves of the refusal of the Town Council of Bombay to adopt the proposal to open a new road from the Esplanade Road to Apollo Street.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 27th April observes that the Town Council's resolution disallowing the proposal for the new road from the Esplanade Road to the Apollo Street as marked out in the sketch produced before its meeting on Wednesday last was very sensible. The proposed new road does not appear to be at all such a necessity as to justify the large outlay of Rs. 1,10,000, the sum estimated as its cost. There was much truth in the observation made at the meeting that this item would swell, if the work were actually undertaken, to twice the figure given. There are far more urgent and useful public works requiring the expenditure of municipal funds. The municipal authorities ought to look after these before occupying themselves with such crotchets as occupied the Town Council's attention on Wednesday last. [The Rást Goftár (111) of the same date and the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 28th April make similar observations.]

Asks the authorities concerned to prohibit the Tramway Company from making repairs to the tram roads at night.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 3rd May observes that the tramway lines in Bombay are a source of nuisance to the residents of the lanes through which they pass. The din and the noise of the cars passing and repassing are most annoying, particularly to sick persons, and to make matter worse the repairs to the tram lines are carried on at night and the peace and slumbers of the citizens are disturbed sometimes for several nights together. It is therefore to be hoped that the authorities concerned will prohibit the Tramway Company from carrying on the repairs at night.

Complains of the impure condition of the water in Poona.

The Poona Vaibhav (51) of the 27th April says that on account of the impure condition of the water which the inhabitants of Poona are obliged to drink dysentery has broken out. Notwithstanding this, it is very extraordinary that the municipal authorities should do nothing to improve the quality of the water brought from Khadakwásla. What has become of the filter which was constructed for the purification of the water brought into Poona and for which the people were made to pay heavily? Instead of extracting money in a legal manner from poor people under false pretences it would be better to plunder them openly. It is to be hoped that the more active members of the municipality will attend to this matter without delay.

Disapproves of the alleged high-handedness of the Collector of Surat in the management of the municipal affairs of that city.

In alluding to the misunderstanding that has arisen between some Native members of the Surat Municipality and the president of the corporation in regard to a payment to the Electric Light Company, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 3rd May observes that leaving aside the subject-matter of the contention till full and trustworthy information about it is received, the conduct of the president at the general meeting of 30th April seems objectionable. Mr. White did not allow a member of the opposition to speak. He refused perr another member to propose an amendment, and took the votes of the on the original proposition. This was a high-handed proceeding on of the president, for which he deserves severe censure. It was th overbearing behaviour which led the people of this Presidency not to the Collector of a district should be made the president of a municipa ration constituted under the new scheme of local self-government. Th the first occasion on which Mr. White conducted the affairs of the Sur cipality with a high hand. It is to be hoped that Government will notice of his proceedings.

Describes the danger experienced from wells and cisterns in Surat that have no parapet walls at their mouths

The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 27th April observes that in many the city of Surat there are wells or water ciste have neither parapet walls nor any other pro and consequently serious fears are entertained dents to human lives happening therefrom municipality ought either to compel the ov these wells or cisterns to raise some protection mouths or to close them altogether.

Municipal affairs at Kaira.

The Kaira Vartamán (103) of the 30th April points out the nece the local municipality publishing its budget information of the people, and says that whe cipalities of other places publish their budgets why should not the Kair cipality do likewise? It is to be hoped that the president of the muni will attend to this suggestion. [The same paper requests the presider Kaira Municipality to have a fresh election of the municipal commission the term of three years of the present commissioners has already ended.

Native States.

Defends the late Sir Sálar Jung and his son from the attack made on them by Mr. Gorst in an article contributed by him to the Fortnightly Review on the subject of the Nizám's Government.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 28th April, in an article headed "M M. P., on the Nizám's Government," says:—M gives certain facts in support of his conclusio above all, he writes professedly in the interes millions of people committed to the Nizár The spirit of the partizan and of the critic m preconceived theories is of course not absent article that appears from his pen in the Fo Review for April. Rather, they manifest themselves too clearly to ena favourable impression as may be produced on the mind by the article tion to retain any permanent hold. That Mr. Gorst, who could find to commend in the administration of the late Sir Sálar Jung and his and who entertains no favourable opinion of the present Nizám and hi ter, should yet find a good deal to praise in the Peshkar, who was associated with Sir Sálar Jung and of whose administration on Sir Sálar much that is unpleasant has seen the light, will to most people sound v prising. This perhaps explains the conclusions which Mr. Gorst has force upon English attention. Had he written more judicially than done and steered clear of the parties that exist in Hyderabad, his con would have gained in weight considerably. In taking a melancholy the late Sir Sálar's administration he commits the mistake of supposing man can accomplish changes in the political administration of a countr own efforts and by the magic of his single influence. He forgets that people are averse to change, and that however earnest and powerful an trator may be, it takes a long time to improve the administration of a Sta Sálar's motives are questioned by Mr. Gorst; but his view does not see founded upon anything better than conjecture. On the other hand Mr statement that Sir Sálar himself "frequently lamented that his attempts succeeding to his intimate associates" go to show that he was sincere and in those attempts. That they did not succeed is not surprising, for the tas Sir Sálar was not a light one. He had to change everything, give a new life to the administration, institute a systematic government among pe accustomed to system. The same charge that Mr. Gorst brings aga Sálar might be brought home to other administrators; but it would be u able to attach any weight to such charges. In the case of Sir Sálar not onl were the reforms which he contemplated such as to require a very long tim for their successful working, especially as he had to introduce them among conservative people inured to despotism, but there were additional difficultie thrown in his way. He had to conciliate factions and parties and encounte the jealousy of some of the nobles of the State. He could only plan and supervise but for the execution of his plans of reform he had to trust to others. Unde these circumstances it is unfair to the memory of the great minister to charg him with having failed to accomplish what it was impossible for a single man t accomplish in even a quarter of a century. We admit that several very grav defects existed in the administration during his regimé, and Sir Sálar's best admirers have not denied them; but it is due to him that they should not be charged to any want of sincere effort on the minister's part to improve the administration Mr. Gorst having to say little for the administration of Sir Sálar has as littl to say for that of his son. That Lord Ripon in appointing Sir Sálar's son a Minister chose wisely is a fact which would be borne out by the unanimou pleasure with which his nomination was received by the subjects of the Nizám and when Mr. Gorst pleads the cause of the Peshkar he pleads the cause o one who during the one year when the administration was in his hands di enough to show that he had not the energy and ability requisite in a minister Whether the new Minister will succeed or not is more than one can say now but it is premature to anticipate failure for him. There is no reason why w should despair of the condition of the people of the Hyderabad State continuin what it has been. Mr. Gorst has formed his view after a brief stay in India but those who observe the changes which are slowly taking place in the administration of Native States in general hardly endorse his view. The affairs o Native States are attracting more attention; they are being brought more i contact with the territories under British rule, and the number of enlightene and educated Native Princes is increasing. These are not signs justifying disappointment. The condition of the people in the Native States cannot b changed soon; but unless the signs prove false an improvement in that conditio must occur sooner or later. Mr. Gorst unfortunately ignores all this and seem to think that the abuses of a century should be destroyed in a day, and that ruler and a minister who cannot do that do not deserve to hold their places Fortunately, practical politics would not for a moment countenance reasonin so one-sided and superficial. Mr. Gorst's article, however, is not to be deprecated on that account. He has called attention to certain abuses and indicate the direction in which the Nizám and his Minister should work; and it is t be hoped that they will do their best to remedy the abuses, the existence o some of which cannot be doubted.

Takes exception to certain statements made by Mr. Gorst in an article in the Fortnightly Review on the condition of the Nizám's dominions.

In an article headed "The Hyderabad State," the Mahrátta (2) of the 27t April says:—Mr. Gorst paid a flying visit to thi country to fulfil a certain mission in connection wit the Hyderabad State. He remained here for nin long days and returned to England, where he is no making an attempt at passing for an authority i matters connected with the Deccan Native State He has contributed a long article to the Fortnightly Review in which he treat of the kingdom of the Nizám and tries to fan the fire of scandals which hav long been forgotten as worthless trash and as stories belonging to an age whe the Musalmán State was believed to be a land of riots and ruffianism. To th eastern mind the exaggerated tone, the animus contained in the statement an the spirit which pervades the article at once disclose what the object of th writer may have been; but to the western mind the article under review i certainly calculated to convey a wrong notion and to leave a mischievous impression about the administration of a Native State comprising within its are so many as 9,445,594 inhabitants. Mr. Gorst, who was got out by Palmer as leading member of Parliament supposed to have sufficient influence with th Viceroy to secure the Divánship to the Peshkár, has not a single good word t say about any part in the Nizám's State; but it must be said to his credit tha he speaks well at least about the Peshkár, who by freeing the Hyderabad Stat has paid him handsomely. It is for the readers, then, of the Fortnightly t believe or not the information supplied by such an impartial writer. It is no for us to paint the character of such a writer, for he stands self-exposed in th article in which he wanted to expose the important Native St attack commences with the late Sir Sálar Jung, and he says that the of the Nizám is commonly spoken of as a great administrator, but tha what he was not; and what is his evidence for this? The only evide brought is that "it is said that he frequently lamented this fact to hi associates." This statement of the writer would certainly have a impression about the intellectual merits, soundness of views, and shar mon sense which a member of Parliament like Mr. Gorst is supposed

His logical head could not ignore the fact that the late Sir Sálar J duced a sound system of administration and always showed a wise reforming the State, and taking account of the fact he proceeds t motives and says: "Sir Sálar Jung perceived that some sort of r of his own administration so as to make it appear to be nearly that of Berár must precede the consent of the British power to tion." It was with this object, according to the writer, that useful reforms of Sir Sálar Jung were undertaken. The writer of thinks that the system of administration was copied from th
British Government, but we are sure that if the politician had British system for its model the famine of 1877-78 could never hav patiently borne by the subjects of the Nizám. Deaths from starvatio tress in the Hyderabad district put Sir Richard Temple's energetic of famine relief to shame and the report of the Famine Commission b mony to this fact. Mr. Gorst shows himself wofully ignorant of the the State and its administration when he takes no notice of the system of 1882. Sir Stuart Bayley, the then Resident, declared tha exhibition of rare statesmanly skill and political prudence; and that if of the scheme had lived to see its completion the State of Hydera have been the best model which the rulers of British India could h out for the government of this large empire. Mr. Gorst is of opinio death of Sir Sálar Jung saved the 2½ millions of Berár from an u that was in store for them. What the writer says about the offic Hyderabad State may well be applied to the officers in British em says that they have no permanent interest in the country, no sympat people. Their object is to make as much money as they can and spend it elsewhere. If the country is afterwards ruined by their e will not hurt them. This is exactly what the people of Berár and the w are complaining about. We fear Mr. Gorst is too young for the age not probably lived long enough to become acquainted with the facts broad day-light put forth by writers like Keay and Dádábhái. He have dosed over the period of the last ten years. History has shown t men like Mr. Gorst have made British rule in India unsafe and insec is from these that the nation should be saved. The Huq Palmer ruined Hyderabad, and Gorst and Lytton will destroy India. If the p of Griffins and Gorsts are not subjected to severe censorship, we feel will produce discontent and dissatisfaction which a dozen Ripons pu can never allay.

Comments on the article contributed by Mr. Gorst to the Fortnightly Review on the subject of the government of the Hyderabad State.

The Prabhákar (11) of the 30th April says:—Mr. J. E. Gorst use of arguments against the administration abad, which apply with greater force to Service administration of British India.
there are not to be found "men standi scorching sun with heavy stones upon the but there are millions of men so hounded revenue authorities on the one hand and the money-lenders on the their whole life is one continued struggle for bare subsistence. The jections against the boy-Nizám and the boy-Vazir might be appl
British political system in which the boy element abounds in the m in remote stations. In fact it is, we believe, the boy and the "ro ment in the services that do all the mischief. If Mr. Gorst left the n of the Nizám's dominions alone and took up the grievances of the on and ninety millions who languish in misery in the British domi would be conferring a great boon on India, that is, if he succeeded i mendable undertaking. His other arguments, ostensibly those agai mán conquerors in favour of Hindu subjects, can be used by any British N subject against the increasing multitude of Anglo-Indians who are now n asserting their political and civil rights against the children of the soil.

the question started by Mr. Gorst involves one of right of intervention o part of the paramount power. There ought to be co-operation in the intere peace and order, and above all in that of justice, which is quite a different from setting the subjects of a neighbouring State against their legitimate r on the tittle-tattle of petty officials and discontented budmashes. It lowers prestige of a member of Parliament, who instead of taking noble st manlike views of the politics of a State mixes himself up in the canards o ficious and intriguing gossip such as Mr. Gorst indulges in his article in Fortnightly Review. If Mr. Gorst wishes to indulge in his propensity to fault, he will find abundance of material for his declamation in Br officialdom and Anglo-Indianism. There he will meet with facts concer starving ryots being whipped to death by pampered officials; coolies ill-tre and punished by planters who mistake their vocation for one of slave-driv villagers being carelessly mistaken for wild beasts and ruthlessly shot—no mention Dr. Banks' case fresh in the minds of our readers; respectable sch boys and clerks being whipped by magistrates like common criminals in mo stations. As to the abuse that Mr. Gorst nurses against Lord Ripon, it is unmerited. And lastly, with respect to the selection of quite a young ma prime minister, there are exceptions to every rule; the present minister's cedents and training are exceptionally good. In a case of this kind we t we ought to allow the Nizám to be the best judge.

*Says that the Jám of Navánagar should not be allowed to adopt a new heir.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 27th April refers to the khatpat carried o the Jám of Navánagar to set aside the successi Prince Ranjitsingji and to have confirmed as his the son borne to him by Jánbái, a Mahomedan w who is not his married wife, and observes that rumoured that Colonel West, the Political Agent, has gone to Báláchai make an enquiry into the matter. The decision of the Bombay Govern in such grave matter must be considered important. It would be quite u to allow the Jám any opportunity to revive the question of succession, kno his irresoluteness and the general disapprobation expressed against the con plated succession, which is the third attempt of the Jám for the nominati an heir. Such an event has not taken place up to this time in any N
State. On the occasion of the nomination of Prince Ranjitsing as his heir, Jám agreed that he would not revive the question of succession till the bir a son to a Hindu wife. Is it not then unjust to nominate the new princ successor, who is not born of a Hindu wife, the latter moreover not being married wife? The Jám is now anxious to pass an agreement similar to the above mentioned; but how can that be relied upon? The movement sh also be discountenanced from principle. There is no guarantee that the will not resort to the same plan hereafter. It would be setting a very example to other Native States if the Bombay Government were to permit Jám to nominate a new heir now. It is to be hoped that the Bombay Go ment will attend to the consequences of a new nomination. The questi who should be appointed new heir to the throne and why should the clain the prince already nominated be disregarded should also be taken into c deration in coming to a decision on this question.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Pr

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
6th May 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Appointments: Expression of opinion that the appointment of Sir William Wedderburn as Chief Secretary would have been more creditable to Government 7
Bombay International Exhibition: Expression of opinion that the local funds should not be drawn upon for the guarantee to the—fund ... 8
Civil Service of India:
  Disapproval of Lord Kimberley's refusal to raise the limit of age for the entrance examination of the— 3
  Remarks in connection with ditto 3
Compassionate allowance to the family of the late Professor Chhatre: Approval of the suggestion made in the Times of India for granting a—
    The Bombay Chronicle 9
    The Subodh Patrika 8
Conduct of certain European officials towards a zamindár in the Nuddea District: Remarks concerning the— 4
Duties on gold and silver ware imported into England: Expression of opinion that the merchants of Lancashire should help India in obtaining the repeal of the— 4
Employment of pensioned Native soldiers as peons in military and other offices: Expression of gratitude to the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army for his scheme regarding the— 7
Judicial matters: Recommendation that the powers exercised by Judicial Courts in the contempt of court cases should be brought under a reasonable check 5
Police:
  Complaint that the crimes of theft and robbery have considerably increased in the town of Kapadvanj 9
  Description of the plunder of two women near the Sátpáti creek and the indifference of the—pátil of Khárákuran in the matter ... 8
Public Service:
  Complaint that the Collector of Broach holds his office at his private residence 9
  Disapproval of the system of making officials to retire compulsorily from the—both on financial grounds and in the interest of the efficiency of the service 6
  Disapproval of granting Dr. Hewlett an extension of service as Sanitary Commissioner 7
Revenue officers: Expression of opinion that the—have more duties thrown on them than they can properly perform 5
Separation of the magisterial and executive functions in the administrative branch of the Civil Service: Advocacy of the— 5
Volunteer Corps: Advice to the natives of India to request Government to allow them to form—of their own 6

Part II.—Transfer of Dr. Banks to the Civil Surgeoncy of Surat—

Approval of the mitigation of Dr. Banks' punishment 9
Censure on the people of Ahmedabad for thinking of requesting Government to reduce the punishment inflicted upon Dr. Banks ... 11
Denunciation of the Bombay Government as a chameleon Government ... 13
Disapproval of the mitigation of Dr. Banks' sentence and his transfer to Surat 12
Disapproval of the mitigation of Dr. Banks' punishment 12
Disapproval of the cancellation of the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks ... 13
Expression of opinion that European officials and non-officials who make common cause when a European offender is to be saved are setting a dangerous example to Natives 10
Expression of opinion that the petition got up by certain persons in Ahmedabad in favour of Dr. Banks is not a genuine expression of the opinion of the people of Ahmedabad and approval of the first resolution of Government in Dr. Banks' case 10
Remarks in connection with the— 11
Request to Government to publish the resolution cancelling the sentence passed upon Dr. Banks 13

Page.

PART III.—Education—

Civil Engineering College at Roorkee: Disapproval of the admission of European children into the— 14

PART IV.—Railways—

B. B. & C. I. Railway Company: Complaint that certain employés of the — are mercilessly overworked 14

PART V.—Municipalities—

Bombay:
- Approval of the refusal of the Town Council of — to adopt the proposal to open a new road from the Esplanade Road to Apollo Street 15
- Deficient supply of water in Girgaum and Kándewádi 14
- Request to the — Municipality to prohibit the Tramway Company from making repairs to the tram roads at night 15

Kaira: Municipal affairs at— 16

Poona: Complaint regarding the impure condition of the water in— ... 15

Surat:
- Danger experienced from wells and cisterns in — that have no parapet walls at their mouth 16
- Disapproval of the alleged high-handedness of the Collector of — in the management of the municipal affairs of that city ... 15

PART VI.—Native States—

Hyderabad—
- Comments on the article contributed by Mr. Gorst to the Fortnightly Review 18
- Defence of the late Sir Sálar Jung and his son from the attack made on them by Mr. Gorst in an article contributed by him to the Fortnightly Review on the subject of the Nizám's Government... 16
- Objection to certain statements made by Mr. Gorst in an article in the Fortnightly Review 17

Navánagar: Expression of opinion that the Jám of — should not be allowed to adopt a new heir 19

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 10th May 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
12	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
13	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
14	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
15	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
16	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
17	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
18	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
19	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
20	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*21	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*22	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*37	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
38	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
39	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
40	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
41	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*50	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
51	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*53	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*54	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
57	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
58	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
59	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*60	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
61	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*62	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

C. R. 1126 CON 154 OFFICE JUN 1884

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*66	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
67	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
69	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
70	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*71	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*73	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*74	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
75	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*76	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
77	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
78	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
79	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
80	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
81	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
82	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
83	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
84	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*85	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
86	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
87	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
88	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
89	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
90	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
91	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
92	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
93	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*94	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
95	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
96	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
97	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*98	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
99	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*100	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
101	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
102	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
103	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*104	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
105	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
106	„ Lok Mitră	Do.	Weekly	800
107	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
108	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
109	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
110	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
111	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
112	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
113	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*114	„ Saurashtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*124	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Finds fault with the way in which India is governed.

The Prabhákar (11) of the 7th May says:—The London Times, which has evidently lent itself specially to the advocacy of Anglo-Indian interests, criticises the official history of the English administration of India. The publication under review is the eighteenth report of the moral and material progress said to be made by India in the short space of twelve months. India has been under the British for more than a hundred years and during that short time it cannot be expected that British officialdom, the main object of which seems to be to effect useless changes and not reforms in India, could have done much good to the masses here or even to the comparatively few who depend on the British for their daily bread. It is very obvious that the Times, instead of seeking independent information on Indian progress, bases its theories regarding it entirely on garbled official reports, and, like all prejudiced writers and journals, is too ready to accept rose-coloured accounts of India as Gospel truths. But the fact of the matter is that instead of moral progress irreligion is sown broad-cast throughout the length and breadth of India, while discontent, a thing that used to be unheard of in India, is equally as wide spread. And as to material progress it is only confined to these men, the "creatures" of the British system and policy. The unnecessary reiteration in which the Times indulges as to the alleged "facts" and "truths" embodied in the report argues a laboured defence of the said "facts" which obviously does not present itself to the mind of the writer on the first reading of the report. Facts should be as patent as the noon-day sun and not sought for as if they were hideous deformities concealed in the obscurity of convenient darkness. They do not need to be elaborately argued, but recommend themselves undisputably to the mind of the observers of events. But these causes and results afford matter for the reflective causes that are conveniently hidden away from the view of the higher authorities. They are of course lost sight of altogether, not only in official reports but also in one-sided discussions thereon, while only favourable results are published to the world and ascribed to a system of Government where the good intentions and laws of wiser administration are altogether laid aside, and departmental convenience and interests subserved and certain commercial guilds favoured. We do not know if the other salient features of the report have been noticed, but the writer merely cursorily mentions a subject, a branch of which has been lately discussed in the press, namely the land revenue, along with others of minor importance. We do not agree with the writer that the revenue system and the commercial policy of the Government are scarcely more interesting subjects for comment than the administration of justice and that of education and municipalities. With the exception of the operations of the judicial machinery of Government, which no doubt comes next in importance, we could not discriminately award the palm to education and the progress of Municipal Government, the former of which tends to denationalize and demoralize the rising generation of the Natives, while the results expected from the latter are a good deal frustrated by the infusion into it of undue Anglo-Indian and official element. Municipal institutions should be purely and simply indigenous if they are at all intended to answer the purposes expected from them. We have already said that the data furnished by official reports are not at all to be relied on. Even on such inadequate basis the writer, hastily glancing at the law and criminal portions of the report, jumps to the imperfect conclusion that the decrease in the number of criminals is a sure sign that the people of India are contented and prosperous. This delightfully illogical leap between a thing and its contrary, otherwise called the "contradictory," may be a very clear illustration of the wish in the writer's mind which is father to the thought thus incongruously expressed and which wish has no relation to the well-being of India but rather to the vaunted superiority of Anglo-Indian rule. Failure of justice in cases of Europeans of good position is a marked objectionable feature even up to the present day, while the severe sentences meted out to poor ignorant and helpless people do not argue favourably for the independence of the magistracy especially. The activity of the police at a time when the masses were literally dying of starvation is rather zeal carried beyond the limits of discretion, when the European officials above all should not have insisted on "the high number of charges and convictions" and the diabolical officials who ordered men to be flogged, who were within a few inches of death, should have been severely dealt with. But what has been the fact? They were, we believe, like Dr. Banks simply removed from the scene of their atrocities. As to the cases in which the social position and character of the offender were duly considered previous to punishment, they are of rare occurrence and questionable in their nature. In connection with the rarity of crime in India it must be added that the writer evidently judges of the criminal classes in India from the specimens of hardened criminals to be found in London and the larger cities of Europe where the highly artificial state of society amongst the moneyed and official classes produce a corresponding reaction amongst the masses, the unfortunate portion of whom go to swell the criminal classes and are driven to all kinds of unnatural devices to protect themselves from the rapacious demands of capitalists and what is called "society." Against the frightful consequences of this state of things in Europe the natives of India are protected by the caste system, a reflex of which is to be found also among the other communities indigenous to India. But a little more of western civilization will in course of time undo all this happy state of things. In fact elaborate police or our elaborate and costly machinery of government at all is out of place in India. The natives of India are a simple people and they require therefore a simple system of civil administration.

Makes remarks upon the report on the moral and material progress of India for the year 1881-82.

In alluding to the remark made in the report on the moral and material progress of India for the year 1881-82 that the number of criminal offences was less this year than in the immediately preceding year, and that this fact proved that the condition of the people was prosperous, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 5th May observes that in the year 1880-81 an extensive famine prevailed in India, which necessarily caused a heavy increase in crime. In 1881-82 there was no famine and consequently the abnormal number of offences of the previous year suffered diminution, but this fact does not justify the remark that the decrease was the result of the gradually increasing prosperity of the country. In the same report it is stated that there were fewer cases in the year under report than in the previous year of the infliction of the punishment of whipping; but at the same time it is remarked that this mode of punishment is found to be effective in preventing crime. This barbarous punishment and the heartless severity with which it is inflicted have been deservedly condemned by Sir James Caird in his work descriptive of his travels through India; but the statements in the report under notice have been apparently founded upon the opinions and assertions of some wayward officials. The authorities in England ought to collect the opinions of able and discerning Natives on the different subjects treated in the report on the material and moral progress of India before publishing it.

Reflections on the Russian advance in Central Asia.

In a paragraph headed "Russian Advance in Central Asia," the Din Bandhu (5) of the 4th May says:—That the Russians have been endeavouring to approach India is a fact which must disturb the mind of every well-wisher of the British interest. It seems that Russia has her eyes fixed upon India, and if this be so she must know that the British are strengthened by the sincere affection and good-will of the people of the country. The British rule justly, and the more they do so the better will be for them. Besides Russia is in a state of financial bankruptcy and therefore it will be an uphill work for her to meet us in an open field with an empty purse. There are also the Nihilists to annoy her. Under these circumstances we think it almost impossible that she will ever venture to invade India. It must also be acknowledged that all our Native Chiefs and princes will aid the British people, for in them their welfare is centred. What more do the British want? We regret to hear that no understanding has been come to with a Russian diplomatist now in England on the subject.

Advises the adoption of stringent measures for checking the further progress of Russia in the direction of India.

In alluding to the occupation of Merv by the Russians, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 6th May observes that the Government ought not to neglect any more the adoption of effective measures for checking their further progress in the direction of India. No dependence ought to be placed upon the alleged unpopularity of Russian rule in Central Asia. There is now very little distance between the Russian dominions in Asia and the frontiers of India, and yet the Muscovite Government do not appear desirous to come to some specific understanding on the subject. Hitherto the Russians always kept some loopholes in their promises about their progress in Central Asia, and did not scruple to break their word when an opportunity presented itself. They should not be allowed to do anything of the kind in future, and if they attempted to do it they should be effectively checked. They should be expressly told that any further progress in the direction of Sarakhs or Herat will be resented with a vengeance. The Bombay Samáchár of the 10th May, in alluding to the report that the Persians have ceded the town of Harakhi to the Russians and to the belief extensively entertained that Harakhi is probably Sarrakhs, observes that if this belief be true, Herat may be now considered to have gone into the hands of the Russians, and the British Government ought to adopt stringent measures for checking at once the further progress of Russia in the direction of India. There is no use in making empty protests against the insidious approach of Russia, which is given to make promises that are soon broken. Strong and decisive steps are the only means to bind the Russians to their promises.

Exhorts the political associations of the country to take up the Civil Service question.

In alluding to the refusal of Lord Kimberley to comply with the prayer of the deputation from the Indian Reform Association urging Government to raise the standard of age of the candidates for the entrance examination of the Indian Civil Service, the Rást Goftár (111) of the 4th May repeats some arguments which tend to prove that the limit of 19 years has made it almost impossible for Indian youths to pass the examination successfully. The refusal to raise the limit is tantamount to closing the Civil Service of their country to the natives of India; and this flagrant injustice is done in the face of Parliamentary charters, Royal proclamations, and repeated promises of Indian Viceroys and Governors. The political associations of the country should therefore take up the question in right earnest and press it with sufficient force on the notice of Parliament and the Ministry. The present time is most opportune for the beginning of this important work, as Lord Ripon is said to be of opinion that the limit of 19 years is unwise and impolitic, and is willing to recommend that it should be raised. His Lordship cannot however move in the matter of his own accord, but he will never hesitate to support the prayer of the Natives. [The Vidnyán Vilás (120) for the month of May regrets that Lord Kimberley should have practically sanctioned the virtual exclusion of Natives from the higher appointments under the Government of their own country. The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 4th May expresses sentiments similar to those put forth above by the Rást Goftár.]

Condemns the constitution of the Statutory Civil Service of India.

In an article headed "The Statutory Civil Service," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 5th May refers to the refusal of Lord Kimberley to increase the limit of age of candidates for the Indian Civil Service, and after quoting the opinions of the Duke of Argylle and Lord Macaulay remarks:—It is absurd to talk of the Statutory Civil Service with elation and approval. It was condemned before it was created; and the condemnation has not lost its force but has been justified more than might have been expected by what has occurred since it was instituted. We are glad that Lord Ripon intends effecting a change in its constitution; but His Lordship will, we hope, not forget that unless the service is based upon competition and forced from its dependence on favour and patronage, it will not be possible to rescue it from its degradation.

Recommends the enlistment of the natives of India in the Volunteer Corps.

The Gujarát Mitrá (77) of the 4th May regrets that the Commanding Officer of the Panjab Volunteer Rifle Corps should have declined to comply with the prayer of several Government Native officials of the same province to admit them into the corps, on the ground that the rules of the corps did not permit the admission of pure Asiatics into it. The Mitrá observes that the reason given by the Commanding Officer is altogether unsound. A large Native army has been kept up that has never been disloyal to Government, and hence no misgivings about the loyalty of Native volunteers ought to be entertained. If the rules of the existing European volunteer corps debar the enlistment of Native volunteers, these rules should be so revised as to remove the disability. If this be thought undesirable there should be no objection whatever to raise a Native volunteer corps separately.

Says that a member of a local board whether nominated or elected should not be made removeable except on the recommendation of the board itself.

In an article headed "An important decision," the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 5th May refers to the case of Mr. Vijaya Rágheváchárya, the energetic and irrepressible non-official Municipal Commissioner of the town of Salem, and says:—We must direct the pointed attention of the reader to the defence urged on behalf of the Madras Government by the Advocate General. A more bold and impudent defence it is impossible to conceive. If such a contention as has been set up by Government in this case were once accepted as quite sufficient to justify its action, and if it be once admitted that Government can remove any person from office on the barest suspicion without being required to justify its action by clear evidence, then the character and reputation of no man, howsoever honourable, honest, and diligent in the discharge of his duties would be safe. And if the existence of such an uncontrolled power in Government is once recognized, then one may bid farewell to all hope of the local self-government scheme turning out successful, for by the unscrupulous exercise of such practically irresponsible power the district autocrat will always be able to successfully suppress the growth of local liberties and independence, which are a sine qua non of the success of the local self-government scheme. When we saw the line of defence which the Advocate General followed, we had no doubt whatever as to what the decision of the Madras High Court in this case would be. And we are accordingly glad to observe that the public expectation has been fully realized, for there can be no doubt that the decision of the Madras High Court will be received everywhere throughout this vast country with universal satisfaction. Mr. Grant Duff, the Governor of Madras, Mr. Macleane, the Collector of Salem, and other officers, similarly disposed to be autocratic not only in the Madras Presidency but in other parts of India also, have been taught a lesson which they will not easily forget, namely, that the power vested in the Government by section 9 of Act III. of 1871 and similar other sections in other laws has been vested therein in the interests of the efficient discharge of public service and not for the purpose of gratifying the evil intentions of the Indian bureaucracy. All the three judges (Justices Kernan, Hutchins and Muthuswámi Iyer) were unanimously of opinion that the plaintiff had fully established his case. A decree was accordingly passed in the plaintiff's favour with all costs and Rs. 100 damages. Mr. Vijaya Rágheváchárya no doubt deserves well of the well-wishers of the local self-government scheme for his manly resolution in testing by constitutional means the extent of the proper right of the Governor in Council in the matter of removing non-official Municipal Commissioners from their office for alleged misconduct or neglect of duty. Now no district officer will venture to recommend, and no local Government will venture to direct, the dismissal of any non-official Municipal Commissioner or any non-official member of a Local Fund Committee for misconduct or neglect of duty without at the same time being in a position to legally prove in a court of law, if called upon to do so, the alleged misconduct or neglect of duty whichever it may be. Properly speaking no such decision was absolutely necessary, for even to a lay mind the meaning of the section is clear that no Municipal Commissioner is liable to be removed from his office for misconduct or neglect of duty without glaring evidence of the same. But the demoralization in the Indian bureaucracy in consequence of the system of secret reporting is so complete that the Indian bureaucracy never hesitates to arrogate to itself powers which no reasonable interpretation of the law would for a moment support. And in such an abuse of power the bureaucracy is encouraged, by the pusillanimous conduct of its victims, who can never muster courage sufficient to make head against their oppressor. This is the dark side of the Indian character. Taking due note of this fact, which is quite notorious, it is really a surprise to us that Mr. Vijaya Rághavácharya should have made such a bold stand and should have set such a noble example to others for defending local liberties and independence. As we began, so we conclude by offering our heart-felt congratulations to Mr. Vijaya Rághavácharya on the splendid success that has crowned his efforts in the cause of local liberties and independence. [The Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 8th May writing on the same subject says :—It now appears that the circumstance that Mr. Vijaya Rághavácharya was an elected member and not a nominee of Government very considerably aggravates the nature of the Government action in respect of him. That Government should have the right of removing an elected member of a local board, whether urban or rural, for misconduct or neglect of duty without being able to justify its action in a court of law, is something too monstrous to conceive. By the indiscriminate and wanton exercise of such a power Government can at any time crush even all appearance of independence and freedom of discussion, and can render the very idea of local self-government a sham. We would add that the dignity and public consideration attached to the office of a member of a local board, whether urban or rural, will altogether fail to encourage the candidature of respectable and in other ways eligible persons for the said office if Government had the power of summarily dismissing them from it. The sense of insecurity would be so great that no person would consider his character and reputation safe under such circumstances. And thus the very object with which the local self-government scheme, as propounded by the authors of the memorable Resolution of May 1882, has been introduced would be defeated. It is evident from the foregoing how anxious the Government of India really is on this point of stimulating the candidature of respectable men for membership of local boards. The Government of Madras under Mr. Grant Duff towards the close of 1882 cordially accepted the principles laid down in the May Resolution and evinced very commendable anxiety in forwarding the scheme. We presume the Madras Government concurred also in the recommendation or order contained in the 16th paragraph of the May Resolution. And yet the same man, who did all this towards the close of 1882, stultifies himself in 1884, scarcely fifteen months later, by avowing that he has removed an elected Municipal Commissioner for misconduct without being able to prove the alleged misconduct when challenged to do so. We believe it is absolutely necessary to circumscribe this discretionary power by enacting that a member of a local board, whether elected or nominated, shall not be removed from his office except on the recommendation of the board of which he is a member. To-day we simply suggest this amendment in the hope that the subject may be discussed and a remedy finally adopted. The Madras case furnishes ample justification for providing some adequate remedy as a safeguard against the abuse of power.]

Advocates the abolition of the Deccan Ryots' Relief Act.

The Arunodayă (16) of the 4th May considers that the Deccan Ryots' Relief Act has not improved the condition of the agricultural population and therefore should be abolished. Mr. Woodward in his report on the working of the above Act stated as his opinion that ryots are now-a-days obliged to sell their lands to money-lenders in order to raise loans. Now the intention of the Act in question was to prevent ryots from mortgaging their lands to money-lenders, but this object is entirely defeated and they are compelled by the force of circumstances to part with their property absolutely. The Arunodayă strongly suggests the abolition of the Deccan Ryots' Relief Act.

Complains of the excessive rigour of the forest laws.

The Shiváji (62) of the 2nd May bitterly complains of the extreme rigour of the forest laws. People are strictly prohibited from removing earth and stones from jungles, although their removal has no effect whatever on the rainfall. If poor ryots require earth and stones for building their houses, they are charged certain fees for removing them from the forests. The object of Government in enforcing the forest laws seems to be the augmentation of its revenue. The agriculturists have from time immemorial enjoyed the right of taking away earth and stones from the forests, but Government has now unjustly deprived them of that right. Again a most unaccountable oppression is practised in the working of the forest laws. Lands which are admirably fitted for cultivation are appropriated towards forest purposes. For instance, the lands adjacent to the Níra Canal, which runs through the Bhimthadi and Khed Tálukás, have now been so appropriated. The canal in question was constructed with a view to increase the area of cultivation, but the actual policy would seem to be the reverse of this. The money spent in the construction of the Níra Canal was raised by taxation from the people, and it is therefore strange that the fullest advantage should not be taken from it. The lands which are now appropriated for forest purposes are forcibly taken from their owners. This is most unjust. The increase of forest area and the uncontrolled growth of trees will lead to the augmentation in the number of wild animals, and this will only add to the present miseries of the agricultural population which are already sufficiently overwhelming. The Shiváji hopes that the forest laws will not be enforced with the same rigour as they are now.

Says that much oppression is practised by Civil Surgeons on candidates seeking certificates of physical fitness for admission into the public service.

The Indu Prakásh (9) of the 5th May says that now-a-days those who obtain appointments in the public service are obliged to produce certificates of their physical fitness from Civil Surgeons. If the Civil Surgeon happens to be a gentleman of integrity and high principles the person seeking his certificate is not given any trouble; but if he happens to be of a different character there is no end to the misery of the poor applicant. The annoyance to which candidates seeking certificates from Civil Surgeons are subjected to has now become absolutely fearful. It would be well if Government were to appoint a Commission to report upon this subject. The Indu Prakásh would gladly have published such instances of indecent treatment as it believes to be true, but it is unwilling to do so since the publication of such statements is likely to give rise to contests between Europeans and Natives, which might result in disastrous consequences to the latter. The Indu Prakásh would strongly advise Government to do away with the present practice. The examination of the physical fitness of candidates should be conducted publicly before a committee of respectable gentlemen. It is to be hoped that Government will not refuse to direct its attention to this matter because the charges made here are of an indefinite character. It is very difficult to prove such charges completely. If a careful investigation were made secretly by selected persons into the manner in which Civil Surgeons have been giving certificates of physical fitness to employés in public offices within the last ten years, it would be found that much oppression has been practised. Many candidates are refused certificates frivolously on the ground of their being inflicted with heart disease and with not possessing manly powers. But it is well known that it is no easy thing to determine these matters with complete thoroughness. The exercise of much discretion is necessary.

Says that Native princes should not be asked to contribute money for the Bombay International Exhibition Fund.

The same newspaper says:—We think there is much sense in the suggestion made by a vernacular contemporary that Native princes should not be asked to contribute money from the funds of their States to the proposed Bombay International Exhibition. These princes, rather many of them, are yet in a kind of financial darkness, and any contributions they may send for the purposes of the Exhibition would be sent at the expense of the tax-payers under their jurisdiction, and there is no reason why these should be made to contribute when there is sufficient enterprise as well as wealth in this city to get up an Exhibition and make it a success. If there is not enough of both amongst us to make the proposal feasible, it had, we think, better be abandoned rather than that the Native princes should be troubled.

Disapproves that the local fund should be drawn upon for contribution to the guarantee fund of the coming International Exhibition.

The Yajdán Parast (122) of the 4th May concurs with the Bombay Samáchár of the 29th April in disapproving the intention of Government to contribute to the guarantee fund of the coming International Exhibition from the local fund of this Presidency, and uses the arguments advanced by the Samáchár in condemnation of the proposal. The Parast recommends that the contribution should be made from the imperial funds.

Says that Government ought to take due notice of the fracas between Captain Fergusson and the Railway policemen at the Charni Road level crossing.

In alluding to the restoration of Dr. Banks to the staff service and the omission of all notice by Government of the fracas between Captain Fergusson and the Railway police at the Charni Road level crossing, the Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 29th May observes that the correspondence about the latter occurrence published in the local English papers shows that Captain Fergusson did not deserve much blame in the matter, while the policemen who made a serious assault on him and Captain Brown who hushed up the affair deserve severe censure. Two months have passed since the occurrence and yet no notice has been taken of it by Government. This has led Natives to remark that Sir James Fergusson is afraid to displease Europeans on any account whatever. Sir James' Government recently passed censure on Mr. White, the Collector of Surat, and his deputy, Mr. Adarji Jiwanji, but has only transferred the latter to the Panch Mahâls as an indication of the severe displeasure of Government, while the former has been allowed to remain at Surat. Perhaps Mr. Adarji's fault was graver than that of Mr. White, and hence the former has been more severely punished than the latter. If this be so, the papers of the case should be published in order to convince the public that no partiality has been shown. Government ought to make no more delay in issuing a resolution permitting Captain Fergusson to prosecute the police, and the Railway Company to proceed against Captain Fergusson. Captain Brown also deserves censure for hushing up the matter.

Recommends the grant of a compassionate allowance to the family of the late Professor Kero Lakshman Chhatre.

The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 4th May recommends that a compassionate allowance should be given to the widow of the late Professor Chhatre. The late Professor, observes the Mitră, is said to have been in the habit of giving away a large portion of his salary for the support of indigent students and to have spent a great deal of his pay in scientific researches; and hence he was not able to make adequate provision for his family. If an allowance is given to his destitute family, the support so accorded will be highly gratifying to the feelings of the Native community.

Suggests that the reports of the District Collectors should be placed on the Editors' table.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 4th May says:—The Times of India makes a very useful suggestion to Government asking it to place the reports of the Collectors of the different districts on the Editors' table. The reports of the district officers are of more direct importance than the administration reports of the Local Government as bearing more directly upon the moral and material condition of the individual districts. There is, we fear, one great objection to such a course—an objection which Government may urge but which public interests can take no notice of. Collectors having good opportunities of knowing how the people are doing, are often moved by an honesty of purpose to severely criticize the operations of particular measures of Government, and if these remarks are allowed to see the light the chances are that public opinion will be so strengthened as to make it impossible for Government to continue an unwise policy or a suicidal measure. This has been made quite clear by the opinions of the district officers on the two important measures that have recently agitated the whole country—the Jurisdiction Bill and the Local Self-government Bill. The suggestion of our contemporary is quite in keeping with the advantage of criticising and controlling the action of the executive, and the sooner it is adopted the better will it be for the governors as well as the governed.

The license-tax at Broach.

The Broach Samáchár (87) of the 8th May refers to the issue of notifications regarding the payment of the license-tax at Broach for the year 1884-85, and observes that it is wonderful that no mention should be made in them of the time up to which appeals against the license-tax assessments could be made by the tax-payers. The result of this omission is that ignorant persons file appeals after the expiry of the period of appeal and find it difficult to obtain justice. It is therefore necessary that the notifications should clearly state the period during which appeals against the assessment may be preferred and the officer with whom they are to be lodged. It cannot be understood why this has not been done, though a similar suggestion has been made on many previous occasions. Last year many appellants complained that the period for making appeals was not defined in the notifications and this complaint was in many cases attended to. The Samáchár recommends Mr. Bamanji Edalji Modi, the Huzúr Deputy Collector of Broach, to proclaim publicly the period of appeal throughout the city. The public is more disgusted with the manner in which the license-tax is collected than with the tax itself. If measures are adopted to improve the method of collection, the people will not then grumble.

Remarks on General Hardinge's plan for making the army popular among Natives.

The Subodh Patrika (12) of the 4th May says:—We see that General Hardinge has taken a note of the growing unpopularity of the army among the Natives. He has prepared a scheme by which he hopes to render the service more popular. His idea is to induce all military officers and others to keep discharged sepoys as peons in preference to other people. Some of them have already expressed their willingness to patronize this class of servants who will come with certificates of good character from the commanding officers of their regiments. We are not quite sure, however, that they will make a better class of servants than the present race of peons. What difference their previous military training will make requires to be seen. With the fullest sympathy for them, we think their employment in civil offices ought to be governed by their qualifications more than by sentiment, though no doubt they are a deserving class of servants who should be patronized as much as possible. There ought to be no compulsion, moral or legal, for their employment. We wish the scheme hearty success, and so far as it succeeds it will serve somewhat to render the army popular. Yet we cannot but say that this is not all that can or ought to be done for the sepoys in our Native armies. The poverty of the classes from which our armies are recruited impairs their physique and their powers of sustaining the toil and moil of a military life. Then the pay, low in itself and reduced to a very small sum by the various deductions to which it is subject, is not sufficiently attractive, and moreover is totally inadequate to compensate for the arduous and perilous duties which have to be performed. It is just enough to keep the sepoy and his family alive. Meanwhile ancestral debts remain unpaid and fresh ones have to be incurred when extraordinary expenditure is required. These are circumstances which give rise to the unpopularity of the army and which have to be successfully encountered to make it attractive. Does General Hardinge feel himself competent to face them?

Praises General Hardinge for trying to make the Native army popular among Natives.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 4th May says:—General Hardinge has given another proof of his practical good sense and his kindly interest in the sepoy by the scheme which has been approved by military officers as warm-hearted as himself. Beginnings are always small, but if they are worked up they lead to great results. The condition of the Native soldier is admittedly poor, and his prospects are very far indeed from cheering. Far-sighted men have discerned danger to the State in this plight of the Native soldier. Any English officer, therefore, who seeks to improve the man's position is not only a benefactor in so far, but also a patriot.

Railways.

Necessity of erecting fencing by the side of the Dhond and Manmád Railway.

A correspondent of the Vártáhar (68) of the 20th April, writing from Ahmednagar, reports that two cows which were straying on the Dhond and Manmád Railway between the stations of Puntámbe and Wári a few days ago were killed by a ballast train and the latter was thrown off the rails. This accident would not have happened if fencing had been erected by the sides of the railway line. The correspondent trusts that the Railway authorities will construct the fencing without delay.

Municipalities.

Advises the Bombay public to agitate in the matter of the water famine at present prevailing in the city.

In a paragraph headed "Our Water-supply" the Native Opinion (10) of the 4th May says:—With regard to this subject one thing that suggests itself to us is that it is entirely in the hands of rate-payers to get a good supply of drinkable water. For what is the Corporation after all but a mouth-piece of them? Let them in a body insist on it and they will have water to their liking. With a resignation now almost constitutional in the Native character he sits down with folded hands and is afraid of provoking the wrath of the Municipal authorities as if they were the fabled dragon that could burn the world, and the rate-payers of the city in the bargain, by its volumes of fire. But this profitless resignation of old we must now cast off. Let the rate-payers know that those whose money is expended have a right to see that it is primarily applied to the preservation of their health; let the Municipal authorities also know that if people demand this thing or that they are bound to give it. The rate-payers must not now count upon the monarch in the Arabian Nights going round the streets privately inquiring into the wants of the people; the good old days are now gone. We must avail ourselves of Western demonstrations, and it is this, and this only, that will give us what we want.

Complains of the impure and insufficient supply of water to the inhabitants of Bombay.

The InduPrakásh (9) of the 5th May says:—Both Calcutta and Bombay are now suffering from a water famine. In Calcutta the explanation given for the deficiency of its present water-supply is that the increasing demand and increasing consumption of water have gone on so fast that the present supply is inadequate to meet the wants of the population. In Bombay, however, the case seems to be quite the reverse. It is not, as our Municipal authorities tell us, that the supply has fallen off, but rather that they are trying to ensure for the city purer water than they have been able to obtain for some time past. Thus for the sake of the future the citizens of Bombay are put to the necessity of using filthy water in this hottest part of the season. It is rather strange that the epidemics of cholera and small-pox, which are raging severely in other parts of India, do not prevail in Bombay, but if things continue longer as they are at present there is every chance of the dire experiences of Calcutta and Madras being repeated here. [The Gujaráti (97) of the 4th May strongly complains of the filthy condition and insufficient supply of water, and advises the Municipality to take speedy measures to remedy the grievance of the people instead of occupying its time in unimportant matters.]

Says that the Mahomedan burial-ground at Sonápur is too close to densely inhabited quarters.

The Subodh Patrika (14) of the 4th May says that the Mahomedan burial-ground situated in Sonápur is not surrounded with walls like burial-grounds usually are, and besides it is in too close proximity to densely inhabited quarters. The effluvia emitted by dead bodies must spread and contaminate the surrounding atmosphere which people breathe and which must tend to the deterioration of their constitution. The death-rate in the quarters adjoining the Mahomedan burial-ground is higher than in any other part of Bombay. This conclusively proves the poisonous nature of the vapours emitted from the burial-ground. Among western nations burial-grounds are always selected far from inhabited localities in the interest of the peoples' health. This being so, it is not right on the part of the Municipal authorities to allow the Mahomedan burial-ground to remain uncovered and unenclosed and in the neighbourhood of a densely inhabited locality.

Disapproves of the conduct of some of the Municipal Commissioners of Surat in connection with the recent squabble.

The Suryá Prakásh (80) of the 3rd May, in referring to the scene enacted at a recent meeting of the Municipal Commissioners of Surat, says that it does not appear likely that local self-government will succeed at Surat, for the municipal board is divided into two parties. Messrs. Ishwardás, Dáhyábhái, Gulábdás, Sákarlál, Dhru, Bhánushankar and Kálábhái were present at the meeting of the Municipal Committee held on the 1st instant, but they did not take any part in the transaction of business. They have not done any good to the city by thus holding aloof. There is no advantage in offering opposition when the business is managed according to the majority of votes. Such occurrences are very improper.

Requests Government to settle the difference that has arisen between the President and seven popular representatives of the Municipal Corporation of Surat.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 6th May observes that the people of Surat are much dissatisfied with the present system of lighting the streets and do not wish to spend any more money. The President of the Corporation and a few Commissioners desired that more money should be spent on the electric lights, but the seven representatives opposed their proposal for the expenditure and in doing this represented the wish of the people. The President refused to bring the motion before the meeting, and threw away the written protest made against his conduct. Since Government have insisted, against the wishes of the public, on retaining the Collector as the President of the Corporation, they should prevent the enactment of such unseemly scenes and arrange for the smooth working of the municipal affairs so as to conduce to the welfare of the public.

Arbitrary conduct of the President at the meeting of the Municipal Commissioners of Surat.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 4th May alludes to a fracas that took place at the meeting of the Surat Municipal Commissioners on the 1st May, and says:—The Collector-President thrust electric light and an improved park upon the people in spite of their vehement protests against the gifts and equally vehement cries for pure water and good roads. There has been a fatality hanging over this electric lighting of Surat. The Company has more than once broken its contract and is fined by the Municipal authorities. Why Mr. White and his European colleagues now recall the fine, we will not pause to consider here. They may be justified. But is the Collector-President justified in treating the seven elected Municipal Commissioners in the way he has done and carrying things in such a flagrantly high-handed manner? The pity of it is that all this blundering and arbitrary business is done in the name of local self-government. It is not local self-government but selfish Government, as selfish and despotic as ever a nation of slaves put up with. Here are English officials giving the rate-payers things which they do not want in preference over things which they do most urgently want; and this is the way they spend the rate-payers' money on costly luxuries.

Comments on the recent scene at a meeting of the Municipal Commissioners of Surat.

In a paragraph headed "The Surat Municipality," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 5th May says:—The recent squabble between several Native Commissioners of the Surat Municipality and its President (the Collector of the District) is very much to be regretted. We fail to see why the President disallowed the members of the Municipal Commission to discuss whether he had rightly refunded the fine imposed on the electric light contractors. This high-handed attempt to gag the mouths of the members does not augur well for the future of local self-government in Surat. The report says that on the President preventing the discussion of the question, seven of the members withdrew from the meeting. This, under the circumstances, was all they could do in vindication of their self-respect and in the interests of the Municipality. We hope Sir James Fergusson will have his attention drawn to the unfortunate matter and will enquire into all that has occurred relating to it. Local self-government would be a farce if such illegal and high-handed proceedings were quietly looked at from a distance by the Government. [The Gujaráti (97) of the 4th May disapproves of the high-handed conduct of

Mr. White, the Municipal President, and says that such conduct will give rise to much unfavourable comments on the scheme of local self-government. It is satisfactory that the new District Municipal Amendment Act will greatly reduce the possibility of such cases happening in future.]

The Municipal squabble at Surat and the advisability of doing away with official presidents of mofussil Municipalities.

In a paragraph headed "Local Self-government at Surat," the Native Opinion (10) of the 4th May alludes to the President of the Municipal Commissioners, who disregarded the motion put by one Kalubhái, and remarks:—This defiant President is a Government official. Where are the assurances of the official majority of the Council that self-government in the mofussil would prove a reality and not a veritable sham? The Self-government Bills are now the law of the land, and yet, if we mistake not, the Poona, Surat, and Karáchi Municipalities have officials for their heads. We think the time has arrived when the city municipalities at least ought to cease to be kept in leading strings. We hope our Government were serious when they promised that wherever available non-official presidents would be given. Can it be true that neither Poona nor Karáchi contains a single educated gentleman worthy of the honour? We hope Government will look into the matter and see that all city municipalities are given non-official presidents. In the meanwhile it will be interesting to see what steps Government take to set to right the recent Surat Municipal squabble. [The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 8th May refers to the municipal squabble at Surat, disapproves of the retention of official presidents of mofussil Municipalities, and remarks that this and many other instances of a like nature that have occurred in Gujarát show the arbitrary power wielded by Collectors in municipal and local fund boards. It is also to be regretted that the people should only have been allowed in the new District Municipal Amendment Act to elect only half the number of Municipal Commissioners. The rate-payers will benefit then and then only when two-thirds of the number of Commissioners are elected and the President chosen by the Commissioners out of their own body. If Sir James Fergusson wishes to leave these shores as a popular Governor he should in the first place attend to this matter.]

Disapproves of the conduct of Mr. White, the President of the Surat Municipality, in connection with the question of the remission of a fine inflicted on the contractor of electric lights.

The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 4th May briefly describes the proceedings of the general meetings of the Municipal Commissioners of Surat held on the 30th ultimo and the 1st instant in connection with the question of the remission of the fine of Rs. 569 inflicted on the contractor of electric lights, and severely censures Mr. White, the President of the Corporation, for getting the motion for the remission passed in a high-handed manner and for giving offence to some of the popular representatives who objected to the proceeding. The popular representatives are praised for their conduct on the occasion and Government are requested to consider their appeal properly and do justice in the matter. [The Deshi Mitră (92) of the 8th May expresses similar sentiments.]

Native States.

Defects in the administration of the Aundh State.

A correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 5th May says that the administration of the Aundh State in the Sátára Collectorate is not carried on satisfactorily. The principal offices are held by the Chief's relatives, who support each other, and consequently it is no easy thing to obtain justice. The magisterial work is done in a high-handed manner. The Kárbhári is unacquainted with the duties of a criminal judge. The people would be much benefited if the Chief were to employ a competent pensioned officer from the British service. The pay of persons in the public service of the State is very low, and it is doled out to them quarterly. The correspondent hopes that the Chief will order the pay of the State servants to be paid monthly.

Says that Rána Jálamsingji should be tried for the alleged poisoning of the elder ráni of the Ráo of Cutch.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 4th May observes:—At the time when Rána Jálamsingji was allowed by the Bombay Government to return to Cutch we said that the Rána would not keep quiet there. Major Reeves had given it as his opinion that, should the arrangement of marrying the Ráo of Cutch to one of Rána Jálamsingji's daughters be carried out, there would be great khatpat in the zenana. This opinion has been found quite correct. Will not the Bombay Government, which yielding to influence committed the mistake of allowing the Rána to return to Cutch, see their mistake even now? The Rána commanded sufficient influence during the lifetime of the Ráo's mother; but believing it to have decreased by her death, he gave his daughter in marriage to the Ráo. This marriage was brought about with an interested motive. The Rána wished his daughter to be the head-wife of the Ráo; but as the other wife, the daughter of the king of Sáyla, is elder, the former could not of course command the same respect which ought to be accorded to the latter during her lifetime, nor could she have her son nominated heir to the throne. For these reasons a powerful intrigue was planned. The Bombay Gazette exposed the intrigue regarding the poisoning of the elder Ráni of Cutch, and by God's grace she has been saved. We had heard of the report of the elder Ráni being poisoned, many days before it was published in the Gazette, but we could not write anything about it owing to the want of substantial proof. The elder queen owes her life to the far-sightedness of Colonel Phillips. Great precaution has been taken since the marriage of the daughter of the Rána with the Ráo. Prompt measures were adopted and the Colonel wished to prosecute the Rána, but he has only been sent into exile at the solicitation of Ráo Bahádur Manibhái. It is not just that the Rána should thus escape punishment, which in the British dominions would be imprisonment with hard labour for ten years. The Bombay Government ought to institute an enquiry into the affair and duly punish him if he be really guilty of this wicked deed. The Ráo has duly punished his wife, the daughter of the Rána, by driving her away, but why should her father not be tried? He has not committed a light offence. The friends of the Rána will not sit quiet; but we hope that they will now follow a wise course, the result of which will depend upon the decision of the Bombay Government.

Berár Affairs.

Says that the assessment on fields in which gánja is sown is unnecessarily high.

The Pramod Sindhu (12) of the 5th May says that whereas formerly cultivators wanting to sow gánja had only to take out a license by the payment of Rs. 8, it is now ruled that any farmer wishing to sow gánja on his land will be charged at the rate of Rs. 10 per acre whether the whole or any portion of it is sown with gánja. The Pramod Sindhu is unable to discover the reason which has led the authorities to unnecessarily increase the assessment on fields on which gánja is sown. It would have been well if popular opinion had been consulted on this subject before making any change in the assessment. The new rate of assessment is excessive. The Pramod Sindhu trusts that the authorities of the Excise Department will reconsider their decision.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
13*th May* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Administration of India: Finding fault with the way in which India is governed ... 3
Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
  Advice for the adoption of stringent measures for checking the further — in the direction of India ... 5
  Reflections on the— ... 4
Bombay International Exhibition:
  Disapproval of the local funds being drawn upon for contribution to the guarantee fund of the coming— ... 9
  Expression of opinion that Native princes should not be asked to contribute money for the — fund ... 8
Civil Service of India:
  Condemnation of the constitution of the Statutory— ... 5
  Exhortation to the political associations of India to take up the question of the— ... 5
Compassionate allowance to the family of the late Professor Chhatre: Recommendation for the grant of a— ... 9
Deccan Ryots' Relief Act: Advocacy of the abolition of the— ... 7
Employment of pensioned Native soldiers as peons in military and other offices:
  Praises of General Hardinge for his scheme regarding the— ... 10
  Remarks on the scheme for the— ... 10
Forest laws: Complaint regarding the excessive rigour of the— ... 7
Fracas at the Charni Road level crossing: Expression of opinion that Government should take due notice of the— ... 9
License-tax: The — at Broach ... 10
Local Board: Expression of opinion that a member of a — whether nominated or elected should not be made removeable except on the recommendation of the board itself ... 6
Moral and material progress of India: Remarks upon the report on the— for the year 1881-82 ... 4
Public service: Statement that much oppression is practised by Civil Surgeons on candidates seeking certificates of physical fitness for admission into the— ... 8
Reports of District Collectors: Suggestion for placing the — on the Editors' table ... 9
Volunteer Corps: Recommendation for the enlistment of the natives of India in the— ... 6

PART II.—Railways—

Dhond and Manmád Railway: Necessity of erecting fencing by the side of the— ... 11

PART III.—Municipalities—

Bombay:
  Advice to the — public to agitate in the matter of the water famine at present prevailing in the city ... 11
  Complaint regarding the impure and insufficient supply of water to the inhabitants of— ... 11
  Statement that the Mahomedan burial-ground at Sonápur is too close to densely inhabited quarters ... 11
Surat:
  Arbitrary conduct of the President of the — Municipality ... 12
  Comments on the recent scene at a meeting of the Municipal Commissioners of— ... 12
  Disapproval of the conduct of some of the Municipal Commissioners of — in connection with the recent squabble ... 12
  Disapproval of the conduct of Mr. White, the President of the — Municipality, in connection with the question of the remission of a fine inflicted on the contractor of electric lights ... 13

Page.

PART III.—Municipalities—continued.

Surat:

Request to Government to settle the difference that has arisen between the President and seven popular representatives of the Municipal Corporation of— 12

The Municipal squabble at — and the advisability of doing away with official Presidents of mofussil Municipalities 13

PART IV.—Native States—

Aundh: Defects in the administration of the — State 13

Cutch: Expression of opinion that Rána Jálamsingji should be tried for the alleged poisoning of the elder ráni of the Ráo of— ... 14

PART V.—Berár Affairs—

Assessment on fields in which gánja is sown: Expression of opinion that the — is unnecessarily high 14

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C. R.
22043
INDIA OFFICE
10 JUN 1884

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 17th May 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
5	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
6	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
7	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
8	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
9	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
10	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
11	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
12	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
13	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
14	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
15	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
16	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
17	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
18	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
19	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
20	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
21	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*22	„ Chandrika	Kolhápur	Monthly	150
23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*37	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
38	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
39	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
40	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
41	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
42	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
43	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*50	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
51	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*53	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*54	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
57	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
58	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
59	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*60	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
61	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*62	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 160

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*66	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
67	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
69	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
70	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*71	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*73	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*74	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
75	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*76	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
77	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
78	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
79	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
80	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
81	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
82	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
83	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
84	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*85	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
86	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
87	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
88	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
89	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
90	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
91	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
92	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
93	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
*94	„ Dnyán Dipak	Junágad	Do.	100
95	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
96	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
97	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*98	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
99	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*100	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
101	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
102	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
103	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*104	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
105	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
106	„ Lok Mitră	Do.	Weekly	800
107	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
108	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
109	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
110	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
111	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
112	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
113	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*114	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
115	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*116	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
117	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*118	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*124	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitră, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Says that if the natives of India are kept contented, the British Government will be able to defy Russia with their aid.

In a paragraph headed "Russian Advance towards India," the Native Opinion (10) of the 11th May says:—The publication of the late General Skobeleff's plan for the invasion of India must have caused a flutter in quarters where suspicion in these matters is always on tip-toe. But what would it matter if all the Sarakhs and the alleged gate of India were in the hands of Russia? A contented Indian people with a number of equally contented feudatories can defy the Russian hoards, nay, drive them within their own proper bounds. But this side of the question is never given the consideration it deserves; a mere mention of Russian advance is enough to bring forth a round of proposals about a railway to Herat, occupation of Kandahar, the Euphrates Valley Railway, and many more. In our view these proposals are clearly wide of the mark. Let there be a Government of love for and affection towards the Indian people, let the British desire for Indian gold at the expense of India be merged into Indian interest, and a Russian invading force will never have met a more stubborn soldier than the Indian sepoy.

Remarks in connection with the Russian advance in Central Asia.

The Arunodayă (16) of the 11th May says that if Lord Beaconsfield were now in power, he would not have allowed Russia to make rapid approaches to the Indian frontier. The annexation of Merv by the Russians is entirely owing to the remissness of the present English Ministry. Mr. Gladstone's cabinet should once for all determine the policy which it is intended to observe towards Afghanistan and Russia. The present confusion is the result of the vacillating policy of the British Government. In the first place the British Indian Government should conclude a treaty with the Amir of Afghanistan the terms of which should be unequivocal and distinct. The Amir should be informed of the exact nature of his relations with the Government of India. It is not likely that the Amir will be inclined to side with Russia. He has strong grounds for suspecting the supposed good intentions of Russia towards him, while he has every hope of being supported by the British Government. The Amir of Afghanistan may in reality be said to be a feudatory of the British Government. There will be no difficulty in retaking Kandahar, particularly when the railway is completed up to Quetta. It is to be hoped that Lord Ripon will not let go the present opportunity of settling the Afghan difficulty. The Russian Government should be made to feel that the British Government will not allow its interference in Afghan affairs on any terms.

Advises the British Government to adopt effective measures for thwarting Russian designs on India and makes suggestions for improving the armies of Native States.

In alluding to the conquest of Merv by the Russians the Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 11th May says:—The Russian Empire in India now lies, or will at no very distant date lie, side by side with the leading powers in lower Asia, and especially with the paramount power ruling our own country. That Russia has ever considered England an inconvenient thorn by its side in Asia and Europe, and that therefore it has been fast descending upon the northern and north-west confines of India, can admit of no doubt. Russia has hitherto had a good deal to fear from England. Russia has known this to its cost on several occasions, such as what it had to suffer in the Crimea and the check that it received more recently in Turkey. It seems to have moved its chess-board in another direction altogether, having failed elsewhere for the last quarter of a century. But its movements towards this part of the world must be viewed from another standpoint. But for it the Central Asian kingdoms would have been rendered a perfect curse, and both Persia and Afghanistan would only have served to render that fair portion of the earth a greater desolation than ever. Russia is putting down plunder and bloodshed, checking abnormal traffic in slaves, and is introducing order and civilization in the barbarous tracts that it has conquered. Its proximity to Herat and Kabul is a sort of indirect co-operation with England in spreading civilization in Central Asia. What the princes and the people of India have to look to is that these near possessions of mighty powers do not form in course of time a mine of gunpowder doing the teeming populations of India incalculable mischief. The people of India will be glad to remain at peace with Russia and even encourage trade with that country; but they will certainly resent any interference in their relations with the British power. Let it approach them as a kindly neighbour, but its evil eye on their peace and prosperity and their smooth-going civilization they will damn with all their might and resolve. Russia, if you feel that England does not act magnanimously with you in Turkey and elsewhere, you may have your say there, but not here. India has already paid dear for her peace and for her consolidation as an empire, and her wealth and resources have already been thinned, so that she is now striving hard for their replenishment. She cannot therefore allow you to exercise your malicious grudge against England on her north-west confines. The people of India respectfully demand of England that she should keep her accounts with Russia quite square. Great Britain should see the great progress made by Russia now-a-days in the direction of India and deal with her accordingly. England had not much to lose in past times; now she has to risk a great deal from the fact of the Bear having stealthily come and sat at her door. The policy of both countries may, however, all of a sudden produce a clash in spite of the conciliatory tendencies of both. Will not England therefore be ready for a dark day? Are her resources in the east and the west sufficient to meet the Russian Bear in both quarters of the globe? On this subject we have already shown the weak points of the forces of the Indian empire and fully demonstrated how insufficient they are. The forces of the Native States should not be neglected. Already the armies of the leading Native States of this Presidency are being reorganized in the way they ought to be. It is a sign of better times. But whatever has to be done should be done quickly and with full heart. Every possible improvement should be introduced in the rank and file of the forces of the Native States. Any time India may want half a lákh or more than the Imperial army to defend her frontier, while some portion of the resources may be needed in Europe simultaneously, and again considerable numbers would be required to keep internal order. If therefore there was a Native army from the feudatory States, each of the many important points in India could be garrisoned, partly by the British and partly by the forces of Native States, while the most capable army could be sent on to fight the enemy. To let some of the more deserving Native Chiefs share in the glory of the defence, their armies could even be sent to the frontiers or elsewhere to actively co-operate with the British columns. At present almost the whole fighting resources of the Native States are simply wasted. What a mistaken political foresight! While there is yet time, let the Foreign Office in India take up the whole question seriously. No additional expenditure should be thrown on any State, but such States as can produce an army may utilize their present resources to the extent that may be practicable. Again, no State should, in the case of a foreign aggression, bear more than its resources and its capability as a member of the empire will admit of. Any delay to take definite action of the sort here mentioned would be deplorable. Russia has been always active in pursuing the end it has so steadily kept in view. Can the paramount power of India and its important feudatories afford any longer to neglect the resources at their disposal? It is true that the naval power of Britain can injure Russia in Europe in a swift and telling manner, but will such retaliation compensate for the suffering of this country should Russia try to upset it from the Peshawar or Herat side? Certainly not. [The Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date laments the unconcern shown by England to the Russian progress in the direction of India and is afraid that England will have to repent one day for its inactivity in this matter.]

Says that the British Government ought to make active and extensive preparations for thwarting the designs of Russia on India.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 11th May observes that the scheme for the invasion of India planned by the late General Skobeleff may be considered as the embodiment of the views of not merely its ostensible author, but of the party in Russia strongly disposed to make a diversion in the direction of India, whenever the same may be deemed advisable, in order to check England from easily interfering with future Russian plans in respect of the eastern question.

Events taking place in Central Asia in favour of Russia since the letter under notice was written in 1877 might be held as tending only to change the base of operations, as projected by the deceased General, from Turkistan to the Caspian region. When viewed thoughtfully, the project would appear neither very wild nor very easy of accomplishment. It would be full of risks on the one hand, and worth trying at all hazards on the other, for the sake of the purpose aimed at. In the event of the contingency contemplated by General Skobeleff, the Russians will certainly try with all their might to carry out the plans suggested by him if they saw any chance of profiting at all by the attempt, no matter what the cost. The prize to be secured in Europe would be sufficient inducement to run all the risk in Asia. Hence the persistence with which the Russian advance in the direction of India has been kept up along with all sorts of noisy protestations of Russian intentions to the contrary. The only safeguards for England would lie, therefore, not in her confidence in the good faith of the Muscovite, however solemnly pledged, but in the most active and extensive material preparations and resolute determination on the part of the British to meet Russian designs and projects in the manner best calculated to counteract their effects in good time. The whole letter of General Skobeleff goes to show that, if she wished, Russia would not shrink from or hesitate to try any means, however base or cruel, to accomplish her end by embarrassing the English Government and ruining all the subjects of the English Crown. War, rapine, plunder, intrigue, sedition would be welcome to her for the one sole object of securing the possession of Constantinople. Should England again be found interfering with Russian scheme for the possession of Stambole, no devices would be considered by the Muscovite as too diabolical for being directed against the peace and prosperity of the Hindus and Mahomedans of India and the Christians of the United Kingdom. Russia will use all her strength, all her wiles and frauds, all the coaxing and coercion at her disposal, for preparing and perfecting her scheme in order to be able to paralyze the action of Great Britain when wishing again to raise a helping hand in aid of the Porte, and thus prevent the annihilation of the Mahomedan rule in Europe. That such is the chief, the sole aim and end of the Russian project, as embodied in the letter of General Skobeleff, must be apparent to the simplest understanding. Every true Mahomedan should take note of the same all over India.

Expression of opinion that General Skobeleff's plan for the invasion of India is impracticable.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (104) of the 11th May observes that the late General Skobeleff's scheme for the invasion of India, recently published, confirms its opinion that Russia is not in a position to invade India and the plan is simply impracticable. Russia cannot spare more than ten thousand troops from her Central Asian possessions without risking their safety; and she can get from Siberia 5,000 soldiers more. With this army the invasion of India is simply ridiculous, because the Indian army is so very large and efficient that it can signally defeat the Russians with great ease. General Skobeleff counted upon a rebellion of the British Indian subjects on the approach of the Russian troops; but this was a mere fanciful calculation, as the people of India are sincerely loyal to the British Government and the latter is firmly and justly ruling the country. India has very little to fear from a Russian invasion, while on the other hand Russia would have to risk a great deal under such a contingency. The Asiatic subjects of Russia are dissatisfied with their rulers, and a hint to them from the British Government that England would assist them in an insurrection against Russia would not fail to completely ruin the Central Asian empire of the Czar. [The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 12th May expresses similar sentiments.]

Disallows Lord Lytton's explanation about his arrangements for the admission of Natives into the Covenanted Civil Service.

In noticing Lord Lytton's letter of the 13th April last to the London Times stating that no Viceroy made such efforts as he made for the admission of the natives of India into the Covenanted Civil Service of their country, and that the charge of closing the service to them brought against him was false, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 14th May observes that the efforts made by His Lordship in the matter have not proved beneficial to Natives. Lord Lytton introduced the plan of appointing Natives to Civil Service posts under the system of nomination. These Civilians however are justly considered inferior to the Covenanted Civil Servants that have gained entrance into the service by successfully passing the competitive examinations, and thus His Lordship's arrangements have done no good to Natives. [The Gujaráti (97) of the 11th May quotes the opinion of Lord Northbrook regarding the limit of age of candidates for the Indian Civil Service, and advises the people of India to continue agitation in the matter.]

Disapproves of the decision of the Secretary of State for India on the question of the disestablishment of the Christian church in India.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 14th May regrets that the Secretary of State should have refused to act upon Lord Ripon's recommendation for the disestablishment of the Christian church in India. After briefly alluding to the injustice of maintaining a Christian church establishment from the taxes levied from the followers of other religions, the Samáchár observes that the natives of India have been long and loudly complaining against this impropriety, and yet Lord Kimberley said that he was not aware that Natives have ever seriously objected to the charge for the Christian church falling on the Indian treasury. But what can His Lordship mean by saying that the natives of of India have never seriously complained? Does he mean that the clamorous uproar raised by Europeans in India in connection with the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill is the only way of making a serious complaint? Natives are not in the habit of making such unseemly exhibitions and are content to proclaim their grievances with due respect to the authorities. In the same humble way they have been complaining against the injustice done to them in regard to the Christian church establishment. Lord Kimberley ought not to wait for the receipt of any complaints, nor should he attach any weight to the opinion of European officers on the subject; he should duly consider the matter, and if he finds that injustice has been done he should boldly remove it. After praising Lord Ripon for doing what he could to remove the stain on the British administration, the Samáchár advises Natives not to be discouraged by Lord Kimberley's reply, but strongly recommends them to keep up the agitation on the subject until justice is done to them. [The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 15th May expresses similar sentiments, stating however that Christian religious instruction may be provided from the State treasury to the European soldiers and their officers, but not to the European civil population.]

Appointment of Mr. J. M. Maclean to the Indian Council.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 13th May is sorry that the London Times should have recommended the appointment of Mr. J. M. Maclean, late editor of the Bombay Gazette, to the vacancy created in the Indian Council by the retirement of Mr. Cassells. Mr. Maclean, while in India as also since his return to England, has shown himself to be an enemy of Natives, and if he goes into the Council he will not fail to do a vital injury to their interests by misleading the Secretary of State for India. Mr. Maclean says that he does not like to be appointed to the Council, as he desires to go into Parliament. He is welcome to try his luck once more, for Parliament contains numerous sensible Englishmen who will never allow his crotchets to succeed. His presence in the Indian Council will not fail to affect injuriously Native interests, and it is therefore to be hoped that his appointment will not be sanctioned.

Complains of the heavy military expenditure in India.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 11th May, in an article headed "Army expenditure in India," points out the injustice of imposing a regular heavy military expenditure for the 64,000 British troops the British Government have so arbitrarily foisted on the service of India since 1861, quotes the opinions of Mr. Fawcett, Sir Evelyn Baring and Mr. Knight, the veteran journalist, on the subject, refers to the additional one million sterling the revenues of India have had to bear beyond the ordinary military expenditure for the payment of the so-called "non-effective services," and remarks:—The Government of India could do nothing more than express its surprise at the magnitude of the claim so impudently made by the Horse Guards, protest against it and then pay the cheque drawn at sight by the British Chancellor of the Exchequer! What does the latter care who are affected by the demand? What are the voiceless 20 krors of subjects to the 3½ krors of the United Kingdom? So long as the treasury of India, which tried to scrape together a small surplus by "growing revenues" under this branch and that, could be filched and the fat treasury of England enriched to the tune of a million to delight the nation and her representatives in Parliament, there need be no grumbling. You may proclaim the injustice of the charge to the heavens and raise a thundering clamour, but to what effect? The monstrous iniquity of the system now in vogue will be clearly perceived from what follows. India is held liable for the portion of pension to which a British soldier is entitled so long as he remains in India! It is not enough that the British soldier is better fed, better clothed and everyway better taken care of than the miserably paid and comparatively neglected Native sepoy. He must be pensioned at the expense of India. It matters little whether the European soldier lands to-day and is obliged the next day or a week or month or year after to leave for England owing to sickness or other causes. He must be allowed pension from the revenues of India! Is this just? Is it equitable? India is first arbitrarily saddled with a European army against all the weight of eminent authorities on the subject,—an army which costs nearly a million sterling simply in transport service, which again in turn enables the Royal English navy to keep in commission a number of officers and men in active employ at the expense of this country (another very equitable arrangement indeed from the British point of view)! This army is maintained at a growing rate of expenditure, and not satisfied with all the money that is drawn away to England on that account something like 10 millions sterling—this very costly system of pensions is imposed on the revenues of India! The reader may ask whether under the old arrangement of a local European army a considerable portion of the expenditure now incurred on the European army in India might not have been saved to this unhappy country? The transfer of India to the Crown was expected to usher in an era of prosperity, a perfect millennium. Is it necessary to picture the actual condition it has placed us in? Is it surprising if the people, inclusive of the peasantry, bless the memory of the old Company Báhádur? What has been the net result of the abolition of the local European army? This question we must reserve for another occasion, as well as the larger but analogous question whether in the true interests of India it is not absolutely necessary, politically, financially and morally, to revert to the old system?

Says that Mr. Grant Duff has not proved himself a successful administrator.

The Subodh Patrika (14) of the 11th May says:—Probably few Governors in India have managed to become so unpopular in so short a time as Mr. Grant Duff has in Madras. The fault was not with any unusual difficulty of the situation, but with the temperament of Mr. Grant Duff himself. No doubt, when problems in administration of extraordinary difficulty crop up, or when a new policy is being inaugurated amid uncongenial surroundings or in unripe times, statesmen may fail. But an administrator ought surely to be able to show a practical cast of the mind, a capacity to take cool, statesmanlike views of things and rise above mere personalities in the ordinary affairs of administration. Mr. Grant Duff has not, we must say, always shown himself equal to the occasion in the discharge of his gubernatorial duties. Neither the European nor the Native community of Madras have much to say in his favour. Yet Mr. Grant Duff did not come to India innocent of its people, its condition or its affairs. He acted for a time as Under Secretary of State for India and thought that a flying visit which he paid to India some years ago had given him an insight into Indian affairs. His Parliamentary career also gave rise to great expectations. Not seldom, however, a change of surroundings or the nature of the work acts the true solvent and destroys many a political reputation. Sir Bartle Frere, for instance, carried a high repute for statesmanship from India, but wrecked it utterly in South Africa. In the same way Mr. Grant Duff was a good enough statesman in Parliament. In the practical affairs of administration, however, in India, he has blundered greatly and often. There is a difference between saying and doing or showing one's self to be the master in one set of duties and doing so in all. A genuine practical administrator is he who can well grasp the situation in which he finds himself, rise to the occasion and act as circumstances require.

Says that the experiment of establishing agricultural banks should be tried simultaneously in certain selected parts of the Deccan and Gujarát.

In an article headed "Agricultural Banks," the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 15th May says:—If the experiment is to be tried at all, we think it should be tried in two differently situated places, such as the Deccan and the Gujarát. Such a course will have the decided advantage of enabling both the Government and the public to compare notes and ascertain with tolerable accuracy the causes of the success or failure of the experiment in one or other of the two places. If the Government of India has not as yet come to any decision on this point, we hope it will take it into its early consideration and give the necessary sanction to the experiment being simultaneously tried in one of the tálukas of the Gujarát districts. The proposed scheme is after all an experiment, in whose favour much has to be said owing to the admitted success which has attended similar efforts in Europe, Australia and Egypt; and one may primâ facie assume that the experiment deserves an indulgent trial in India, unless it can be demonstrated that India is so differently circumstanced from the countries mentioned above that the success of such an experiment there does not afford any ground whatever for anticipating similar success here. The object that should be kept in view in starting this experiment ought to be to make it a success, if it could be made a success, by making reasonable concessions in its favour and interest. We confidently believe that some such desire must have actuated the Government of India in expressing its willingness to make the concessions sketched out in its despatch of the 5th December 1882 to the Government of Bombay on the subject of the proposed agricultural bank. The same desire ought to lead the Government of India to sanction a trial of the experiment in the Gujarát districts also. In the last but one paragraph of the despatch referred to above the Government of India says:—"As an experiment confined to a small area its failure can hardly lead to much harm; while, if it succeeds, it may prove of incalculable benefit to the whole country." In this view the Government of India attaches very great importance to it, and is willing to incur the pecuniary risk if the Government of Bombay will undertake the working of the measure. We believe the trial will not be complete or satisfactory unless the experiment is tried in two differently situated areas; for we repeat that the same considerations which have led the Government of India to sanction the trial of the experiment in the Deccan districts ought to lead it to sanction its simultaneous trial in the Gujarát districts. Even if the experiment should fail in both the areas no great harm will ensue, while experience of a very valuable kind will have been obtained. On the other hand if it succeeds it will assuredly lead to great changes in the fiscal relations of the money-lending class with the agricultural classes, and to various other changes. Again it should be remembered that if the experiment were tried in the Purandhar Táluka alone and if it failed, such a result from the special circumstances of the region in which the Purandhar Táluka is situated would not enable the Government or the public to draw any inference whatever; while if the experiment were tried in the Gujarát districts, and if it failed, such a result would afford sufficient grounds to conclude that the reform in question is unsuited to the conditions of this country. For these reasons we hope that the Government of India will consent to the experiment being tried simultaneously in two places.

Expresses a hope that one Native Judge will be always maintained on the bench of the Bombay High Court.

In an article headed "Tardy Justice," the same newspaper alludes to the elevation of Mr. Nánábhái Haridás to a permanent seat on the bench of the Bombay High Court, and says:—It is now fully half a century since on the occasion of renewing the charter of the East India Company in 1833 the British Parliament authoritatively declared that there shall be no governing caste in India, or in other words, that all appointments under Government would be bestowed without any regard to caste, colour or creed. In the Royal Proclamation of 1858 the same pledge was formally repeated. And though such have been the professions of the British Parliament and the Crown, yet the practice of those who have been responsible for the good government of India has been anything but in strict conformity with those professions. The authorities both in India and England have been always trying their utmost to postpone the fulfilment of these and similar pledges to as distant a date as possible, and it is in pursuance of such a practice that Mr. Nánábhái's claims to a seat on the bench of the Bombay High Court were hitherto systematically ignored. On the maxim, however, that better late than never, we congratulate the authorities on the happy selection they have made, and we only hope that once the ice has been broken care will hereafter be taken to always have at least one Native Judge on the bench of the Bombay High Court. On the bench of the Calcutta High Court there has always been one Native Judge, and we do not see any reason why the Bombay Presidency, which is surely not behind the Bengal Presidency in advancement and intelligence, should not have a Native Judge on the bench of its highest judicial tribunal. We feel confident that there is now no dearth of competent Native gentlemen in every way qualified to occupy a seat on the bench with credit alike to themselves and to Government. [Several Native papers express satisfaction with the appointment of Mr. Nánábhái Haridás as Judge of the High Court.]

Is glad that Mr. Nánábhái Haridás is confirmed as a permanent Judge on the local High Court bench.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 13th May is extremely glad that a telegram has been received from the Home Government confirming the appointment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Nánábhái Haridás as a permanent Judge of the Bombay High Court. After alluding to the great abilities and attainments of Mr. Nánábhái and the injustice done to him for a long number of years in making him move from the bench to the bar and vice versa, the Jáme expresses hearty thanks to Government for appointing a permanent Native Judge on the local High Court bench. [The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 14th and the Dátardun (91) and the Deshi Mitră (92) of the 15th May express similar sentiments.]

Strongly objects to the re-enactment of the defunct Cotton Frauds Act.

The Subodh Patrika (14) of the 11th May says:—We are somewhat concerned to learn that some European merchants think of applying to Government for the re-introduction of the Cotton Frauds Act. We hope, however, that Government will not play fast and loose with passing and repassing, at the beck of any number of interested gentlemen, Acts of such a repressive character as the late Cotton Frauds Act. Caveat emptor is a maxim generally accepted. There is no reason why it should be discarded in the case of cotton. A Cotton Frauds Act may well in course of time lead to a Wheat Frauds Act, who knows? There is no saying what interested parties will not ask for when their demands are easily complied with. Moreover, fraudulent dealing with purchasers is not the peculiar vice of India. Civilized England also knows how to weigh cloth with size and mark false lengths on it. Would anybody think of stopping this practice by legislation? In India, however, no measure is deemed too repressive. The people, it is thought, still require to be guided by leading strings to commercial honesty and fair dealing. Government, however, gave the late Cotton Frauds Act a sufficiently long trial, and it was not without good reasons that it was at length repealed in 1882. We hope Government will not compromise its dignity in the eyes of the people by re-enacting a measure which after mature deliberation it once abandoned.

Disapproves of the re-introduction of the Cotton Frauds Act into the Bombay Presidency.

The Native Opinion (10) of the 11th May says:—It is curious to observe that the local Trades' Association is about to go in for the re-introduction of the Cotton Frauds Act into the Presidency. What the possible grounds of such a requisition may be it is not easy to see. There is no American war now to cause a demand for Indian cotton and the consequent adulteration. Both the American and Indian trade in cotton seems to be steady; no complaints seem to have been made, nor prosecutions on the score of adulteration; and yet there is agitation regarding its revival. It is stated that the discussion on this point at the meeting was strictly private. If there be strong grounds for the revival of the Act, then why such privacy? Let the public be satisfied on the point and then no one will raise any objection to the measure.

Condemns the rigorous nature of the forest laws.

In a paragraph headed "The Forest Laws," the Din Bandhu (5) of the 11th May says:—Our contemporary the Times of India has laid the poor people of this country under infinite obligations by fairly advocating their cause. It seems that the poor people have from time immemorial been denuding the forest trees for some purposes of their own and turning them to best account. Of course to a certain extent the trees are means of subsistence to them, but because they are so Government should not impose any restrictions is certainly unquestionable. There is no doubt that the trees are the property of Government, who are mábáp of the rayats, and therefore leniency ought to be exercised towards the subjects. Perhaps it would not be amiss to say that there is no rule more unjust in principle and incidence, and we hope Government will consider the subject. It is also true that the laws are not so stringent, but that the officers who are entrusted with their administration are sometimes more exacting. However it is now high time that something should be done in the matter, and we have no doubt that our kind Government will not fail to redress the grievances of the people. Let us hope that the complaints now made will be a thing of the past.

Expresses a hope that Government will reduce the fees charged in the Bombay Small Causes Court.

In alluding to the Government resolution on the annual report of the Bombay Court of Small Causes, the Subodh Patrika (14) of the 11th May observes:—Government has made a profit during 1883 of 2 lákhs of rupees and odd out of the local Small Cause Court. What an argument have we here for a reduction of the fees on plaints, summonses and processes? It is bad enough to fix these fees so high as to make the courts pay their own way, but to push them high enough to earn a profit therefrom is monstrous. Courts are not like railways or other public works which the State undertakes because private persons cannot on the same scale and with the same advantage as Government. Their establishment and maintenance is one of the first duties of Government, and it is an ignoring of those duties when they are turned into a source of revenue. We hope Government will note this fact and see their way to reducing the fees charged in the local Small Cause Court and thus considerably increase its present usefulness.

Says that the Government contribution on account of the Bombay police charges should be increased.

In alluding to the resolution of the Bengal Government for increasing the Government contribution to the police charges of Calcutta in order to afford some relief to the Municipal Corporation of that city, the Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 11th May observes that the action of the Bengal Government is such as the Bombay Government would do well to imitate. The Bombay Municipality should also not allow the present opportunity to pass without pressing on the attention of the authorities the propriety of making some concession to it in the matter of the local police charges. It is true that the question of the police charges of this city forms the subject of certain important negotiations now going on between the Government and the municipality. It is also true that these negotiations are so far advanced that the consideration of the question of making a fresh concession in favour of the latter, such as that just made at Calcutta, would render necessary for both the parties to undergo the trouble of recasting much of the scheme relating to the said negotiations. But that ought not to be an excuse for either the Government or the municipality to shirk doing what is fair and desirable for the rate-payers of Bombay. The Bombay Municipality has already some long-standing claims on the Government for a favourable consideration of the application for a more liberal grant. Those claims, along with the action now being taken by the Government to involve this city in fresh heavy expenditure on account of the new sewerage system, for other than mere local considerations, ought to induce it to view more favourably than hitherto what is due to the Bombay Municipality.

Is sorry that Mr. Adarji Jivanji, the Huzur Deputy Collector of Surat, has been undeservedly punished.

The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 11th May observes that Mr. White, the Collector of Surat, and his Huzur Deputy, Mr. Adarji Jivanji, have been censured in connection with the recent discovery of a fraud in the distillery at that station. They were charged with having failed to exercise sufficient supervision over the distillery, and for this fault Mr. Adarji has been transferred to the Panch Mahâls, while Mr. White is allowed to remain at Surat. After praising Mr. Adarji highly for the conscientious discharge of his duties, the Mitră remarks that the fraud was discovered four or five months after he came to Surat, and he had therefore not sufficient time to look carefully into the working of the distillery. The evidence given by the discoverers of the fraud shows that the deception was carried on for a long time before Mr. Adarji came to Surat. Mr. White has been long at Surat, and it was his duty to personally supervise the distillery. He failed to discharge this duty and therefore deserves severe censure, and yet he has escaped with a slight blame. [The Deshi Mitră (92) of the 15th May and a correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 12th May and a correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 13th May express similar sentiments.]

Remarks on the land revenue settlement of certain villages in the Supa Táluka of the Kánara District.

In a paragraph headed "Revenue Survey and Assessment," the Native Opinion (10) of the 11th May says:—It appears from a resolution just published that a number of villages in the Supa Peta in the Kánara District has just been resettled. The resolution congratulates the Survey Department on its having secured for Government an increase of 72·6 per cent., or an increase of Rs. 4,474 over last year's revenue. One of the alleged reasons for this increase is the increase of cultivable land now secured. Mark the word cultivable! We would fain ask how land that was waste on the occasion of the last settlement has come to be cultivable now. It is not impossible the outlay of labour and capital has been conveniently ignored. Until a satisfactory explanation is forthcoming, the measure seems rather in favour of the Government treasury than in that of the ryot.

Complains of the enhancement of the tax on cocoanut trees in the Ratnágiri District.

The Satyă Shodhak (59) of the 11th May complains that the tax on cocoanut trees in the Ratnágiri District, which was levied at the rate of Rs. 4 for each tree, has this year been raised to 5 rupees per tree. The Saytă Shodhak is unable to understand the reasons which have led Government to enhance the rate of this impost. The condition of the toddy-drawers is as bad as possible, and hence the enhancement of the tax is most inopportune and unjust. The Satyă Shodhak trusts that Government and the authorities of the A'bkári Department will take pity on the drawers of toddy and reduce the tax much below what it was last year.

Approves of the scheme for the employment of pensioned Native soldiers as peons in military offices and suggests their employment in civil offices also.

In an article headed "Discharged Native Soldiers," the Indu Prakásh (9) of the 12th May refers to the scheme for the employment of discharged Native soldiers as peons and says:—The result of the employment of a discharged sepoy as a peon will be not only to secure to him sufficient means of subsistence for himself and his family on his retirement from the army, but to save him from the dulness of an obscure and idle life to which the pension list at present drives him. The well-regulated discipline of a military life inures him to active exertion, and when he is suddenly drawn away from it and is compelled to retire to his ancestral village, he sinks into idleness in spite of himself. One evil consequence of this perhaps is that he dies earlier than he should have if he had continued in the army or in an equally active sphere of usefulness. The sepoy of course does, like everyone else, look at the beginning of his military life to the day when after having served out his period he will be able to retire on a modest pension and spend his old age in peace and quiet. But when the expectation is realised and the day of retirement comes he experiences a different feeling. That feeling may not be universal; but a slight acquaintance with a discharged sepoy would show that it is general. The scheme which has now been proposed and is already being worked out has been, we note, confined to the military offices, and so far it will have but a limited scope. Should it be extended to the civil offices also? This raises a question which, it may be supposed, cannot be easily answered. If the offices of peons in the numerous civil offices of the Government were bestowed on discharged members of the army, what is to become of that still larger class from which those now serving as peons in these offices are generally drawn? The reply to this would be that there is no fear of the number of discharged sepoys equalling the number of peons in the civil offices. After the military offices have availed themselves of the number needed for their wants a comparatively small number of such persons will be left. Moreover, civil offices would gain considerably by the employment of discharged sepoys as peons. These sepoys are likely to prove more active and efficient than those who have not been bred up in the discipline of a regiment; and the inducement to enter an army is likely to increase among the classes from which both the present peons and sepoys are drawn. One cannot speak of this with certainty; and we should be sorry to see it invariably insisted upon that a peon in a civil office should be necessarily a discharged soldier. But if the scheme is worked out with discretion the present peons will not suffer and the gain to the discharged soldier will be great. Besides the civil offices there are private offices which would do well to support, as far as possible, the scheme initiated by Colonel Rivett-Carnac and supported by General Hardinge and the other Commanders-in-Chief. If these co-operate with the military officers heartily, the Native army will gradually become a popular institution and the efficiency of peons will be improved. [The Military Instructor (131) of the 11th May refers to the scheme and praises General Hardinge for his anxiety for the welfare of the Native army.]

Observes that walking on the esplanade in Bombay during night has become dangerous.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 17th May states on the authority of a correspondent that at midnight on Saturday last, while the latter accompanied by his two friends was returning home from a Native theatrical performance, they heard when near the Gokuldás Tejpál Hospital a cry for a policeman in the direction of the big lamp post. On approaching the post they saw a Mahomedan whose head was broken and blood was flowing from the wound, and by his side stood a Mahomedan woman crying piteously. The man told the policeman who had come to their help that while he and his wife were walking on the esplanade three men, who appeared to be privates in the Marine Battalion, tried to carry off his wife, and on his opposing them they broke his head with a stick and ran away. The policeman scolded the man for taking his wife with him at so late an hour on the esplanade, and was preparing to take the man to the Gokuldás Hospital. The Jáme requests the Commissioner of Police to enquire into the matter, and observes that strolling on the esplanade at night has become dangerous.

Inefficiency of the Kaira police.

The Kaira Vartamán (103) of the 14th May refers to the offer of a reward of Rs. 100 made by the Superintendent of the Kaira District Police for the apprehension of the murderer of one Parshotam Vanmáli and says that crime is day by day increasing in the Kaira District. The police ought now to be active. The perpetrators of not even one of the many cases of plunder that occurred last year on the Kaira and Mehmadabad roads have been apprehended nor the stolen property recovered. This inability to discover robbers gives encouragement as it were to them to pursue their nefarious trade.

Railways.

Complains that there is no fencing by the sides of the Rájputána-Málwa State Railway.

The Poona Vaibhav (51) of the 11th May complains that there is no fencing by the sides of the Rájputána-Málwa State Railway. It is to be regretted that so much time should have been allowed to elapse without erecting fences. If a private railway company or a guaranteed railway company were to omit to erect fencing by the sides of its railway line, Government would at once direct it to construct fencing without delay and would take steps to see that its orders are carried out. This being so, it is unaccountable that Government should act with remissness in the case of railway lines which are under its own management. If a cattle is found straying on the Rájputána-Málwa Railway line and is killed by the shock of an engine, the owner of the cattle is fined or punished in other ways. The Vaibhav is surprised that the owners of cattle which are found straying on this line should be punished when Government has omitted to erect fencing by its sides and when in the case of private and guaranteed companies it insists upon their erecting fencing by the sides of their railway lines. It would seem as if might was right under British rule.

Municipalities.

Requests the Bombay Government to issue a resolution giving instructions to the district officers and explanation to the public regarding the working of the new Municipal Act.

The Mahrátta (2) of the 11th May, in an article headed "The New Municipal Act," observes:—When the Act of 1873 was passed very valuable instructions were given by Government to its officers, and the benefits of it have been seen in the care and caution with which the conservancy chapter of the principal Act has been enforced. The District Municipal Act of 1873 has been introduced in no less than 164 towns, and by this time city improvements have been effected to a great extent and people have begun to know what municipal government is like. But we must state that the working has not been quite satisfactory, especially for the high-handed conduct and autrocratic tendencies of the official presidents. Instances of such wanton conduct have been too many, but we cannot lose sight of the two that have come to our knowledge within the last few days. We need not state that we refer to Surat and Sholápur. The official presidents in these municipalities full well know that circumstances have changed a good deal, that people have commenced to understand their rights better, and that the number of uneducated commissioners is becoming less every day; and yet they do not in the least adapt themselves to circumstances. The necessity of issuing similar instructions, therefore, is not the less now. This time it is, on the contrary, greater, especially as the control sections have been retained without a single modification. The necessity becomes still greater when we remember the fact that by the elections men of independent spirit, sound education and practical common sense are sure to come in, and they would never like to be led by the nose either by the official Collector or his aide-de-camp the Magistrate. Any insult to their dignity, any official hobby prejudicial to the interests they represent, and finally any piece of official autocracy will at once be resented and then Vijayarághava Charya's case will be repeated almost in every zilla town. We therefore pray that a resolution giving clear instructions to the district officers and advice to the representatives of the people should be issued at an early date. The resolution should contain definite instructions on the following points:—Section 15 provides that no person who has been convicted by any criminal court of an offence which may not be lawfully compounded, such conviction not having been subsequently reversed or quashed, may be a municipal commissioner. The term "which may not lawfully be compounded" is rather too vague; besides such offences as causing obstruction, committing a nuisance, or in general terms such actions as are punishable under the Municipal Act, are included in the class of non-compoundable offences. Men who are fined by Magistrates are also incapacitated from voting. The intention of the Legislature, so far as it appears from the proceedings, was to exclude persons convicted of offences bringing upon them moral turpitude. A child goes into the public streets and eases. The owner of the house is hauled up before a magistrate and fined. Is this man ineligible? If he is, then the magistrates and the municipal inspectors will be a terror to the people, and the latter especially will possess very large powers of incapacitating persons for the office of municipal commissioner. By section 25 the president has the power of delegating duties to the vice-president. The resolution should clearly state what powers must be and what may be delegated. Again clause 7 of the 27th section has left the power of bringing forward any business before a meeting to the president.

We are constrained to say that this power in the hands of a president that can go on with business, although seven elected commissioners may have left the room, is certainly too much. There are many such points of detail and it is no use going into them here. The executive Government, if it is well disposed, knows such matters too well. The new Act brings municipal bodies into closer contact with two or three departments of Government and with rural boards. It is necessary in the interests of all parties concerned that their relations should be defined, and in doing so the municipal bodies ought to be freely consulted. The Collectors should be instructed to treat the new boards with friendly feelings and to exercise their powers of control on as few occasions as possible, in fact when other means of correction have signally failed. If all these precautions be taken, there appears to be no reason why the scheme should not succeed.

Requests Government to postpone the introduction of the Bombay Local Self-government Bills till the next fair season and gives reasons.

In an article headed "The Local Self-government Scheme," the Dnyán Prakásh (8) of the 12th May alludes to the Bombay Local Self-government Bills having received the assent of the Governor General of India, and says:—No two legislative measures have been so fully, widely and intelligently discussed by the public and its representatives as these two measures. And as a natural consequence of such activity the actual enforcement of these two measures is awaited with keen interest and lively impatience. We learn that in most of the tálukas the lists of qualified voters and of persons eligible as members of the táluka local boards are ready for publication. The number of voters in most of the tálukas is respectable and in some cases very large; but, what is more to the purpose, this number has been secured without lowering the minimum qualification of Rs. 48 of the land revenue assessment, though the law empowers Government to lower the minimum whenever it may be necessary to do so. We are told that there are some tálukas in which the electoral body will consist of nearly one thousand persons, while in others, such as the Haveli Táluka of this district, it will even exceed that number. We are further told that the number of tálukas in which the minimum will have to be lowered with a view to obtain a sufficiently respectable electoral body will be small. These tálukas will, we believe, principally belong to the Konkan districts. So far as regards the rural boards. As regards the municipal boards no such information is as yet available to us. We think the minimum limits will be varying to suit the circumstances of each particular municipal district or area. There is however one point to which we desire to speedily draw the attention of the Bombay Government to-day. That point has reference to the time of the introduction of these legislative measures. We are now on the eve of the commencement of the monsoon or rainy season, when the people in rural areas will be engaged in their agricultural pursuits. Now suppose that the lists of rural voters, which are almost ready for publication, will be published by the end of the current month; then at least two months must elapse since the said publication before the date for the elections is fixed. Such a procedure is absolutely necessary when we read section 21 of the Local Boards Act. Under such circumstances the elections cannot take place before at least the middle of August. Now everyone will, we believe, admit that August or September is a very inconvenient season for holding general elections for the rural boards. Moreover it will not be an initial difficulty only but of a permanent character, for at every recurring period of general elections every three years the same difficulty will arise. We think it therefore advisable that the date of the introduction of these measures should be postponed till the end of the monsoon and the commencement of the fair season, when there will be this additional advantage that the district and subdivisional officers will be out into the districts, and when they will be able to watch these initial operations with all necessary diligence and attention. The same considerations apply with more or less equal force to the case of municipal boards also. For these reasons we think that the Bombay Government would do well to act upon the above suggestion and postpone the introduction of these two legislative measures till the next fair season. The interval may also be profitably employed in maturing all future arrangements with great care, so that there may be no hitch afterwards.

Suggests the transfer of Mr. White from the Surat Collectorship.

The Gujaráti (97) of the 11th May, in an article headed "Removal of Mr. White from Surat," observes:—How long will Mr. White, who is more arbitrary than the Czar of Russia and who insults the orders of the Supreme Government, continue at Surat? The people of Surat are displeased with him and the so-called well-wishers of Natives who have been nominated members of the board by Government act in accordance with his wishes. We are very sorry that Ráo Báhádur Jagjivandás should not in the least act independently. Mr. White is day by day growing more arbitrary. He insults the Native members. He thereby insults the Viceroy and the Native public of India, and the results of such treatment will be very bad. We do not think that a president now possesses the right of thus insulting the commissioners, since the business must now be conducted according to the wishes of the members. We do not think that Mr. White will soon leave off his haughtiness. It is not good that business should thus be obstructed. The Bombay Government ought to take due notice of the affair. We hope that for the good of the Surat public Mr. White will be transferred from that city. By the advent of another officer the uneasiness created in the minds of the people of Surat will disappear and the business of the local municipality will be properly managed.

Disapproves of the prohibition against giving caste feasts at Ahmedabad.

The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 15th May disapproves of the notification issued by the local municipality for the prevention of caste feasts, and says that sensible men and those acquainted with the law will not in the least care for the notification, for it is illegal, thoughtless and opposed to morality and justice, and no judge will enforce it. Persons acquainted with law will give feasts at their houses or gardens, but those who are unacquainted with the law and are timid will go a great distance beyond the confines of the city and there give feasts. As people will go there to dine in the heat of the sun they will thereby become more liable to catch cholera. The notification has increased the public danger. If fears were entertained for the appearance and spread of cholera, the municipality ought to have asked for a deposit of money from the persons giving feasts in proportion to the number of guests and spent the money thus received on keeping the places clean. The municipality ought to reconsider its resolution, remove the prohibition against giving large feasts, and take due measures for preserving cleanliness in those places where feasts are given. [The Samsher Báhádur (112) of the 16th May refers to the notification and says that the agriculturists of the Lehuva caste will give feasts outside the city, as marriages are being celebrated among them now. It would be advisable to permit them to give feasts in the city, for there is more danger in people going out of the city to dine in these hot days.]

Native States.

Censures the British Government for calling upon the Native princes to pay the expenses of the salutes fired in their honour.

The Jáme Jamshed (101) of the 12th May observes that the British Government not only confers empty honours and titles on the Native princes, but calls upon them to pay the expenses of the salutes that are fired in their honour whenever they visit British territory. It is highly derogatory to the greatness of the British empire that such a call should be made. If the Native princes are to be made to pay the expenses of the salutes they receive, why should Governors of Presidencies and their Councillors, who receive similar honours, not be asked to pay the cost of the salutes they receive from their own pockets? It is highly objectionable that Government should act so meanly towards Native princes, and it is therefore to be hoped that nothing of the kind will be done in future. [The Deshi Mitră (92) of the 15th May expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that Major Nutt has advanced his favourites in the service of the Gondal tate without due cause.

The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 11th January observes that Mr. Jayáshankar, the late Native Joint-Administrator of Gondal, was a weak-minded official. He gave in to Major Nutt in a certain case though he held an opinion contrary to that entertained by the latter. Major Nutt passed a decision depriving the Gondal State of all authority on the lands of Chanduri Ughalávdar set apart for charitable purposes, and declared that they should be held by the Girásias. Mr. Jayáshankar differed from this decision and refused to sign it as Joint-Administrator. On pressure being put by Major Nutt he signed it "under protest," but on being threatened by the same officer he erased the words "under protest" and signed the document as if he had no objection whatever to it. On the Thákor of Gondal taking charge of his State the services of the Native Joint-Administrator were dispensed with, but Major Nutt in gratitude for the pliancy of Mr. Jayáshankar obtained the permission of the Political Agent of Káthiáwár and the Governor of Bombay to appoint Mr. Jayáshankar as a treasury officer of the State on the large salary of Rs. 600 per month, though there was no need for creating the new post. There is not a single State in the province the treasury officer of which receives so large a salary. The Revenue Commissioner of the State has served long and rendered useful services, and yet he has been asked to resign his post. Major Nutt is given to promote his favourites at the cost of the State. In February last he brought a clerk from Alwár, who was in receipt of 60 rupees a month, as acting Munsif on a salary of Rs. 150, though the permanent incumbent received the same pay. The clerk is now engaged permanently in an altogether new appointment. A Christian magician was employed in February last as municipal secretary on a salary of Rs. 50 and has been recently promoted to Rs. 75 on some plea.

Complains that the Thákor of Rájkot oppresses his subjects.

The same newspaper complains that the Thákor of Rájkot practises oppression on his subjects. He ordered the construction of new roads, but has not paid sufficient compensation to the persons whose lands were taken. He mulcted some persons of large sums of money because they offered to stand securities for some of their relations or castemen. He had a certain man and woman incarcerated because they were discovered conversing on a public road, though the passers by assured the police that they were a married couple. It is said that a short time ago two money-lenders of Rájkot went to the Thákor for the purpose of standing security in some case. They had committed no crime, and yet they were severely maltreated and mulcted, one in the sum of Rs. 2,000 and the other in Rs. 500. A late student of the Madras Agricultural College was retained by the Thákor in his service. He fell under some suspicion and was therefore imprisoned, and in order to make his imprisonment as long as possible his case is tried slowly and leisurely at the instigation of the Thákor.

Grant of land by the Junágad State to Mr. Sulemán, who mercilessly slaughtered the Maiyás on the Kenada Hill.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (97) of the 11th May says that the poor Maiyás have not yet seen the end of the oppression exercised over them. They have lost both men and money. It is extraordinary that the Bombay Government should know the pitiful and wretched condition of the Maiyás and of their families and should still feel no compassion for them. What has the Commission appointed to enquire into the grievances of the Maiyás done? Their state has not in any way improved. They have been ordered to pay Rs. 8,300, though Rs. 12,000 were demanded at first. The reasons for the payment of this tax cannot at once be made out. When the Bombay Government is bent upon opposing the Maiyás, justice will not be done to them. The Maiyás are now quite in despair. They have again been burdened with a tax of about Rs. 20 for every sánthi of land. Who is to help the poor? Though the Supreme Government severely reprimanded Mr. Sulemán, the Commander-in-Chief of the Junágad army, who mercilessly slaughtered 74 helpless Maiyás on the Kenada Hill, the Junágad State has, it is said, presented him with fifteen sánthis of land for this heroic deed. If this be true, the Junágad State has shown that the massacre of the Maiyás was a commendable deed and that the Viceroy injudiciously reprimanded Mr. Sulemán. It is a fine instance of the arbitrary action of Native States when the Local Government is favourably inclined towards them.

Berár Affairs.

Discusses the question of the exclusion of Natives from volunteer corps.

The Pramod Sindhu (12) of the 12th May, in an article headed "Volunteer Corps on Caste System," says:—Of late volunteer corps are being formed and disciplined in almost every part of Hindustan. The most characteristic feature of the measure is the rigid exclusion from them of the sons of the soil. We have thought and thought upon the sectional character, but have failed to discover a single justification for it. The exclusion does not seem to be either reasonable or politic, but on the contrary it is both absurdly illogical and highly impolitic. In the first place there was no necessity, because when the Government passed the Arms Act it was alleged that while the standing army at the command of Government was large and efficient enough to take care of the country at large against internal eruptions and extraneous attacks there was no reason why the civil population should be allowed to bear arms—a reason which the subsequent actions of Government have proved to be only invented to justify the measure for the time but in reality a cover to the real motives. But if there has since arisen any real necessity for the formation of volunteer corps there was no reason whatever for making therein a caste distinction in favour of an insignificant section of Europeans, Eurasians and their remote ramifications wearing coats and hats, but against the millions of Her Majesty's other subject races who for want of coats and hats are not the less loyal or the less interested in such a national movement as the establishment of volunteer corps or the less worthy to the honour of standing in the defence of their country in case their help be necessary. Nothing is so plain as the fact that none are more concerned and more interested than the Natives themselves in the safety of their own country and in the stability of the existing Government, for which they are as thankful as they are grateful. But the ways of our Government in dealing with the people in general in some matters look so peculiar and inconsistent as to shake, we think unnecessarily, the popular faith in their professions and declarations as regards general policy. Our Government have declared and pledged themselves a hundred times over to treat the subject people equally without distinctions founded upon colour or creed. But still they will make one law for the gora people and another for the kála people while enjoying a laugh at the expense of our Manus and Yájnyavalkyas and spending a most virtuous indignation at the ancient law-givers for making a distinction between a Bráhman criminal and a low-caste criminal. It can at any rate be said in favour of our ancient law-givers that they were most honest, preferring to own what they did rather than otherwise. We really do not understand the policy of Government in excluding Natives from the volunteer corps. The exclusion cannot be explained otherwise than on the assumption that the Government do not desire to revive the martial spirit of Natives or to trust them with any offensive or defensive weapons. But such a supposition would be very inconsistent, because the Government do trust the seven-rupee sepoys who form over two-thirds of the standing army in Hindustan. If then a mercenary sepoy on Rs. 7 a month could be trusted, a gentleman ought to be more so. As a rule the Native volunteer corps, if formed, will essentially be composed of men of position and education. Poor persons and persons of low status or caste could not and would not care to join such a corps for mere pleasure's sake. Some time ago a large number of Native gentlemen of this town submitted an application to the Resident to be permitted to join the existing Berár Volunteer Corps or to form a separate corps by themselves. But, as expected, Mr. Jones, the then Resident, returned an evasive reply and of course the matter dropped. We very much regretted the decision. We think the Government cannot refuse to Native gentlemen what is granted to all sorts of Europeans and Eurasians without exposing themselves to the charge of an open race partiality and thereby seeming to favour one section of the community at the expense of another—a policy opposed to the theory and practice of British Government in India and entirely at variance to the reiterated promises and pledges contained in the proclamation of 1858. At present any Christian could be a member, yet however highly respected and educated a Native may be he cannot be so simply because he is a Native. We see that Pársis could enlist themselves as volunteers in the local volunteer corps. How a Pársi could be eligible it is beyond our power to tell.

Is it because he has been aping the European manners and customs more systematically and persistently than other Natives have thought fit to do? Of course he can wear hat and coat and mix with Christians. Are we to understand that qualifications for membership consist of hat and coat? We think that the Government ought to give, and give with grace, to the people what cannot be very long withheld from them. Do the Government really think that by making such invidious distinctions they do not wound the feelings of Natives, or that to create such a feeling or to allow it to exist is in any way an advantage to them? We take leave to say that this is just what it should not be. The disparaging distinction is the more felt and the Arms Act theory rendered the more absurd when Natives find that they are taxed to supply arms and ammunition to foreign volunteers from whose ranks they are scrupulously excluded. Could our rulers be forgetful that Natives are men and have feelings just as any other men? The Government have educated and are still educating their subject people in the western civilization. Will not that very education make the recipients feel the more sensitive as regards right and wrong, justice and injustice? Will the evasive answers and subterfuges always satisfy the growing ambition and intelligence of the now educated portion of the people, who naturally wish to take a proper share in the administration of the country and enjoy an equal freedom of action and thought, and equality of rights and privileges with any other subject race? If the Government be under the misimpression that educated people should not be trusted we would beg that the impression be dispelled at once as groundless and unjust. We assure our Government that education cannot make and has not made men worse for it but all the contrary. They are grateful for the education they have received and the privileges they enjoy; they are sensible of the general security of life and property which the present Government have assured and of the other benefits bestowed upon them. The sense of these advantages cannot but make them, as they really are, the most loyal and law-abiding people. We think that by removing the distinction the Government would be gainer, and we earnestly ask the present Resident for the reconsideration of orders on the subject.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
20th May 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Complaint regarding the enhancement of the tax on cocoanut trees in the Ratnágiri District 11
Administration of Mr. Grant Duff: Expression of opinion that Mr. Grant Duff has not proved himself a successful administrator... ... 7
Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
  Advice to the British Government to adopt effective measures for thwarting Russian designs on India and suggestions for improving the armies of Native States 3
  Expression of opinion that if the natives of India are kept contented the British Government will be able to defy Russia with their aid 3
  Expression of opinion that the British Government ought to make active and extensive preparations for thwarting the designs of Russia on India 4
  Expression of opinion that General Skobeleff's plan for the invasion of India is impracticable 5
  Remarks in connection with the— 3
Agricultural banks: Expression of opinion that the experiment of establishing —should be tried simultaneously in certain selected parts of the Deccan and Gujarát 8
Appointments:
  Expression of joy at the appointment of Mr. Nánábhái Haridás as a permanent Judge on the Bombay High Court bench ... 9
  Expression of a hope that one Native Judge will be always maintained on the bench of the Bombay High Court 8
Bombay Small Causes Court: Expression of a hope that Government will reduce the fees charged in the— 10
Civil Service of India: Rejection of Lord Lytton's explanation about his arrangements for the admission of Natives into the Covenanted— ... 5
Cotton Frauds Act:
  Disapproval of the re-introduction of the — into the Bombay Presidency 9
  Strong objection to the re-enactment of the defunct— 9
Disestablishment of the Christian church in India: Disapproval of the decision of the Secretary of State for India on the question of the—. 6
Employment of pensioned Native soldiers as peons in military offices:
  Approval of the scheme for the —and suggestion for their employment in civil offices... 11
Forest laws: Condemnation of the rigorous nature of the — ... 10
Indian Council: Expression of a wish that Mr. J. M. Maclean should not be appointed to the— 6
Land Revenue Settlement: Remarks on the — of certain villages in the Supa Táluka of the Kánara District 11
Military expenditure in India: Complaint regarding the heavy— ... 6
Police:
  Expression of opinion that the Government contribution on account of the Bombay — charges should be increased 10
  Expression of opinion that walking on the esplanade in Bombay at night has become dangerous 12
  Inefficiency of the Kaira— 12
Public Service: Expression of regret at Mr. Adarji Jivanji, the Huzur Deputy Collector of Surat, being undeservedly punished ... 11

PART II.—Railways—

Rájputána-Málwa State Railway: Want of fencing by the sides of the—. 12

PART III.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Disapproval of the prohibition against giving caste feasts at— 15
Bombay Local Self-government Bills: Request to Government to postpone the introduction of the — till the next fair season and a statement of reasons for so doing 14
New Municipal Act: Request to the Bombay Government to issue a resolution giving instructions to the district officers and explanation to the public regarding the working of the— 13
Surat: Suggestion for transferring Mr. White from the — Collectorship... 15

Page.

Part IV.—Native States—

Gondal: Statement that Major Nutt has advanced his favourites in the service of the — State without due cause 15
Junágad: Grant of land by the — State to Mr. Sulemán, who mercilessly slaughtered the Maiyás on the Kenada Hill 16
Native princes: Censure on the British Government for calling upon the — to pay the expenses of the salutes fired in their honour ... 15
Rájkot: Complaint that the Thákor of — oppresses his subjects ... 16

Part V.—Berár Affairs—

Exclusion of Natives from Volunteer Corps: Discussion of the question of the— 17

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R
For the Week ending 24th May 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
*5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
16	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
17	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
18	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
19	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
20	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
21	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
24	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*25	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
26	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
27	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
28	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
29	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
30	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
31	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
32	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
33	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
34	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
35	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*36	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*37	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
38	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
39	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
40	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
41	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
42	„ Mahárashtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
43	„ Mahárashtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
44	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
45	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*46	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
47	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
48	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
49	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*50	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
51	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*52	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*53	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*54	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
55	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Do.	600
56	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
57	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
58	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
59	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*60	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
61	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*62	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
63	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
64	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
65	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

C. R. 367
DIA OFFICE
3 JUN 1884
CON 165

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*66	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
67	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
68	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
69	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
70	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*71	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
72	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*73	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*74	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
75	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*76	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
77	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
78	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
79	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
80	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
81	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
82	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
83	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
84	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*85	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
86	„ Bombay Punch	Bombay	Weekly	500
87	„ Bombay Samáchár	Do.	Daily	1,090
88	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
89	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
90	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
91	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
92	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
93	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
94	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
95	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
96	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*97	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
98	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*99	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
100	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
101	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
102	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*103	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
104	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
105	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
106	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
107	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
108	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
109	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
110	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
111	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*112	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
*113	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	200
114	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*115	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
116	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*117	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
*118	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
119	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
120	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
121	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
122	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
123	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*124	, Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
125	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*126	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*127	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*128	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
129	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
130	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*131	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Reflections on the miseries resulting from British rule.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th May says:—Writing about the material condition of India, a contemporary suggests that it is more prosperous than under previous rule, and that the best way to prove this is to compare India with Persia or another Asiatic State. Taking Persia, we must say that on the whole India is infinitely better off under the British. But then, so far as material prosperity goes, Persia has no home charges to remit to a foreign country,—no pensions, no annuities and other heavy items to go out annually, never to return in any shape. India is happy enough under England's protection, and she will need the protection for a very long time so far as the eye of wisdom can reach. But her happiness is of a negative character, so to say: the happiness of a cripple, who sees but has not the means of enjoying it. India's cup of honey may be full, but there is that drop of poison in the shape of a perpetual drain which embitters the sweet to an extent that the patient alone can feel. One may wax ever so eloquent on the blessings of peace, education, freedom and so on; but these words pass unheeded by the wretch who finds life scarcely worth living, so fearful is the daily struggle to keep body and soul together.

Complains of the increasing poverty of India and advises England to curtail her demands and reduce the public expenditure.

The Sind Times (5) of the 20th May, in an article headed "The Poverty of India," refers to the controversy going on between the Pioneer and the Indian Mirror newspapers regarding the merits and demerits of British rule in India, tries to show that the excess of exports over imports in the case of India is equivalent to an annual plunder by a foreign invader or an annual subsidy to a foreign foe, denies that the analogy of America is applicable to this country in this respect, and observes:—Thus then India during 1882-83 paid a tribute of no less than 45 millions to England, and the drain in 1883-84 will be at least the same, if not more. It is estimated that the spoliation of India by Nádir Sháh did not exceed £32,000,000. That spoliation did not recur every year, while now India has to pay about 45 millions annually to England. No wonder that an entire fifth of the Indian population, to quote Dr. Hunter, "go through life on insufficient food." That India is poor cannot therefore be denied. That her poverty is due to this annual depletion of her resources cannot be gainsaid. That this depletion of her resources means misery can only be controverted by paradoxical doctrinaires. It may be that the Indian people were equally miserable under Native or Mahomedan rule, but on that precedent Englishmen do not wish to rely. It is true that poverty is only one of the factors which go to make a people unhappy. It may be that the remaining factors are wanting in British rule. The British administration has its redeeming feature no doubt. But its best well-wishers cannot but look with dismay on the financial drain to which it has subjected India. If it is the mission of England to bring peace and happiness to India, she cannot do better than look to the ugly fact of her dependency's increasing poverty in the face, curtail her demands, reduce expenditure, and in time heal the wounds which threaten to bleed her to death.

Says that the excess of exports over imports in the foreign trade of India is no indication that the labouring population is becoming richer.

In an article headed "India's Foreign Trade, 1883-84," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th May says:—In 1882-83 the excess of exports over imports stood at Rs. 20,92,55,260; this year it stood at Rs. 23,45,01,931. If we add this excess in 1883-84 to the aggregate of the excesses during the ten preceding years, viz. Rs. 1,82,16,92,440, we arrive at the stupendous amount of Rs. 2,05,61,94,371 for 11 years; that is, at the rate of 1,869 lákhs per annum. For the ten years it was 1,821¾ lákhs. This aspect of our trade is the most disquieting. We have over and over again pointed out that those who blatantly talk of increase in Indian trade by leaps and bounds must look carefully at this startling economic fact which plainly reveals the country's growing indebtedness. No doubt we are diminishing our exports of treasure. But at the same time we are partially replacing them by exports of produce, which of course is the result of increased cultivation by means of extended area of agriculture. For we decline to believe implicitly in the optimistic theory that where the agriculturist grew one blade before he is now growing two. This annual average of 1,869 lákhs (the average is really increasing rather than decreasing per annum) of excess exports shows clearly that, "after paying for the imports which the country requires, further payments to the amount of the excess have to be made in liquidation of debts." This is the dismal fact which the figures prove. Can the most ardent of optimists aver that India is growing richer? Why, the mere fact of the average excess of exports annually increasing shows that the vast agricultural population has to slave away to a greater degree in order to meet the growing demand of foreign creditors. It must be remembered that if more produce is being exported it is owing to greater number of men than before being employed in agricultural industry. Now this would have been impossible but for the physiological phenomenon of the population in India increasing at an annual average of about one per cent. The pressure on the soil is increasing with this population, while it is also certain that the greater physical exertion which the impoverished agriculturist, the victim of the State and the sáwkár or middleman alike, is compelled to put forth proceeds from necessity. So that his physical deterioration may be said to be in arithmetical proportion to the annual average excess of exports. Our optimist friends seem to overlook this fact which is so intimately connected with Indian economics. Physical deterioration means diminished labour, which means diminished production. It will be replied that production is on the increase. True. But what we affirm is that it might have been greater. The loss incurred by the country owing to diminished labour in consequence of physical deterioration of agriculturists is not perceived because of the annually increasing population in spite of heavy mortality by periodic famines. Were population to remain stationary, and were a severe famine to overtake the country once more, this loss would be visibly felt. It is because it is not perceived that superficial critics talk of increase of production. The agriculturist is the tread-mill slave of the foreign exporter, who rejoices in the increasing volume of trade and recommends with a light heart the extension of railways at the rate of 2,000 miles per annum! Is this excess of export a sign of the prosperity of the masses of India? How long is this heavy drain to continue? That is the question which no administration has had the courage to look in the face.

Says that India will never make any solid progress so long as it is under the domination of a bureaucracy.

In an article headed "The new departure in land revenue survey and assessment," the same newspaper says:—The provincial Government has taken a new departure in its land revenue policy. Its resolution of 26th March last declared that a finality in survey will be reached within the next eight years, that the improvements made by the capital and labour of the ryot will not be taxed, and lastly that the rigidity in the exaction of revenue will be relaxed, that is to say, revenue will be collected or remitted according to circumstances and the nature of the case brought forward for consideration. All this looks very fine on paper; but it remains to be seen how far the amelioration that is aimed at under the resolution will be realised. If the action of the State servants in the past be a guide for a forecast of the future, then we must reluctantly observe that the new departure will prove as delusive and ineffectual as Sir Charles Wood's great charter of 1864. The long and short of the matter is that there is no morality in the general administration of the country. On the contrary there is everywhere to be discerned that loose code of political morals which the British so vigorously denounce as prevailing in Turkey, Egypt and the Native States. The intimate connection that subsists between political economy and ethics has been ignored by the Indian administration. And all the poverty which is to be daily witnessed is the result of the grave economic errors of our rulers in years gone by, especially errors in connection with land revenue. In all their relations with the children of the soil they have often displayed the craft of the brigand. M. Lavalaye said, "In the ethical code you find the true root of economic laws." It is the want of appreciation of the value of this relation that has led to all the economic errors to be perceived in the India of 1884 after a century of moral and material progress of the people under civilised British rule. Another truth also seems to have had no influence with our rulers, namely, that political economy and law underlie each other. "All the acts of economic life," says the distinguished Belgian economist, "are exercised under the empires of civil institutions; and all civil institutions have economic interests for their final cause." Unless these general truths are realised and acted upon it is hopeless to have anything like substantial reform either in the land revenue policy of the Government or in the general fiscal policy which elsewhere leads to the comfort and freedom of the people. Governments change, and with them change their policies. The only constant factor is the bureaucracy. And we have over and again shown that so long as this clique, which is at the bottom of our misery, is virtually the master of India, Indians can never hope for any solid progress, materially or politically.

Advises the British Government to warn the Russians that any further progress in the direction of India will lead to immediate hostilities.

The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 22nd May observes that the British Government should have long ago taken effective measures to check the progress of Russia in Central Asia in the direction of India. The British authorities failed to accomplish this important task and trusted to the misleading explanations and assurances of the Muscovite Government. Russia has now occupied Merv, and has not only taken possession of Sarakhs but has left it behind in her march towards Herat by subjugating the Sarik Turcomans. Thus Herat is lying at the mercy of the Russians, who being given to plotting and chicanery might not fail to gain the Amir of Afghánistan over to their side and to place the British Government in an awkward position in the matter of the safety of the north-west frontier of India. It is therefore highly desirable that the British Government should warn the Russians that, if they cross a particular place to be fixed at once, hostilities will be at once commenced with them.

Suggests that the Government of India should be authorized by the Home Government to check the Russian intrigues in Central Asia.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 18th May observes that no doubt appears to be left as to the truth of the report that Russia has managed to include Sarakhs in her dominions, and that the place is being made the seat of Russian Government in the Turkoman territory. Sarakhs will be the place whence to direct Russian intrigues against the Government of India and its protége the Amir of Cábul. Reports are already current that Russia has begun her usual game in the direction of Afghánistan. The predatory Turkomans have been incited to commit raids in Afghán villages to the great annoyance of the Amir. The object seems so to draw the Amir into the districts ostensibly protected by Russia as to lend some seeming justification to the wily Muscovite to resort openly to measures embarrassing to the Governments of India and Afghánistan. The British Ministry has more than enough to do and to keep itself fully occupied in other directions. It will hardly be able to keep Russian intrigues under check in Central Asia if that power or its representatives should be so minded as to make the most of the present opportunity in furtherance of its designs. But if the Government of India under the direction of its present circumspect and able head is left to do what it should think best to keep an account of Russian doings, the chances are ten to one that the intruders in Merv and Sarakhs will not after all find their new abode very pleasant to them. Central Asian affairs might be left, with advantage, to be managed, at least for a time, from Simla and Calcutta instead of from London, and the Ministry will consult its convenience and the advantage of the English and Indian subjects of the Crown by trusting to the wisdom and ability of Lord Ripon and his advisers. [The Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date warns the British Government against trusting to the representations of Russia that she has not occupied Sarakhs and advises strict enquiry into the matter. The Bombay Samáchár (87) and the Jáme Jamshed (100) of the 19th May request the British Government to check the further progress of Russia in the direction of Herat.]

Says that the British Government need have no fears regarding their hold over India if they secure the love and confidence of her people and of the Native States.

The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 22nd May refers to the success of the French arms in China and to the approach of Russia towards India, and remarks that the English ought to care a good deal now for the advance of Russia, which has had an eye on this country for several years. The best bulwark against a Russian invasion will be to keep the people of India satisfied and contented and make the British rule popular.

Natives should be freely employed under the State and those puerile officers who look upon them with contempt should be removed. The Sikhs and other powerful nations should be granted rights similar to those enjoyed by European soldiers and the entire population should be allowed to bear arms. The Natives should also be allowed to enrol as volunteers without any distinction whatsoever. The safety of India will then be complete. If Russia were to invade India from one side and France from another, or if these two powers were to combine for the purpose, or even if the whole of Europe were to do so, the British soldiers with the support of the people of this country will be able to defeat them all. Moreover, the Native States should no longer be regarded with distrust. The utilization of the armies of the Gáikwád, the Scindia, the Rája of Cashmere, the Holkar, the Nizám and other Native Princes by the British Government will make their hold of the latter over India permanent.

Says that the approach of Russia to the confines of India will prove beneficial to the interests of Natives.

The Poona Vaibhav (51) of the 18th May alludes to the progress of Russia in Central Asia, and observes that it does not appear certain whether the Russians intend to invade India. If they mean to come here for purposes of trade, then such a policy will be beneficial to this country. If the British Government intends to prevent the Russians from coming into India, then the former will have to make proper arrangements to prevent the latter from approaching the confines of India. The trade of India is carried on principally with England and a little with America. The English, being the rulers of India, naturally try to help the traders of England who are their own flesh and blood, and thus India suffers and her true interests are often neglected. If the Russians approach the confines of India their nearness will do good to Natives, who will receive better treatment from their rulers in order that they may remain loyal. The advance of Russia in Central Asia will prove beneficial to the inhabitants of India in every way.

Contradicts the assertions made in Lord Lytton's letter to the London Times on certain points relating to the admission of Natives into the Covenanted Civil Service.

In referring to the letter addressed by Lord Lytton to the London Times contradicting the statement made in the reply given by Lord Kimberley to a deputation of the Indian Reform Association that after making arrangements for the Statutory Civilians Lord Lytton requested the Secretary of State to obtain a Parliamentary Act closing the competetive examinations of the Covenanted Civil Service to the natives of India, the Rást Goftár (109) of the 18th May observes that Lord Lytton can be easily convicted of a breach of trust towards the natives of India. His Lordship arranged for the appointment of the Statutory Civilians and thus enabled Natives to enter the service by a back door. The admission into the Civil Service is not allowed as a matter of right but simply as an act of grace, and aspirants for Civil Service posts are appointed not on account of their ability or attainments but by the recommendations and influence which they are able to command. An appearance is made of doing justice to Natives, but in reality they are excluded from high offices in the State. After arranging for giving Civil Service appointments to Natives by the system of nomination, Lord Lytton wrote to the Secretary of State for India recommending that an Act of Parliament should be passed for closing the competitive examinations to them. Fortunately Lord Cranbrooke refused to adopt the recommendations made by Lord Lytton secretly in a despatch to the Secretary of State for India but which were afterwards published in a blue-book. After quoting in English Lord Lytton's recommendations and Lord Cranbrooke's reply as given in the blue-book, the Goftár observes that Lord Kimberley, in refusing to increase the age of candidates for the entrance examination as requested by the deputation that waited upon him, took refuge behind the flimsy arguments about the Statutory Civilians and disappointed the whole of India. It is however gratifying that public meetings are being held in different parts of the country to protest against Lord Kimberley's reply and to repeat the prayer made by the deputation.

Advice to the people of India to continue agitating the question of increasing the limit of age of candidates for the Indian Civil Service Examination and to bring the question before Parliament.

The Gujaráti (96) of the 18th May refers to the letter written by Lord Lytton to the Times, and says that the explanation offered by His Lordship is very important and useful at this juncture. Lord Lytton was very often blamed in the controversy regarding the decrease in the limit of age of candidates for the Civil Service Examination, but his present letter falsifies Lord Kimberley's statement. Lord Lytton's letter is a new and powerful support to the question regarding the increase of the limit of age, and when three Viceroys like Lords Northbrook, Lytton and Ripon disapprove of the decrease in the limit of age, the continuance of the present limit cannot be looked upon as just. The entire population of India ought to raise a very powerful outcry on the subject throughout the country, bring the question before Parliament, and have the matter moved by Mr. Gladstone, Lord Hartington and Lord Northbrook. Memorials from all parts of the country should be forwarded to England and Lord Ripon's support should also be taken in so doing. Some advantage will certainly result from continued and powerful activity in this matter. [The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 22nd May does not expect any good from Lord Kimberley's administration, and recommends the ministry of Mr. Gladstone to attend to the matter. It says that if Natives are more largely employed in civil offices and in the army on privileges similar to those enjoyed by Europeans, and if they are treated in the same way as Europeans are, there would be no fear to Government even if Germany, France and Russia combined were to invade India. The Hitechchhu advises all the cities in India to forward numerously signed memorials on the question of raising the limit of age of candidates for the Civil Service Examination to Parliament through Lord Northbrook or Mr. Bradlaugh. The Dátardun (91) of the same date censures the people of Bombay for their apathy in the matter.]

Disapproves of the refusal of Lord Kimberley to reconsider the question of the limit of age of candidates for the Indian Civil Service.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 18th May remarks that there can hardly be any doubt as to the grief and disappointment caused to all intelligent people in this country by the refusal of Lord Kimberley to reconsider the decision of Government with respect to the fixing of the maximum age of the candidates for the Civil Service-Examinations at 19. The public meetings held and addresses delivered in different parts of the country since the receipt of the intelligence of the unfavourable reply of Lord Kimberley to the deputation that waited on him lately are clearly indicative of the strong feeling that exists among the people here on the subject. It will not be to the advantage or the credit of the Government to set down the popular agitation on the important question as of no consideration. [The Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date expresses similar sentiments.]

Advises that the agitation for the repeal of English import duties on Indian silver-ware should be kept up until its object is gained.

The same newspaper of the 18th May says:—The statement of Mr. Courtney, the Secretary to the English Treasury, in the House of Commons on the subject of the silver duties is certainly disappointing and is an injustice to the people of this country from the Government of England. The perverse attitude of the British Cabinet on the subject renders the injustice and the consequent disappointment the more flagrant and galling. The concession in respect of the hall-marking rules will hardly meet the case. Nothing short of the total repeal of the import duties on Indian silver-ware would answer the requirements of an important industry of this country; and the people and the Chambers of Commerce should again renew vigorously the demand for the same and keep up the agitation on the subject going until its object is accomplished. [The Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 19th May briefly notices the reasons for the abolition of the silver duties and condemns the refusal of England to repeal them as actuated by selfishness.]

Disapproves of the continuance of the duties levied on Indian silver-ware imported into England.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 18th May says :—A telegram from London announces that the House of Commons on Tuesday last discussed the question of the silver duties when Mr. Courtney stated that the duties would not be remitted for the present but that the abolition of the system of hall-marking for the delicate Indian plate would be arranged for. It is difficult to see why the Liberal Ministry should hold so fast by these duties, which bring so small a revenue and yet work so harshly on Indian plate. They ought to feel that having brought about the removal of Indian duties on English cloth, which we could ill afford to forego, they ought in justice to show a similar concession to India. But Manchester has votes in Parliament and India has none. And this makes a great difference. It is not enough to have justice on our side; we must have influence too to back ourselves before our prayer can be granted. When such is the case, the dispensing with the hall-marking, though not a very great concession in itself, must be accepted as a great boon, and we should feel thankful for it. There is yet time before we can expect to obtain the larger concession. By the way, the telegram does not inform us how the discussion was brought about, whether on motion or otherwise. Not that we can expect that the duties can be abolished in spite of the Ministry, but we should like to hear that the justice of our demand was fairly brought to the notice of the house by those members of Parliament who have volunteered to do so and bring a motion in Parliament for the purpose.

Reflections on the question of the disestablishment of the English church in India.

The same newspaper says:—The whole correspondence which passed between the Government of India and the Secretary of State relating to the ecclesiastical establishment of India has been published. It shows how groundless was the cry raised at the time in some quarters that Lord Ripon had raked up the question in issue therein with a view to the disestablishment of the church in India. The publised correspondence shows to those who can see that the subject was opened by certain questions put to Lord Hartington in Parliament in 1880 by Mr. Baxter. On this the Secretary of State asked information of the Government of India as to whether the number of chaplains appointed in India went beyond the requirements of the case. The Government in reply forwarded a report of the Bishop of Calcutta on the subject. But the Secretary of State was not satisfied with that and asked the opinion of the Government itself as to whether the number of chaplains went beyond the obligations of the State reasonably understood. Thus compelled, Lord Ripon and his Council addressed themselves to the whole question of what the obligations were of the Government of India and how far in accordance with them was the provision of chaplains that was made. Lord Ripon, Sir E. Baring and Mr. Ilbert thought that Government was only bound to provide for the spiritual wants of British soldiers in India and of British-born railway servants, and that consequently the present strength of the ecclesiastical establishment was far in excess of what was required. These views were far too liberal for the other members of the Viceroy's Council, who were of opinion that the obligations of Government extended primarily to British soldiers and secondarily to all Christian servants of the State and their families, and that the present number of chaplains did not exceed the obligations of the Government. Lord Kimberley, noticing the difference of opinion in the Viceroy's Council, thought it best to drop the subject altogether for a time as there was no serious complaint in India of the working of the existing system. It is however not possible that the question can be shelved in this manner for any length of time. For though there may be no serious complaint in India, members of Parliament of Mr. Baxter's persuasion and others will, without doubt, force the question repeatedly on the attention of the Secretary of State. And bodies of Dissenters in England will ply him with petitions on the subject. The question then will claim an early solution, and the extent of the obligations of Government on the subject will have to be definitively settled once for all. We have so often expressed our mind in connection with the State expenditure on the Ecclesiastical Department in India that it is not necessary to say anything on the present occasion beyond stating that the utmost length to which Government can fairly go in the matter is that recommended by Lord Ripon. An indulgence, however, long continued soon comes to be regarded as a privilege and a right. It is no wonder, therefore, that Lord Ripon should meet with sharp criticism for the views which he has expressed in the matter, though they are the only fair ones which could be taken from the standpoint of the European community. What pains one however most is, not the sharp attacks but the deliberate and persistent misrepresentation of the conduct and motives of the most noble-minded and conscientious Viceroy of India which comes from some quarters where his views naturally fail to commend themselves. Such practice, though highly unbecoming, is unfortunately being constantly followed. It is supposed to furnish an effective auxiliary to, and sometimes an excellent substitute for, good logic. How then can interest and selfishness discard it on any occasion?

Reflections on the question of the disestablishment of the English church in India.

In an article headed "The Ecclesiastical Establishment in India," the Native Opinion (11) of the 18th May gives an account of the recent correspondence on the subject between the Government of India and the Secretary of State, and observes:—Now that the natives of this country are fit to hold any appointments in the administration, and may well be allowed to hold all of them with some few places excepted, the seriousness of the injustice has been greatly aggravated. In the first place, as all the other sections of Her Majesty's subjects themselves pay for their spiritual comforts, her Christian subjects also must do the same. Secondly, if Government is bound to provide for that comfort to public servants of the Christian persuasion, they must do the same with regard to their servants of the other persuasions also; and it is a fact not to be disputed that the latter class considerably exceeds in number the former. And thirdly, now that Government can fill almost all the appointments with natives of this country for whose religious comfort nothing at present is being spent by the State, it is hard on the revenues of this country that they should primarily be heavily charged in the shape of large salaries to foreign servants unnecessarily imported, and that they should be charged again for giving them the comforts of a religion which is not the religion of India. It is to these points that the enquiry must be directed, and without any pessimistic or optimistic propensities the question must be decided upon its own merits. We have great faith in the march of time, and we hope to see this anomaly improved off the face of our administration.

Remarks in connection with the abolition of the Ecclesiastical Department in India.

In an article headed "The Ecclesiastical Department," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 19th May gives a succinct account of the recent correspondence on the subject between the Government of India and the Secretary of State, and observes:—From the foregoing it will be apparent that not only did Lord Ripon not take the initiative, but was all through an unwilling agent of the Secretary of State for India, that for a long time His Excellency refrained from expressing any opinion, and that at last when he was pressed by the Secretary of State for India he gave an opinion which, supported as it was by two of his most distinguished colleagues, would, we venture to think, have met with the approval of Lord Hartington. His Excellency's proposal is in accordance with the true spirit of the policy of Government as regards the Ecclesiastical Department, and, if adopted, would have in a great measure answered the objections of the opponents of the department, and would have saved the money of India's tax-payers from being spent for the spiritual benefit of the Doctor's wife at Berhampore and such other numerous congregations mentioned in Mr. Hill's letter to Lord Hartington. Few will doubt the impropriety of spending 22 lákhs of rupees for the spiritual benefit of a few thousand Christians out of revenues chiefly obtained from the non-Christian millions of India. The most plausible appearance is put upon the Ecclesiastical Department when its apologists say that the establishment is not a State church, but that it is maintained for the benefit of those of our servants who choose to profit, just as our medical establishment. But this argument, if logically extended, would make it obligatory on Government to provide for the religious wants of all their servants of whatever religion. If the necessity of maintaining the department is based on past promises, we shall at once concede that the promises must be kept, but they must be kept with as little hardship or injustice to other classes of Her Majesty's subjects as possible. Having regard to these considerations, we think the proposal of Lord Ripon was well calculated to meet all requirements. As said above, we think a different result would probably have ensued from all this correspondence if Lord Hartington had been in office at this time. From the urgent repetitions of His Lordship's demands for opinion and information from the Government of India, and the frequent references to Mr. Baxter and his party, we are induced to think that Lord Hartington, to save himself from inconvenient questions, would probably have adopted the suggestion of Lord Ripon, which promised to rectify the errors of the department in a few years. For our part we wish Lord Ripon had included the Ecclesiastical Department in his programme of reform and had enforced his views with greater strength. But the fact that His Lordship does not belong to the prevailing denomination of Christianity is probably the reason for His Lordship's cautious and feeble attitude towards the subject. The imputation that His Lordship sought to abolish the department because of his Catholic persuasions can do credit only to the wise heads in Pársi Bázár Street. The occasion for the expression of opinion was not of Lord Ripon's seeking and his proposal did not aim at anything so alarming as the disestablishment of the Protestant church in India, as is sought to be made out. Lord Kimberley's inaction in the matter after so much expenditure of pen and ink is no loss to or reflection upon His Excellency the Viceroy, but it is a loss to India and a reflection on Mr. Baxter and others of his persuasion. We trust the latter will not quietly accept the fiat of the Secretary of State for India.

Remarks in connection with the disestablishment of the English church in India.

In an article headed "The Ecclesiastical Department of the Government of India," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th May says:—The publication of the Parliamentary blue-book so far has cleared one most important point of the controversy. It has set at rest the foolish cry as to Lord Ripon being the originator. It is the influential non-conformists to whom we are indebted for the enquiry. If the dissenting bodies have compelled Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India to bring the controversy to a definite issue, they cannot be blamed. For the opinions they hold on the subject are simply a reflex of the age—the age in which the question of religious equality is considered as beyond the functions of the State. Now the warmest supporters of ecclesiastical grants for the Anglican church from the revenues of India will not have the courage to deny the fact of the tendency of modern Europe in matters of church and State, and notably in England. If that tendency is the legitimate outcome of the Reformation, then it will be as useless to resist it as to stem the tide of the ocean. Neither strong personal ascendency, which is an important factor in the present condition of politics and religion, nor the combined influence of the most powerful vested bodies, can arrest the progress of the daily growing belief that the church must eventually depend wholly on its own exertions. The spread of the principle of toleration and the growth of that of religious equality must eventually bring about the desired change in India which the interested ecclesiastical bodies are now so intent upon maintaining. Our conviction is that the time for the vindication of these principles is fast approaching. Meanwhile Indians may discuss the subject fairly and moderately. They have important interests at stake.

Says that the appointment of Sir James Caird to a seat in the Indian Council in succession to Mr. Cassels will meet with universal approbation.

In a paragraph headed "The Vacancy in the Indian Council," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 19th May says:—Mr. Cassels' term of office having expired, speculation is rife as to who should be his successor. The London Times has thrown the weight of its authority on the side of a person whom we should have least expected to be in the running for a seat in the Council of the Secretary of State for India. Mr. Maclean is a man of great power and information, but in all his career he has been too much of a partizan, and has too frequently been arrayed against the true interests of India to make a good Councillor to the Secretary of State. His views on Indian politics have always been notoriously illiberal, crooked and short-sighted. His only merit is that he is a vehement speaker, and commands a facile and truculent pen. He himself looks upon the post as sour grapes, and we trust we shall be saved from the misfortune of having in the Indian Council a pronounced jingo and an enemy of Native interests. Mr. Cassels has a few supporters for his re-nomination. But he has not, we are afraid, distinguished himself for any originality of views or active intelligent interest in Indian questions, save on one occasion when he betrayed the true interests of India in favour of Manchester by exerting himself for the repeal of the import duties. Otherwise he has been conspicuously indifferent and has generally subscribed to the official view. To our mind Sir James Caird is a far more eligible candidate than either Mr. Maclean or Mr. Cassels. Sir James' intimate acquaintance with the many agricultural and economic questions which affect India—an essentially agricultural country—would enable him to render very valuable assistance to the Secretary of State. His accession to the Indian Council would materially strengthen it, and would, we venture to think, meet with universal approbation.

Express gratitude towards Government for avoiding the raising of a new loan this year.

The Yajdán Parast (122) and the Kaiser-i-Hind (103) of the 18th May are sincerely thankful to Government for avoiding the raising of a new loan this year and for not adding to the public burdens of the country. They however regret the continuance of the license-tax and a heavy duty on salt, and request Government to curtail the expenses of the administration and reduce the burden of taxes which sits heavily on the people.

Recommends a reduction in the duty levied on salt.

In noticing the recommendation made in the London Lancet that the heavy duty on Indian salt should be reduced as this condiment is indispensable not only for making vegetable food palatable but also for the exemption from disease and preservation of the health of human beings and animals in tropical countries, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 24th May alludes to the increase in the consumption of salt since a decrease was made in the duty levied on it, and requests Government to effect a still greater reduction in the duty so that this indispensable necessary of life may be used freely by man and animal and in the tillage of soil. [The Ahmedabad Samáchár (81) of the 14th May prays for a reduction in the duty levied on salt, and expresses a hope that such reduction will not injuriously affect the Government revenue.]

Says that practical information about improving the quality of wheat should be disseminated among the agricultural classes in the form of a pamphlet.

In noticing the report of the Director of Agriculture on the subject of improving the quality of wheat and the resolution of Government thereon, the Jáme Jamshed (100) of the 20th May approves of the measures suggested in those papers, but observes that Government should not limit its exertions in the matter so far. An enquiry should be made as to what kinds of wheat are most in demand in England, and the agriculturists should be instructed as to the mode of raising crops of that particular kind of wheat. Mr. Ozanne ought in conjunction with the Bombay Chamber of Commerce to prepare a pamphlet in English describing in detail the best mode of cultivating superior kinds of wheat, and the work should be translated into the different vernaculars of the Presidency and copies of it should be distributed freely among the agricultural classes. The Director of Agriculture should also visit fields in different parts of the country, and after examining them should offer advice to their owners for the improvement of the crops grown on them.

Remarks on Mr. Grant Duff and his administration in connection with the decision in the case of Vijayaraghava Chary versus the Government of Madras.

In an article headed "Vijayarághava Chary versus the Government of Madras," the Mahrátta (2) of the 18th May says:—We must premise, however, by saying that Mr. Grant Duff, the Governor of Madras, has disappointed the people of the country most cruelly, both by his inactive and unsympathetic conduct as a private gentleman and by his high-handed, injudicious and sometimes most puerile acts of administration. When he was first declared as the Governor-elect of Madras, we felt that the benighted Presidency was indeed very lucky in having a succession of good Governors, Mr. Adams succeeding the Duke of Buckingham, both of whom have endeared their names to the people; and we had high hopes that Mr. Grant Duff, selected as he was by the discerning eye of Mr. Gladstone and possessing good antecedents, would be able to win a name for himself as a ruler and would depart for home loved and regretted by all. But we have been most wofully undeceived. The two-and-a-half years of his career have shown that he is no administrator; he has disgusted the people to such an extent that they have become bold enough to suggest that His Excellency should be recalled; he has shown an apathetic spirit towards the several reforms inaugurated by the Supreme Government; and he has done several things which tend to prove that he is a Conservative of the old type dressed in a Liberal's garb. Some writers now hint that His Excellency was sent out to India because he was somehow or other to be cleared from the Cabinet, and this seems to be amply borne out by his administration. We on this side of the country are not intimately acquainted with all the acts of oppression, misrule and thoughtlessness committed during His Excellency's tenure of office; but from what we have read in public newspapers we know that among the most flagrant acts of injustice and arbitrary dealing may be mentioned the case of the Madras Times, the dismissal from service of Mr. Wallace the Chingleput scandal, the course of procedure in the Salem riots, and to this list we have now to add the supreme act of injustice—the case of Vijayarághava Chary. We have made this somewhat lengthy digression for our present topic to show how Mr. Grant Duff has been dealing with the people committed to his care, so that the exact nature and significance of the present case might be better understood. In replying to a deputation that waited upon him about two years ago, His Excellency is reported to have said:—"If I am to be a Governor, I shall be every inch a Governor." And so His Excellency has become, no doubt; but of what sort is quite another question, and is sufficiently answered by the previous acts of his reign and by the recent act that we are going to deal with. With these remarks we shall proceed to see what the case shortly was and what it has given to the people. As we have remarked at the outset, the case is a single triumph of the people secured by the judicial machinery over the rampant executive Government, and will be clear from the sequel. It is a matter of notoriety that in the Salem riots a number of persons were arraigned for participation in them, were tried and convicted, and sent to the Andamans to suffer penalty for life. We cannot go into the history of this affair, but we may state that Vijayarághava Chary was one who was suspected of having a hand in the troubles, the suspicion having first arisen among the executive officers of Government entrusted with the investigation of the causes of the riots. They came to the conclusion that this Vijayarághava Chary, being a municipal commissioner, had taken steps which were not proper on his part and had used his weight and influence on the side of misrule instead of on the other side,—that in fact he was a party to the riots in one form or another. He was tried along with others before the High Court, but three Judges expressly acquitted him of any share in the riots and set him free. This naturally incensed the officers who had counted upon making an easy game of the man, and a long correspondence between Government and its officers at Salem,—demi, semi, hemi-confidential, secret and of every possible sort—had already accumulated on the causes of the riots, and in several reports the name of the A'chárya was mentioned with suspicion along with others. This gentleman had always been a very respectable and useful member of society, of culture and public spirit, and had wielded by virtue of his character and position considerable influence over the people. He had as a municipal commissioner to oppose the measures proposed by the Collector of Salem, the president of the municipality, as being opposed to the interests of the public, and was not therefore liked by officials. All that he did to rouse the ire of officials was the spirit of honest opposition; and Mr. Wigram, who tried the Salem offenders, seemed to assume that constitutional opposition to the Collector indicated a lawless spirit and a disregard for lawful authority. The one act on which the graveness of the charge lay was his endeavour to have the culvert of the street widened so as to make it convenient for the Hindus on procession days; and "the High Court regret that the plaintiff's independent and constitutional discharge of his functions as a commissioner should have been put forward as relevant to the charge of abetting the outbreak." The Government acting on "the decided and interested opinions of their most confidential officers" came to the conclusion that, "in spite of warnings, Vijayarághava had insisted on carrying the measure, which was the immediate cause of the outbreak." Accordingly on the 29th of May 1883 the Governor in Council published a notification in the Fort St. George Gazette purporting to remove the plaintiff and three other members of the commission from office for misconduct." Naturally enough the duly elected commissioner felt aggrieved and applied to Government asking the nature of his "misconduct" or "neglect of duty" of which he was supposed to have been guilty, and for copies of the papers, but both these requests were curtly refused. Besides, when on 9th August 1882 the plaintiff had submitted his petition to Government stating that he had learnt that the Collector had reported unfavourably against him and that he begged for a copy of the report and for an opportunity of defending himself, this was simply recorded. After alluding to the decision of the Judges, the Mahrátta proceeds:—A more vivid instance of the executive being so remarkably snubbed,—actually punished by the judiciary,—it will not be easy to find. Generally people believe that the Government is safe and cannot be exposed to any censure; but this case has proved that fair play will at last succeed, and that though the Government be strong it can be prosecuted by a wronged party, and that too quite successfully. If the administrators of justice are true to their sense of equity and wisdom, they can dispense it to even an humble commissioner of a municipality, though the defendant be His Excellency the Right Honourable the Governor in Council. Such a policy continued by Government will not encourage public spirit and self-help in local committees and will dissuade many Native gentlemen from taking this honorary office, being at the same time subject to such public disgrace as dismissal without any adequate ground. Though the amount of damages originally claimed by the plaintiff and that adjudged by the Court so vastly differ, we believe the decision must be hailed with satisfaction inasmuch as the principle underlying the case has been fully maintained; the dismissal has been declared to be illegal and some damages are decreed. Considered in this light, the decision of the Madras High Court in the Vijayarághava Chary's case must be regarded as a very important event in the history of Madras during Mr. Grant Duff's regimé, and may be even written in golden letters, in so far as it has established the claims of the subjects as against a dominant arbitrary bureaucracy. We have only to hope that the Governor will not add to his already growing unpopularity by other acts of rashness and high-handedness, and thus make himself an object of public hatred and public curses. [The Sind Times (5) of the 16th May is glad that Mr. Vijayarághava Chary has triumphed at last. It is a satisfaction to find that the High Court has treated the extraordinary claims of "the governing power" as they deserved. The decision of the Madras High Court will be approved everywhere, and it is to be trusted that it will serve as a check in future upon many of the vagaries and arbitrary actions of the "governing power."]

Expresses satisfaction with the appointment of Mr. Nánábhái Haridás as a permanent Judge on the bench of the High Court of Bombay.

In a paragraph headed "Mr. Justice Nánábhái Haridás confirmed," the Indu Prakásh (11) of the 19th May says:—We congratulate the Native community of Western India on the glad news that Government have at last done them the tardy measure of justice of confirming Mr. Justice Nánábhái Haridás in his seat on the High Court bench. Mr. Justice Nánábhái was appointed to act as Judge first in 1873, and since then he has been off and on the bench several times. The Native public had long evinced considerable anxiety and disappointment, and loud were the complaints that Government did not give our local High Court a pucca Native Judge when the sister presidencies had long been in the enjoyment of the privilege. It was reserved for Sir James Fergusson's Government to fulfil the long deferred expectations, and His Excellency's name will remain in the remembrance of Natives on this side of India for its association with Mr. Justice Nánábhái's appointment. Mr. Justice

Nánábhái has the making in him of an excellent Judge. He possesses the confidence of the bar and the public, and has the capacity of making himself an ornament to the bench if he puts forth his powers unreservedly, as he no doubt will do. Long live Mr. Justice Nánábhái to enjoy the honour and to grace the High Court bench with his presence! [The Gujaráti (96) of the 18th and the Broach Samáchár (88) and the Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 22nd May express satisfaction with the appointment. The Hitechchhu says that the public expect that one or two Native gentlemen will hereafter be permanently appointed Judges of the High Court. Such a step will be beneficial to the Government as well as the people.]

Is thankful to Government for the appointment of Mr. Nánábhái Haridás as a permanent Judge in the Bombay High Court.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 18th May says:—The confirmation of Mr. Nánábhái Haridás on the bench of the High Court of Bombay as a permanent Judge by the Secretary of State has been received with sincere pleasure and satisfaction everywhere. This act of the authorities is a concession to the constitutional right and a deference to the legitimate aspirations of the people of India, an encouragement to the educated Natives, and a recognition of the claims of a loyal and deserving member of their community. The Government has done what it was very properly expected to do long ago; but on the principle "better late than never," what is now the fact accomplished will ever redound to the credit of the Government of Sir James Fergusson; and the natives of this Presidency will always feel thankful to His Excellency in Council for the enlightened step taken by him for their political elevation. They will appreciate the favour duly and will strive to deserve more of similar wise and generous concessions at the hands of their rulers by proved fitness on their part. [The Rást Goftár (109) and the Yajdán Parast (122) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Says that the Judge of the Sadar Court in Sind should be empowered to try European British subjects.

The Sind Times (5) of the 16th May, in an article headed "The trial of European British subjects in Sind," refers to the committal of two soldiers by the Court of Sessions at Karáchi to stand their trial at the next criminal sessions of the Bombay High Court on certain charges, and says:—It is clear that a single trial of a couple of European British subjects at Bombay instead of at Karáchi will not only cost the Government a heavy sum of money (excluding the Public Prosecutor's fees)—will not only be seriously prejudicial to the interests of the complainant and his witnesses,—but will handicap the accused, and besides entailing their long detention without trial will greatly hamper them in their defence. Is there no remedy for such a lamentable state of things? The Ilbert Act has not removed this crying grievance. The Sadar Court of Sind has power to decree a dissolution of marriage or judicial separation in the case of European British subjects, but it possesses no criminal jurisdiction over them whatsoever. The Magistrates and the Judges subordinate to it can sentence European offenders to certain terms of imprisonment, but the Sadar Court cannot exercise any of the powers vested in its subordinate tribunals. The fun of it is that the Sadar Court has not only no original jurisdiction over European British subjects, but has neither appellate nor revisional jurisdiction when they are concerned. If therefore a European British subject is wrongly convicted by a District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge and sentenced to a few days' hard labour, he cannot appeal to the Sadar Court but must perforce resort to the High Court at Bombay for redress. Now the procedure prescribed by law regarding appeals will necessitate a delay of at least twelve days before an appeal by a British subject convicted at Karáchi can be decided at Bombay in his favour. If therefore a European British subject is sentenced to twelve days' rigorous imprisonment it follows that the appellate court's order will do him no good. What we have said of a European British subject at Karáchi applies à fortiori to such subjects convicted at Hyderabad or Shikárpur. Government expense is large, the inconvenience and loss to complainants and witnesses is great, and the accused himself is placed in a much worse position. This is a matter which seriously affects European British subjects as well as Natives. The solution of the whole difficulty is very easy. The Judge of the Sadar Court is a European British subject, and no European British subject will object to be tried by him, nor will any European British subject disdain to appeal to him or apply to him for revision. On the contrary such subject will be glad to avail himself of the speedy relief which this court can give, and to escape from the torment of a long confinement pending his trial in Bombay and the difficulties, troubles and inconveniences besetting him at every stage of such trial. A short Act of two or three lines can at once remove this grave defect in the law of criminal procedure, and we earnestly hope, for the credit of our Government, that this subject will be taken in hand at no distant date.

Requests Government to prohibit the importation of poisonous liquors into India.

The Bombay Chronicle (76) of the 18th May observes that there is no question that the importation of brandy from Europe into India is increasing tremendously every year, which again is a pretty sure index of the increase of drunkenness in the land. This increase may probably be one of the causes of the heavy rate of mortality from fever and other diseases of which Dr. Blanc and others in Bombay and the medical men all over the country complain. At all events, disease and death must be greater in proportion to the use by the people of poisonous sorts of drinks. Nor can there be any reasonable doubt that a large portion of the foreign commodity called spirituous liquors imported into Bombay consists of the adultered stuff called Hamburg brandy, which is sold very cheap. In the matter of the importation of foreign spirits and liquors the Government here would be doing only its duty if by some well regulated arrangement it were to prohibit the import into this country of poisonous preparations under the false name of "brandy." [The Akhbáre Sodágar (82) of the 23rd May expresses similar sentiments.]

Complains of the Arms Act and the forest laws.

A correspondent of the Poona Vaibhav (51) of the 18th May, writing from Pen in the Kolába Collectorate, says that during the last three months a couple of tigers have been committing fearful ravages in the neighbourhood of this town. They have killed a large number of cattle. It is also reported that two calves were carried away during day-time from inhabited localities. The British Government has disarmed the population and has also been extending the area occupied by forests, which afford shelter to wild animals, and hence it is not the fault of the latter if they increase in number and commit ravages. People make traps to catch tigers, but they have grown cunning under the present wise British Government and therefore avoid them. The Arms Act and the forest laws have done and are doing incalculable mischief.

Requests Government to publish the papers regarding the fault of Mr. Adarji Jivanji in connection with the frauds perpetrated in the Government distillery at Surat.

In noticing the report that Mr. Adarji Javanji, the Huzúr Deputy Collector of Surat, has been censured by Government and transferred to the Panch Mahåls for dereliction of duty in connection with the frauds perpetrated in the Government distillery at Surat, the Rást Goftár (109) of the 18th May refuses to join the Gujarát Mitră and other vernacular newspapers in pronouncing the opinion that Mr. Adarji has been unjustly punished until it is permitted to see the Government resolution and other papers on the subject. The Goftár requests Government to publish the papers in connection with the transfer of Mr. Adarji to the Panch Mahåls. [The Deshi Mitră (92) of the 22nd May censures Government for inflicting on Mr. Adarji a very severe punishment as compared with the treatment accorded to Mr. White. The Suryă Prakásh (80) of the 17th May says that the people of Surat are displeased with the punishment and transfer of Mr. Adarji to the Panch Mahåls.]

Complains of the unseemly anxiety of the officers of the A'bkári Department to increase the revenue from ábkári.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th May says :—Much sympathy is felt with Mr. Adarji Jivanji, Deputy Collector of Surat, on his transfer from that place to the Panch Mahåls for alleged remissness in preventing fraud on the A'bkári Department. Mr. Adarji is one of the most popular officers in the service and is held in very high esteem. In his case a wigging might have answered the purpose. It is said that at the instance of the A'bkári Department Government have censured Mr. White also, and have dealt more or less harshly with other servants too. All this shows an unseemingly anxiety to raise the revenue of the State; for it may be taken for granted that the officials in charge are not all of them remiss or negligent. They do their duty; but perhaps Mr. Pritchard wants them to do more. We can think of nothing so obnoxious as the working of this A'bkári Department, which keeps the public mind in a state of ferment.

Says that Government should set aside a portion of the local fund cess for the purchase of corn, which should be stored in store-houses and afterwards sold to cultivators at a moderate profit.

A correspondent of the Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 19th May says that the cultivating classes derive hardly any benefit from the local fund cesses which are levied and collected from them. A cultivator is only able to obtain the seed which he requires for sowing purposes from a sáwkár on his undertaking to return the original quantity received with half as much over, and it is this exorbitant payment which ultimately brings about his ruin. In order to afford relief to the agricultural population the correspondent suggests that in each táluka a certain sum should be set aside from the local funds for the purchase of seed or grain, which should be stored in store-houses and then sold to ryots on their undertaking to repay it with a slight addition sufficient to cover all the expenses incidental to this operation. Great care should be taken that the seed to be sold is of good quality. In a táluka of average size there are about a hundred villages for which two or four store-houses of grain conveniently situated will suffice. If Government were to sell seed at a moderate price the money-lenders would be obliged to reduce their rates, and this reduction would be beneficial to the cultivators.

Advisability of destroying stray cattle found at Broach.

A correspondent of the Gujaráti (96) of the 18th May, writing from Broach, approvingly refers to the resolution issued by the Bombay Government for the destruction of stray cattle found at Nandurbár near Khándesh, and points out the necessity of a similar resolution being issued for Broach. Many well-to-do residents of Broach allow their cattle to stray and cause damage to fields. Many cows are given away to Bráhmans in charity, who however do not take proper care of them but allow them to injure people's crops. It is necessary that the Collector should write to Government on the subject and have a similar resolution issued for the benefit of the poor agriculturists of Broach.

Says that the public women of Bombay should be forced to reside out of Bombay and far removed from the respectable portion of the community.

The Subodh Patrika (15) of the 18th May says that women of ill-fame chiefly reside in Fanaswádi, Khumbhártukda, Mugbhát and Duncan Road, and that their presence there is a source of great annoyance to the respectable people who inhabit those parts. These women have been the means of effecting the ruin of immense numbers of young and old persons, which would not have been the case if they (public women) had been prohibited from residing in those parts where the respectable portion of the community live. It would be well if all women of ill-fame were forced to reside in some one particular corner of Bombay. The Italian women live in some particular lane of Kámáthipura. It would be well if Hindu and Mahomedan public women were compelled to live in some one lane of Bombay far removed from the respectable quarters of the city. A short time ago the public women in Karáchi were ordered to reside out of the city, and this order has been, it is said, already enforced. The same arrangement should be made here.

Irregular despatch and delivery of letters in Sind.

A correspondent of the Sind Times (5) of the 20th May, signing himself "A sufferer," complains of the lax superintendence which some of the post-masters in Sind exercise over their respective establishments. Irregular despatch and delivery of letters frequently cause very serious inconvenience and loss to the addressor or addressee or to both. The correspondent gives one out of several instances of the pecuniary losses he has patiently borne on account of such mismanagement. On the 30th April last he posted a letter for Naushahro in the Hyderabad Post Office. The letter ought to have reached the addressee on the 1st May, but it reached him on the 4th. The postal seals on the envelope show this unmistakeably. The consequence was that he suffered a loss of Rs. 100. It is to be hoped that the attention of the Postal authorities will be directed to the subject.

Requests the Superintendent of Police of the Surat District to put a stop to the practice of permitting police peons to accompany processions.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 18th May revives the old complaint that police peons are allowed to accompany marriage and other processions. The writer observes that it is wrong to take away policemen from their legitimate duty and put them to the work of parading in processions where there is no need of them. Like other men engaged for the processions the policemen are paid money and cocoanuts, and when they are refused this reward they squabble for it. The Superintendent of Police of the district ought to put a stop to the objectionable practice of permitting police peons to accompany processions.

Municipalities.

Says that there are able and public-spirited private Native gentlemen in the mofussil who can be safely appointed presidents of municipal corporations.

After expressing great gratification with the observance of the 18th May, the date of the Government of India's first resolution enunciating the scheme of local self-government, as a holiday by the people of Surat, Ahmedabad and Viramgám in this presidency and of several cities and towns in the Bengal and Madras presidencies, the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the 24th May observes that the town of Dholka has furnished more than one instance of its fitness for satisfactorily conducting local self-government. Recently when the president of the municipality of the town, who is a Government official, was absent, his work was entrusted to Mr. Maghanlál Tribhowandás, a non-official municipal commissioner. This gentleman discharged his duties so well and satisfactorily that the vice-president, who is also a Government official and a Government nominee in the corporation, has addressed him a letter extolling his temporary administration. This fact proves that there are private Native gentlemen in the mofussil who are able and quite competent to administer the affairs of municipalities satisfactorily, and that the suspicion entertained by His Excellency the Governor of Bombay that there are no able and public-spirited Natives in the mofussil is unfounded. If a small town like Dholka can produce such an able Native, certainly other large towns and cities of the mofussil cannot be wanting in men like him. It is therefore to be hoped that the Bombay Government will correct its mistake by appointing private Native gentlemen as presidents of municipal corporations. [The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 22nd May expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that Government employés should not be excluded from the enjoyment of the municipal franchise in Sind.

The Sind Times (5) of the 16th May refers to the proposed exclusion of public servants from the municipal franchise in Sind, and says:—To exclude public servants from the franchise is in a great measure to discount intelligence and education in the selection of representatives; and to exclude them from candidature is still worse, for they possess in a greater degree than many other eligible classes the qualities essential for the right management of municipal business. It was on this account that in the celebrated September resolution of the Bombay Government they were expressly made eligible for the office of municipal commissioner. How our local municipality came to differ from the Government on this vital question passes our comprehension. Instead of meeting the demand of the local Sabha for the extension of the franchise to all persons in private service drawing the same amount of qualifying salary as public servants, the municipality has altogether done away with the clause conferring the right to vote on Government employés. No attempt has been made to answer the arguments of the Sabha, which we think are very cogent and deserve attention. We hope the general meeting will approach the matter in no petty or illiberal spirit.

Complains of the deficient water-supply of Bombay at the hot season of the year.

In a paragraph headed "Our water-supply," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 19th May says:—The scarcity of water which has befallen Bombay this hot season is to be greatly deplored. Whoever is responsible for bringing on this calamity at this time of the year, one fact is clear that it is causing untold suffering to thousands of poor people. The time when water is turned on in different localities and the duration of its flow are so inconvenient, and the quality of the water that is after all obtainable is so indifferent, that many people, we doubt not, have to fall back upon well-water to satisfy their wants. Well-water is notoriously unhealthy, and it is well-known that the severe outbreak of cholera some time back was on enquiry found due to the use of well-water by many people in consequence of the stoppage of the Vehár main. Cholera has now again appeared, and we do not know if it is not owing to the same causes. Our municipal authorities are running a serious risk in interfering with the water arrangements at this time. We trust they will spare no pains to restore satisfaction as early as possible.

Condemns the proposal for diverting the sewage outfall from Carnac Bandar to Warli.

In an article headed "The Carnac Bandar Nuisance," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 18th May says:—We would earnestly urge on the Corporation the expediency of constructing the Tansa reservoir immediately. Let it cost 1½ or even 2 krors. The money will be well spent. The reservoir will be in the end productive. The construction, if taken in hand immediately, will take at the earliest 5 years to complete. And we are strongly of opinion that till then the drainage question should not be re-opened. The interval might be profitably employed in testing the results of the sewered Kámáthípura district. We shall then have reliable data to go upon. There will be no leaps in the dark. There will be the well digested opinion of the European experts, based on practical experience. There will be the experience of full five years of the result of drainage in the Kámáthípura district. There will be the plentiful supply of water which the growing population of the city stands absolutely in need of at the present moment. These conditions being fulfilled, the Commissioner and the Corporation of the day may safely proceed with the drainage and the night-soil questions. It is criminal rashness to push on with these matters at railway speed now. It is not right to put the cart before the horse. It will be asked by the advocates of the official hobby whether drainage works and water-works cannot be carried on simultaneously? We know this is the Commissioner's view. He has followed a solitary English authority on the subject. But it must be remembered that the water question demands absolute priority in point of construction, while it offers no difficulties. There are no serious results to apprehend from an increased water-supply. If at all, the Tansa reservoir will partially solve the public health problem. On the other hand, drainage works are not so imperative. Their construction on present principles is doubted for ultimate sanitary purposes. In short, the whole subject is enveloped in doubt and uncertainty. Is it wise, under such conditions, that the drainage works should proceed simultaneously with new water-works? We might have agreed to the proposal had there been none of those doubts, uncertainties, ignorance and inexperience which are presently traceable in the consideration of the question. Such being the situation, we earnestly warn the Corporation against committing itself to the dangerous proposal of diverting the outfall from Carnac Bandar to Warli. It will perpetrate a criminal blunder of the first order if it allows itself in a matter so important to the future health of the city to play into the hands of the Commissioner and his henchmen. Let the Corporation remember that every great city of the modern civilised world has to put up with certain inevitable evils. No remedy has yet been invented to effectually do away with the evils. So that everywhere there is what is called the choice of evils. The only practical question to be considered is, what are we to do? Well, we say, choose the lesser evil. And there is no denying the fact that Carnac Bandar outfall is the lesser evil that must be endured till we are provided with a cure for it.

Censures the municipality of Surat for retaining the services of Dr. Dosábhái Pestanji in opposition to the suggestion from Government to the contrary.

With reference to the suggestion made by Government to the municipality of Surat that the services of Assistant Surgeon Dosábhái Pestanji in charge of the Párekh Charitable Medical Dispensary, who receives a monthly salary of Rs. 350 from the municipal treasury, should be dispensed with and a junior Assistant Surgeon on a smaller salary should be employed in his place, the Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 18th May observes that at the general meeting of the corporation held on the 18th instant this suggestion was not adopted and a resolution was passed retaining the services of Dr. Dosábhái for another year. Seven representatives of the people were absent from this meeting, and in their absence the Government nominees unanimously passed the above-mentioned resolution. Dr. Dosábhái, being one of the commissioners, made a motion for retaining his services, and the other commissioners, being ignorant of the Government resolution on the subject, gave their votes in favour of the motion. Had the seven representatives of the people been present at the meeting they would certainly have saved the municipal treasury the heavy burden of the doctor's pay, as appropriately suggested by Government. [A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (100) of the 19th May and the Deshi Mitră (92) of the 22nd May express similar sentiments.]

Supports the action of the Surat Municipality about the remission of a fine to the Electric Light Company.

In alluding to the subject of the electric light which has caused a misunderstanding between the seven representatives of the people and the president of the municipal corporation of Surat, the Surat Akhbár (79) of the 19th May observes that by the agreement between the corporation and the Electric Light Company the latter was allowed two and a quarter anna for every electric light, and if any of the lamps were not lighted a fine of four annas was levied for every lamp which was not lighted. Accordingly the Company was fined in the sum of Rs. 3,000, which was paid by it, for its neglect in not providing the proper number of lights. One of the occasions on which the Company failed to act up to its agreement was during the late high floods in the river Tápti, which inflicted so much distress on the city of Surat. The Electric Light Company was not able to supply lights for several days on account of the damage done to its engine by the floods and for some other reasons that were beyond its control. The remission of the fine consisted of so much as was realized over and above the actual loss sustained by the municipality, namely, 2¼ annas per light. The remission given to the Company was perfectly justifiable.

Complains that Mr. White, the president of the Surat Municipality, has not yet sanctioned the employment of a certain number of labourers for cleaning the city of the sweepings collected in different parts.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (100) of the 21st May states that a few days ago cholera was largely prevailing in the city of Surat and large dinner parties were then held among the Hindu inhabitants. On that occasion Mr. Hynes, the Sanitary Superintendent, applied to the managing committee for sanction for employing twenty-five labourers to clean the city and its suburbs of the sweepings and other refuse which were collected in different parts. This application has not been answered and is still lying with Mr. White, the president of the corporation. [A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (87) of the same date prefers the same complaint.]

Thanks Mr. Reid for withdrawing the prohibition placed on the giving of caste feasts at Ahmedabad.

The Hitechchhu (78) of Ahmedabad of the 22nd May expresses satisfaction with the removal of the prohibition imposed on the giving of caste feasts at Ahmedabad, and thanks Mr. Reid for attending to the complaint it made in its last issue on the subject and reported at page 15 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 17th May. If Mr. Reid has good advisers about him and if they explain to him the real state of things, he is a gentleman who would attend to the public good. But it is to be regretted that he is sometimes deceived by those about him who conceal the real state of affairs in connection with the municipality. The Hitechchhu is convinced of this from the removal of the prohibition imposed on the giving of caste feasts.

Railways.

Says that the present officials of the B. B. & C. I. Railway should be retained to administer the concern after its amalgamation with the Rájputána-Málwa line.

The Jáme Jamshed (100) of the 24th May is much concerned to hear that the administration of the Rájputána-Málwa Railway and the B. B. & C. I. Railway is to be amalgamated and that Government are going to appoint military officers to administer the joint concern dismissing the present officials of the B. B. & C. I. Railway. If this report be true, observes the Jáme, it is to be regretted that the Company's officials who have hitherto ably and satisfactorily worked the line should be sent adrift. Among the various Indian railway lines it is the B. B. & C. I. Railway alone on which no invidious distinction is observed between Europeans and Natives, and the credit of this impartiality is due to Mr. Duxbury. He has moreover administered the entire concern so well that it has begun of late to bring in large profits. In the interest of the shareholders of the railway and the Natives the present officials ought to be retained for administering the amalgamated concern, and it is to be hoped that the people of Bombay will not fail to impress on the attention of the Directors the great desirability of not dispensing with the services of Mr. Duxbury and his brother officials. [The Gujaráti (96) of the 18th May expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Native States.

Gives some instances of the oppression practised by the Thákor of Rájkot on his subjects.

The Gujarát Mitră (77) of the 18th May gives on the authority of a correspondent four instances of oppression practised by the Thákor of Rájkot on his subjects some time ago, and requests the Thákor to disprove them if they are untrue. The Mitră also begs Government to enquire and ascertain the truth of the accusations. The correspondent states that the Thákor is on terms of enmity with his brother Laghubha, and tries to ruin the persons who are suspected of having any intercourse with the latter. The Thákor suspected that one Nathu Khimji, a money-lender, had advanced money to Laghubha and therefore attached the money-lender's account books. This occurrence took place about a year ago. One Párekh Tejpál, a resident of the Sadar Bázár, was suspected of having given encouragement to Laghubha, and was inveigled and accused of making assault on a certain person. Tejpál and his relations were imprisoned and the wealthy persons who were brought by the uncles of Tejpál to stand security for them were maltreated and mulcted in heavy sums. Tejpál was sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment and his uncles were fined fifteen rupees each. A Bhátia, named Vandrávan, was believed to have had dealings with Laghubha and was therefore caught and maltreated by the Rájkot police. This case was enquired into and decided by a Political officer, and the policemen were sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment and fined fifty rupees each. It is believed that the Thákor paid the fine. The Thákor has not paid compensation to the persons whose lands were taken up for laying a new road in the suburbs of Rájkot.

Berár Affairs.

Requests the authorities not to keep the Civil Court at Amráoti open during the May vacation.

The Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 19th May says that the Civil Court at Amráoti is to be kept open for business during the May vacation on account of the large quantity of arrears. The continuance of the work of the Civil Court during the hottest time of the year will be extremely inconvenient to vakils and to suitors. Most vakils in Amráoti have gone out of the station on account of the hot weather, and it will be some time before they return. Suitors usually keep their documents with their vakils, so that if their cases are called up when their vakils are away they will be put to much inconvenience and trouble. The authorities should consider the convenience of the suitors as well as of vakils. It is to be hoped that the order to keep the Civil Court at Amráoti open during the May vacation will be rescinded.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
28*th May* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Complaint regarding the unseemly anxiety of the officers of the A'bkári Department to increase the revenue from— 15
Administration of India: Expression of opinion that India will never make any solid progress so long as it is under the domination of a bureaucracy 4
Administration of Mr. Grant Duff: Remarks on Mr. Grant Duff and his administration in connection with the decision in the case of Vijayarághava Chary vs. the Government of Madras 11
Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
  Advice to the British Government to warn the Russians that any further progress in the direction of India will lead to immediate hostilities 5
  Expression of opinion that the Government of India should be authorized by the Home Government to check the Russian intrigues in Central Asia 5
  Expression of opinion that the approach of Russia to the confines of India will prove beneficial to the interests of Natives ... 6
  Expression of opinion that the British Government need have no fears regarding their hold over India if they secure the love and confidence of her people and of the Native States 5
Appointments:
  Expression of satisfaction with the appointment of Mr. Nánábhái Haridás as a permanent Judge on the bench of the High Court of Bombay 13
  Expression of thanks to Government for ditto 14
Arms Act: Complaint regarding the — and the forest laws... ... 15
Civil Service of India:
  A contradiction of the assertions made in Lord Lytton's letter to the London Times on certain points relating to the admission of Natives into the Covenanted— 6
  Advice to the people of India to continue agitating the question of increasing the limit of age of candidates for the entrance examination of the — and to bring the question before Parliament 7
  Disapproval of the refusal of Lord Kimberley to reconsider the question of the limit of age of candidates for the— ... 7
Cultivation of wheat: Suggestion that practical information about improving the quality of wheat should be disseminated among the agricultural classes in the form of a pamphlet 11
Disestablishment of the English church in India:
  Reflections on the question of the—
    The Native Opinion 9
    The Subodh Patrika 8
  Remarks in connection with the—
    The Indian Spectator 10
    The Indu Prakásh 9
Duties levied on Indian silver-ware imported into England:
  Advice that the agitation for the repeal of the — should be kept up until its object is gained 7
  Disapproval of the continuance of the— 8
Duty levied on salt: Recommendation for reducing the— 11
Excess of exports over imports in the foreign trade of India: Expression of opinion that the — is no indication that the labouring population is becoming richer 3
Importation of poisonous liquors into India: Request to Government to prohibit the— 15
Indian Council: Expression of opinion that the appointment of Sir James Caird to a seat in the — in succession to Mr. Cassels will meet with universal approbation 10
Loans: Expression of gratitude to Government for avoiding the raising of a new loan this year 11

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—continued.

Local Fund Cess: Expression of opinion that Government should set aside a portion of the — for the purchase of corn, which should be stored in store-houses and afterwards sold to cultivators at a moderate profit 16
Miseries resulting from British rule: Reflections on the— 3
Police: Request to the Superintendent of — of the Surat District to put a stop to the practice of permitting police peons to accompany processions... 17
Postal matters: Irregular despatch and delivery of letters in Sind ... 16
Poverty of India: Complaint regarding the increasing — and advice to England to curtail her demands and reduce the public expenditure . 3
Public Service: Request to Government to publish the papers regarding the fault of Mr. Adarji Jivanji in connection with the frauds perpetrated in the Government distillery at Surat ... 15
Public women of Bombay: Expression of opinion that the — should be forced to reside out of Bombay and far removed from the respectable portion of the community 16
Stray cattle found at Broach: Advisability of destroying— ... 16
Trial of European British subjects in Sind: Expression of opinion that the Judge of the Sadar Court in Sind should be empowered to try European British subjects 14

Part II.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Expression of thanks to Mr. Reid for withdrawing the prohibition placed on the giving of caste feasts at— 20
Bombay:
  Complaint regarding the deficient water-supply of — at the hot season of the year 18
  Condemnation of the proposal for diverting the sewage outfall from Carnac Bandar to Warli 18
Municipal franchise in Sind: Expression of opinion that Government employés should not be excluded from the enjoyment of the— ... 17
Presidents of Municipal Corporations: Expression of opinion that there are able and public-spirited private Native gentlemen in the mofussil who can be safely appointed— 17
Surat:
  Approval of the action of the — Municipality about the remission of a fine to the Electric Light Company 19
  Censure on the — Municipality for retaining the services of Dr. Dosábhái Pestanji in opposition to the suggestion from Government to the contrary 19
  Complaint that Mr. White, the President of the — Municipality, has not yet sanctioned the employment of a certain number of labourers for cleaning the city of the sweepings collected in different parts 19

Part III.—Railways—

Amalgamation of the B. B. & C. I. Railway with the Rájputána-Málwa Railway: Expression of opinion that the present officials of the B. B. & C. I. Railway should be retained to administer the concern after the— 20

Part IV.—Native States—

Rájkot: Instances of the oppression practised by the Thákor of — on his subjects... 20

Part V.—Berár Affairs—

Civil Court at Umráwati: Request to the authorities for the closing of the — during the May vacation... 21

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

C. R.
24637
INDIA OFFICE
30 JUN 1884

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 31st May 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
*5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	200
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
16	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
17	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
18	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
19	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
20	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
21	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
*22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*24	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*26	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
29	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
30	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
31	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
32	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
33	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
34	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
35	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
36	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*38	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
39	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
40	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
41	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
42	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
43	„ Mahárásthtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
44	„ Mahárásthtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
45	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
46	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*47	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
48	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
49	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
50	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*51	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
52	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*53	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*56	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
57	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
58	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
59	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
60	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
61	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*62	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
63	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*64	„ Shiváji[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
65	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 169

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
71	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
72	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*73	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
74	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*75	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*76	„ Vinod Malika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
77	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*78	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
79	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
80	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
81	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
82	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
83	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
84	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
85	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
86	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*87	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
88	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
89	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
90	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
91	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
92	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
93	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
94	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
95	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
96	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
97	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
98	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*99	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
100	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*101	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
102	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
103	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
104	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*105	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
*106	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
107	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
108	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
109	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
110	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
111	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
112	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
113	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
114	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*115	„ Saurásht्रă Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
*116	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	200
117	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*118	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
119	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*120	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
121	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
122	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
123	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
124	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
125	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
126	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*127	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
*128	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	200
129	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*130	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*131	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*132	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
133	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
134	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*135	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Remarks on certain maxims of Government in India enunciated by Sir James Stephen.

The Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha (4) for the month of April, but received on the 22nd May, in an article headed "The true Foundations of British Rule in India," says:—Sir James Stephen has made the Ilbert Bill the text for a very subtle and elaborate essay on the true foundations of the Government of India. He states broadly that the British empire in India was built up by conquest. This statement is however not true, but admitting its correctness for the sake of argument, and admitting also that this conquest has done more good than any other in history, we confess that we are not prepared to follow Sir James Stephen in the practical inferences which he proceeds to draw from them. He says that the Government in India must proceed upon principles different and in some respects opposed to those which prevail in England. The British Government must not shrink from the open uncompromising straightforward assertion of the superiority of the conquering race, and must not regard itself as being the representative of the general wishes and the average way of thinking of the bulk of the population which it governs. This is the first practical inference which Sir James Stephen draws from the history of the British Indian empire as he reads it. Now, in the first place, we say that this inference involves a complete non sequitur. If the governing race is really superior to the races which it governs, it is undoubtedly quite right and proper that the principles of the civilization of the governing race should as a rule be the dominant principles of the administration. But this we venture to think, ought to be so, and, we may add, naturally will be so, whether the governing race has waded through slaughter to a throne, or has attained to its position by what Sir James Stephen calls consent, or by any other conceivable mode whatever. Secondly, assuming Sir James Stephen's argument to be logically correct—assuming that the fact of conquest does justify the open uncompromising straightforward assertion of the superiority of the conquerors,—does such an assertion necessarily exclude all regard for the general wishes and the average way of thinking of the bulk of the population governed? If it does not, and we cannot think that Sir James Stephen at all events will be so bold as to say that it does, then it seems to us plain that to the extent to which such regard is practically and effectively paid to the wishes and way of thinking referred to, to that extent the governing class is making itself, in Sir James Stephen's language, the "representative" of those wishes and opinions. And yet Sir James Stephen delivers himself in this way upon that point:—"The Government which now exists in India has not been chosen by the people. It is not, and if it is to exist at all it cannot look upon itself as being, the representative" of the wishes and way of thinking already referred to. Why should this be so? If the meaning of all this emphatic asseveration merely is that the Government of the conquerors must not be "representative" in the sense of being bound absolutely to the wishes and way of thinking of those whose "representative" it is, then we say that we have no quarrel whatever with Sir James Stephen's conclusion. We admit most freely, unreservedly and ungrudgingly that European civilization is for all purposes of modern life very much superior to our own ancient civilization in this country. And on behalf of our country we are willing to receive from our English rulers the benefit of the principles of that new civilization. Therefore, if to be the "representative" of the "wishes and average way of thinking" of the bulk of our countrymen was to deprive us of the benefits of that civilization, then we should be as ready as Mr. Justice Stephen himself to call for the open, straightforward—we would rather not add uncompromising—assertion of the superiority of the Englishman. But would Mr. Justice Stephen be right in the implication which is necessarily contained in this argument? Is that implication true as regards, say, the Government of England? Are members of the House of Commons in England such slaves of their constituencies? Have we not often heard of the "Education" of parties by their leaders? Household Suffrage and Disraeli, Free Trade and Sir Robert Peel—do these names and institutions remind us only of the prevalence of the general wishes and average way of thinking of the population which chooses its own government, or do they not rather also indicate how those wishes and that way of thinking are perforce altered under the training and influence which those who are chosen to govern impart to, and exert upon, those who choose them? We say that whether a Government is based on conquest, or whether it is based on consent, it must not and in fact does not in each individual measure it undertakes hold itself bound absolutely and finally by the "wishes and average way of thinking of the population it governs." But, on the other hand, whether based on conquest or on consent, every Government must to a certain extent yield to those wishes and that way of thinking, and it in fact does so. Therefore, on the one side we have no objection to the open and straightforward assertion of the superiority of Englishmen over us in so far as such assertion is necessary for the spread among us of the higher civilization of which Englishmen are the representatives. But on the other side we say that such assertion should not be uncompromising, as Sir James Stephen phrases it, because it is essential to the spread of that civilization that at many points it should proceed by way of compromise. And here we would add also another reason for this practical conclusion. Although we have ungrudgingly admitted that as a whole the modern civilization of Europe is superior to our ancient civilization, we do not admit the proposition, which is another and quite a different one, that on every single point the civilization of our rulers is superior to our own. And this proposition, which we say we do not admit, will, we venture to think, be also rejected by some of the best intellects among our rulers themselves. Whether or not we can include Sir James Stephen among those who will reject it, we are unable to say. At all events the position we hold on the practical question discussed by Sir James Stephen is partly due to the opinion which we entertain upon this point and which we have now stated. Mr. Justice Stephen enumerates certain instances of what he means by open uncompromising assertions of superiority on the part of the British Government in India. The reference to free trade among them is, we should say, somewhat unlucky for his argument, as at this very moment the "leading public men" of his country, after having enforced what they called free trade upon us,—we do not admit that the question of Free Trade as against Protection arose there at all—but after having, we say, enforced this so-called free trade upon us, they are still themselves languishing in a condition of economical inferiority, by keeping up their own duties on Indian-made silver plate. And these they are keeping up, be it remembered, in the face of protests from their own brethren in India, which they dispose of in a notably patronising and cavalier style by declaring that they have read them with great interest, and that they cannot be allowed to mould the financial policy of the Imperial Government! We will venture to submit to Mr. Justice Stephen, that it is not "monstrous" to deny, that this so-called enforcement of free trade in India was right when regard is had to the fact that the same Government—not in name but in reality the same—declines to go in for a similar "enforcement of free-trade" in England. We do not wish now to go through Sir James Stephen's other instances, for we substantially agree with him as regards the abolition of sati, the laws against infanticide, and the laws against civil disabilities arising in consequence of a change in religion. But we cannot accept them as involving an "uncompromising" assertion of British superiority, while, for instance, toleration is extended to such practices of ours as burning the dead, child marriages, or disfiguring of widows, or while the religions of the people continue uninterfered with. We hold that the Government is acting wisely in extending this toleration, though some of the things tolerated are worse, while others, we maintain, are better than the corresponding practices of Englishmen. And we say that in so far as the Government does tolerate them, it is omitting to make an "uncompromising" assertion of its superiority in the only sense in which such assertion is objected to by us. We maintain that the principles of Government need not be different in India from what they are in England in consequence of this country being a conquered country. And we maintain this, because, firstly, the fact of conquest is irrelevant where the civilization of the governors is superior to that of the governed, and the superior civilization must generally prevail, whether the Government is one based on conquest or on consent; because, secondly, even if it were relevant, it would not in the majority of cases render it either unnecessary or inexpedient that regard should be had to the feelings and opinions of the subject populations; and because, thirdly, the subject populations in the particular case to be here dealt with are not devoid of histories and traditions and civilizations of their own. "To the natives of India," says Mr. Justice Stephen, "the substantive" (Government) "involves the adjective" (absolute). We join issue with him on that point. And in the first place we beg to point out that the use of the last word "law" seems rather to indicate that even this eminent philosophical jurist has been taking a somewhat narrow view of the question,—a view from the standpoint rather of English circumstances and English history than of the general principles of political science. But waiving this, which is not a very material point in the present discussion, we think that the remarks of Sir James Stephen with which we are now dealing proceed on a view of the actual activity of governments or sovereigns which has little or no application to our country whether under Hindu or Musalmán rule. In those days the functions of the imperial government were by no means so all-pervading and so centralising as they are under our present administration. The village communities were then, it may be almost said, everything. Now, it may be almost said, they are nothing. And the village community was not an absolute government but a democracy, if we may apply so modern a term to an order of ideas which belongs to a different historical plane. In corroboration of the proposition enunciated by Mr. Justice Stephen regarding the necessity of absolute government in India, he adduces some more circumstances, viz., that the whole population, "with exceptions in point of number too trifling to mention, are ignorant to the last degree, according to any European standard of knowledge. Most of them are under the dominion of grovelling superstitions. The majority are divided into castes, each man's caste forming his world. Most of them are also practically fatalists; impatient in many instances of the burden of existence. They are moreover divided amongst themselves in all manner of ways. Mahomedans, Hindus, Sikhs, Up-countrymen and Bengalis are in many ways inimical to each other, and the peace is kept between them only by the efforts of their common superior." This is a goodly catalogue of sins to run up against the Indian people. How much of it is just? In the first place, why are our countrymen to be judged, as regards their knowledge or ignorance, by any European standard? We have always expressed, and in this article we have expressed again, our ungrudging acceptance of the opinion that the European civilization is in many and important respects superior to our own civilization. And therefore we trust we shall not be misunderstood if we ask why European standards must necessarily be applied in testing our capacity for living under a government that shall not be absolute. The substance of this argument has become familiar to us recently in connection with the discussions on the subject of local self-government. But the answer to it is, we venture to think, perfectly obvious. Ignorance even to the last degree according to any European standard is quite compatible with great natural intelligence, a considerable amount of public spirit and independence within certain limits, and above all with a real knowledge of the circumstances of the population to be governed, which the cream of the cream of these foreign officials who have been highly educated according to European standards do not always succeed in acquiring, for all the airs they give themselves, and for all the encomiums they unblushingly shower upon each other as constituting "the best Civil Service in the world." The same defence must prevail against most of the other counts in Mr. Justice Stephen's long indictment against our countrymen. We have no wish to deny the existence of the sins enumerated by him; but we contend that they cannot be justly held to disqualify us for the entire functions of the subjects of a constitutional government with a certain perceptible popular element in it—except in the eyes of those who take what we cannot help characterizing as a too narrow-minded view of the question. It is quite true that we are divided into castes, but it is not quite true that to the majority the caste forms the world—which means, we presume, that the majority take no interest, and are not qualified to take an interest, in other than caste matters. This, we say, is not true, and in so far as it is true, we have to consider against it the equally true proposition that among the bureaucrats who govern the country there are several who act as if they belonged to an official caste, that caste forming their world. We could point out to Sir James Stephen sundry eminent Anglo-Indians who may be said to have given to such a caste what was meant for the empire. But to proceed: what Sir James says about fatalism is doubtless true, but it is only true with much qualification. Fatalism is a principle which, even when it operates amongst us, does not come into play until after a certain stage of helplessness has been reached. That it should come into play even then is of course a defect in the national character. But it is not really so great a one in practice as is sometimes imagined. Lastly, when Sir James Stephen talks of our divisions inter se, he again, in our judgment, grossly overstates the case. What he means by " Hindus, Sikhs, Up-countrymen and Bengalis," we must leave him to explain. We cannot explain a division which a European may compare with such a division as Protestants, Roman Catholics, Englishmen and Frenchmen. But admitting the real divisions which do exist among us, and which are in all conscience numerous enough not to need artificial additions like these which Mr. Justice Stephen makes to their number, we fail to see how they afford any ground whatever for a demand that the Government of India must be absolute. We confess that we have read Sir F. Stephen's observations on this point in the place now under discussion, and also again with reference to the feasibility of an Indian representative assembly, with some pain. They seem to us—we may be wrong and hope we are wrong—but they do seem to us to be amplifications of the old discredited principle—divide and rule. We must therefore pass from this subject, only lodging a protest against the exaggeration of facts involved in Mr. Justice Stephen's remarks upon this point and against the fallacy of reasoning involved in his inferences. And here we may perhaps deal with Sir James Stephen's glowing encomium on the merits of absolute government. No one that we know of has ever denied that there are certain merits belonging to all centralized power, especially when it is centralized in hands which can wield it well and wield it to good purpose. At all events it is sufficient to say here that we do not dispute the merits of centralized rule. We are also content to admit, though with qualifications which need not now be dwelt on, that absolute rule is not necessarily " cruel, indifferent to the interests of its subjects, or arbitrary and violent in its measures." But beyond this we are not prepared to go. An absolute government is not necessarily cruel and so forth, but the chances are a hundred to one that it will go astray in these directions before very long in its career. It is a commonplace in the philosophy of history that a succession of good and enlightened despots—which we take to be only another name for the heads of an absolute government—that such a succession cannot be safely reckoned upon. The same race, the same family, which produced an Akbar also gave birth to an Aurangzeb; and the second Bájiráo Peshwa was called, in the course of devolution, to degrade and destroy the very authority which his namesake, the Great Bájiráo, had rendered stable and dignified. The histories of other nations and other times will doubtless readily furnish parallels. We fail to see anything in Mr. Justice Stephen's arguments on this head that even attempts to grapple with this very obvious lesson of all history. He descants on the merits of absolute governments and denies certain supposed demerits. But he seems to us to fail to deal with the great demerit of an absolute government possessed of the merits he expatiates upon, namely, its want of permanency, its strong tendency to degenerate into an absolute government minus the merits in question. And yet this strong tendency is obviously a cardinal point in the whole case. Again, there is another objectionable aspect of absolute government which Mr. Justice Stephen fails even to glance at in the paper before us. It is involved in the same feature, viz. impermanency, but in a different mode. It is plain that the possession of absolute power has an almost irremediable tendency to demoralize the possessor. And therefore not only are the merits of absolute government impermanent in the sense of being such as cannot be trusted to devolve on those upon whom the powers of the government itself devolve, but they are further impermanent in this sense that the imperfections of our common nature, almost inevitably in the large majority of cases, are ever tending to destroy them, or to transmute them into the answering defects. Strength of resolution is ever apt to degenerate into pig-headedness and obstinacy; self-confidence into a contempt of other people's views; consciousness of ability into a deliberate blindness to new light. What is there in the conditions of absolute government anywhere, what is there in the conditions in this country, which is to provide the necessary safeguards against these evils? We take it that it is quite impossible to deny that such safeguards are desirable, or rather we should say indispensable. How does the form of government which Sir James Stephen admires so much provide these safeguards? We see no indication in his papers which can guide us to any answer to these questions. The Marquis of Salisbury might not unfairly be held to represent a school of political thinkers who think that national morality is quite distinct from, and out of all relation with, individual morality. The present writer knows from personal conversation of at least one or two Anglo-Indian non-officials who seem to hold what is in substance the same view. With that school of thinkers it would be profitless for us to argue. But if we brush aside from the present discussion these cobwebs woven by a sordid political morality, only that form of government, or generally only that form of the exercise of power by man over his brother man, can be deemed to be legitimate, which can be shown to be for the benefit of the objects over whom it is exercised. In this matter, we venture to think, no other principle is applicable. And we have endeavoured to show before that absolute government is not in the long run beneficial to the governed, because from two different points of view it appears to be wanting in one great requisite of a government that shall be beneficial to its subjects, namely, a certain reasonable ground for confidence that the elements of good in it will be durable. Mr. Justice Stephen says that if absolute government is "suited to the circumstances and tastes of those among whom it exists, there is no reason why those who administer it should seek to substitute for it a representative system, or should feel in any respect ashamed of their position as absolute rulers, or desirous to lay it down." We beg to submit on the other side that if "the absolute government suited to the circumstances and tastes" of its subjects, of which Sir James Stephen is so enamoured, is really good, it must necessarily, as human nature is constituted, evoke tastes and bring about states of circumstances to which it will not be suitable. If it gives the benefits of education to its subjects; if it declines to place any artificial barriers in the way of some particular classes, or special privileges in the possession of others;—if, in one word, it follows a reasonably liberal policy, the duration of that government as an absolute government must, we take it, be then very limited. And, if so, it must be the aim of all statesmen charged with the conduct of the absolute government in question to provide for the time when that period of duration must come to an end. This they would be doing if they planted the first seeds of a representative system, on however limited a scale, as to extent as well as power and authority. If such preparation is made by any absolute government, it will not necessarily be from any "feeling of shame about their position." We should say that this introduction of "the feeling of shame" into the matter involves an utter misstatement of the true position of the question, just in the same way as it was an utter misstatement of the true position of the question as regards official chairmen in our new local boards, to argue that a demand that officials should be excluded by law from the chairmanship of the boards was a piece of ingratitude to the officials who had worked as chairmen in times past. There is no ingratitude and no shame whatever in the matter. What is called a manifestation of shame in the one case and ingratitude in the other is really the outcome of an effort to prepare for what we consider to be the higher form of government, what Sir James Stephen probably considers to be a lower form, but what we say is the form, whether higher or lower, into which the pre-existing form will in the long run develop itself, and must be permitted to develop itself.

Gives reason for the popularity of Lord Ripon among Natives.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 25th May says:—An Anglo-Indian contemporary wonders how the Viceroy has managed to become so universally popular with the Native community, when the latter know that he has not been able to do all that they expected he would do in the interests of good government. The reason is this. Natives make large allowance for the position in which a ruler finds himself. We are satisfied that Lord Ripon is anxious to discharge the duties with which he was entrusted by his gracious sovereign before he came out to India. But in the presence of sinister opposition from within and without His Excellency often finds himself powerless to move. We know he has the will to practically obey Her Majesty's instructions, and we take the will for the act. This appears to be the secret of Lord Ripon's popularity as a ruler. Personally the Viceroy is more popular than perhaps any of his predecessors. And our Anglo-Indian contemporary need not be surprised to hear that the high regard on the part of the Native population is in a measure the effect of the systematic persecution to which Anglo-Indians of a certain class have submitted Her Majesty's representative in India. They have abused and vilified him because he is a Catholic, because he has tried to enforce the laws of the land, because he has attempted to ameliorate the condition of the masses. They have accused him of impossible crimes, they have circulated vile rumours to his detriment. They have ridiculed him and misrepresented his acts. They have made him the victim of numerous accidents, and at last they have killed him! Now, if these newspaper scribes knew anything of human nature, they could not but anticipate that the result of this organized opposition would be an intense personal regard from Natives. A prominent citizen of Bombay once spoke of the Viceroy as lord Buddha. And so he is to Natives—good and just, and therefore persecuted by the wicked and the selfish, but too much of a buddha (enlightened soul) in himself to mind such persecution.

Expression of opinion that increase in the export and import trade of India is no indication of the prosperity of the people.

In an article headed "The spoliation of India," the Mahrátta (2) of the 25th May alludes to the excess of exports over imports in the trade of India, and says:—If this growth of the foreign trade had been natural and free, it would no doubt have indicated an increase in the prosperity of the Indian people. But a closer examination of the causes of this growth shows that it is forced and unnatural. A thousand industries providing food and clothing to millions of the people are suddenly ruined by the contact with a race superior both in intelligence and skill to the Native manufacturers. Millions of people are in the course of less than a quarter of a century forced to abandon their industries and fall back upon the soil for their livelihood. Naturally a demand arises for the articles of foreign industries and the imports are increased. Besides this, the rulers of this country, who absorb a large amount of the annual revenue, have very few wants in common with the people among whom they live. Native industries, even those which yet survive, are little useful to them or encouraged by them. Their demand is wholly for foreign articles. Thus the import trade is constantly increasing on account of the very attempt of the people to supply their necessities and those of their rulers, but by no means because they have any more purchasing power than before. The export trade must correspondingly increase; but in India it has increased, and is increasing, in such a manner that the excess of the exports over the imports is constantly increasing, while in all free nations the contrary is the case, America being the only important exception. But the excess of exports over imports in America goes to pay off its debt, while that of India to pay the ruinously costly services of her white rulers. Thus the great increase in India's foreign trade does not at all indicate growing prosperity among the people, but on the contrary it indicates the loss and ruin of their industries in a competition with a more civilized nation, while the constantly increasing excess of exports over imports indicates the additional burdens to which her rulers are subjecting her, either from selfishness or from a desire to carry out their own ideas of the safety of the empire, not minding how far they are suited to the welfare of the people.

Advises the people to continue agitating the question of the limit of age of candidates for the Indian Civil Service Examination.

In a paragraph headed "Age-limit for the Civil Service," the Native Opinion (11) of the 25th May says:—Meetings to protest against Lord Kimberley's reply to the Indian Committee's representation is the order of the day in Northern India, while we on our side are dozing in a mood of happy complaisance as if there were nothing to put us on our mettle in deference to our own rights and privileges. The most imperialistic of our Viceroys, we mean Lord Lytton, has recently declared that his regulations were intended particularly to give effect to Her Majesty's declared intentions—those of giving greater facilities for a larger employment of Natives in the covenanted and uncovenanted services. The evidence of a Conservative Viceroy that a larger admission of Natives into the above services is a crying necessity is an additional reason why we should unanimously force our claims upon the attention both of Parliament and the Secretary of State. The Government of India cannot be unfavourably disposed; neither can we say that Parliament will not listen to our representations. What we urgently require is an united effort on our part to secure what we most assuredly deserve. If we did not hitherto gain our point, it was owing to our lethargy and indifferent action in the matter; let us open our eyes and see that our indifference is cutting the ground from under our own feet. [The Gujaráti (98) of the 25th and the Broach Samáchár (89) of the 29th May exhort the people of Bombay to hold a public meeting and memorialize Parliament to raise the limit of age of candidates for the Civil Service Examination. The Ahmedabad Samáchár (83) of the 28th May makes a similar exhortation to the people of Ahmedabad.]

Says that Government should appoint a commission to devise schemes for the commencement of manufacturing industries in India.

In a paragraph headed "Poverty of the Indian Ryot," the Native Opinion (11) of the 25th May, says:—Perhaps the Government of India will do well to take a note of what Mr. Mackenzie of the Madras Chamber of Commerce suggested as a means for the improvement of the Indian ryot. It is not an increase, as some suppose, in the area of cultivation that can bring about the desired change; it may give us an increased food-supply, but that will be absorbed by a proportionate increase in the number of mouths to be fed. If a change in his condition is at all to be desired, let Government draw away a proportion of our superfluous population and employ them in various industries, which they should undertake to initiate at least in the beginning. A commission to devise a scheme for the initiation of different industries would be of greater usefulness than the present committee which is dealing with the question of railway extension in India, which simply means increase in our exports and a consequent supply of cheap food for some European countries, particularly England. Development in this direction does not mean a development of our resources in their proper sense. Unless such development is followed by agricultural prosperity, the meaning now attached to it is a mere perversion of the term.

Advocates the disestablishment of the English church in India.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 26th May, in a Maráthi article headed "The Government Christian Church establishment in India," observes that it is clear from various indications that the English people are governing India solely for their own benefit and with no other object. But notwithstanding this patent fact, it cannot be denied that there are some Englishmen who wish to deal justly with the natives of this country and that they are doing everything in their power to accomplish that end. Lord Ripon is one of those who wishes to do justice to the inhabitants of India. He is most anxious that the revenues of India should be spent for the benefit of India and for no other object. The Indu Prakásh here refers to the recently published despatches from the Government of India to the Secretary of State on the question of the disestablishment of the English church in India, and after giving the substance of its contents remarks that Lord Ripon's views are thoroughly practical and sound. If ministers of the Christian religion are required to offer religious instruction to English soldiers, then is it not incumbent on Government to employ ministers of the various Indian religions to give religious ministrations to Native soldiers? The English people themselves have acknowledged that their Indian empire has been gained with the assistance of the Native soldiers. This being so, is it not right to offer them religious instruction in order to increase their loyalty and fidelity to the paramount power? Is there any good resulting from the maintenance of the Christian religious establishment in India? The conduct of the Christian community during the agitation on the Ilbert Bill is well-known. On this occasion the Europeans did not exhibit any of the Christian virtues. The money spent in keeping up the Christian church establishment has been absolutely wasted. It would be well if the funds appropriated to the maintenance of the church establishment in India were diverted to educational purposes. [The Gujaráti (98) of the 25th May considers the funds devoted to the maintenance of the English church in India as an unnecessary and unjust appropriation of the public revenues and opposed to the Queen's proclamation of 1858. It advises the public to continue supplying information to Mr. Baxter and to get the subject discussed in Parliament so that the heavy charges now borne by India on account of the ecclesiastical establishments may be somewhat reduced. The Suryă Prakásh (82) of the 24th May expresses similar sentiments.]

Advocates the disestablishment of the English church in India.

The Dnyánodayă (8) of the 29th May says:—The proposal for disestablishment has now come into the range of practical politics in India. Would that all concerned might courageously yield to the inevitable! On grounds of policy chaplains for British troops can well be retained, but we do not see why even in presidency towns officials and merchants connected with the church of England should not support their own church establishments just as those connected with other denominations do. We believe it to be an advantage to these bodies that they have no Government connection, and anticipate that the church of England will have the same feeling eventually.

Disapproves of the annual visits of the Viceroy and Governors of presidencies to the hills.

With reference to the call made by a member of Parliament on the Secretary of State for India for a statement showing the total cost incurred by the Government of India on account of the annual visits of the Viceroy and the Governors of presidencies to the hills since the assumption of the direct rule over India by the Crown, the Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 26th May observes that if the statement showed the travelling allowances of the officials, the cost of the buildings provided for their residence, the money spent for furnishing these buildings, and other expenses incurred on account of the Viceregal and gubernatorial sojourns, the total would come to an enormous amount and would vividly show how the taxes collected from the Indian ryot are misspent. It is asserted on the one hand that the official sojourns to the hills are quite unnecessary and are not at all beneficial to the people, while on the other hand it is stated that the climate of presidency towns becomes unhealthy in the hot season and then the officials are compelled to visit the hills for the preservation of their health. The latter statement is not correct. All the presidency towns have good climate, and are kept very clean by their respective municipalities. The Viceregal and gubernatorial residences are built in the best and healthiest parts of the presidency towns. Many Natives and Europeans spend the whole year in these towns, and their health is not appreciably badly affected by their residence in them. The Viceregal and gubernatorial visits to the hills also cause delay in the transaction of public business.

Costliness of the migration of the Supreme Government to Simla and remarks in connection therewith.

In a paragraph headed "Annual Sojourn in Simla," the Subodh Patrika (15) of the 25th May says:—We learn that on the 1st instant Mr. Gorst asked the Under Secretary of State for India in Parliament whether he could furnish returns of the dates of the annual migration of the Government of India to Simla and of its return thence to Calcutta since 1858, as well as of the extra annual cost that was incurred in consequence. Mr. Cross thereupon promised to get the same from the Government of India as there were no papers at the India Office from which they could be furnished. Will anything come out of this? We cannot say. But surely these annual sojourns to Simla for a great portion of the year are very expensive and do considerably impede work. Either the period of stay in Simla should be shortened or some place nearer Calcutta should, if possible, be substituted for it, in the interests of the Indian tax-payer and of good government. And to whom can we look with better hope for taking steps to bring about the change than to Lord Ripon himself? We have great confidence in his sense of justice and in his anxiety for the welfare of the people committed to his charge.

Condemns the Arms Act.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 28th May observes that since only a few policemen are placed in charge of a cluster of villages, they are therefore not able to oppose a gang of dacoits when the villages are attacked by them. The policemen therefore remain quiet while the dacoits are plundering their victims, and after the robbers have retired they (policemen) go and give information about the dacoity to the nearest police station. The police then go in search of the dacoits, but seldom succeed in apprehending them. It is true that Government cannot station a large number of policemen in every village. The existing arrangements about the police are similar to those existing in the civilized countries of Europe and America. But the people of the latter countries are not prohibited from keeping weapons to protect themselves whenever they are attacked by robbers. Since the passing of the Indian Arms Act the people have been prohibited from keeping weapons, and this has emboldened robbers and dacoits, who ply their nefarious trade with vigour. The Arms Act is a great mistake and it is to be regretted that it has been hitherto allowed to remain in force. The Act has only deprived quiet people of their weapons, but it has not been instrumental in putting down robbers and dacoits. It looks rather strange that while Government enlist in the army Beluchis, Afghans, Sikhs and Gorkhas and entrust them with arms of a superior kind, and are well aware that they cannot completely disarm robbers and dacoits, they should object to the peaceable and loyal subjects possessing weapons for their own protection. There is no country in the world except India the Government of which distrust their subjects and deprive them of their arms. Under these circumstances it is to be hoped that Lord Ripon and Mr. Gladstone will not fail to remove the blot of the Arms Act from the British administration of India. [The Dátardun (92) of the 29th May also prays for the repeal of the Arms Act.]

The honours bestowed on the Queen's birth-day.

In noticing the bestowal of titles on the Queen's birth-day, the Gujaráti (95) of the 25th and the Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 26th May express satisfaction with the honours conferred on Sir Jamsetji Jijibhái and the Honourable Mr. Telang, and observe that Mr. Perozsháh Merwánji Mehta, the Honourable Mr. Nánábhái Haridás, and Professor Dádábhái Nawroji ought to have received similar honours. The Samáchár says that Mr. Mehta is an able lawyer and has rendered quite as valuable services to the public as Mr. Telang. The Honourable Mr. Nánábhái has long discharged the duties of a High Court Judge to the satisfaction of Government and the public, and his claims ought not to have been overlooked. The valuable services rendered to the public by Professor Dádábhái are also well known. The Native press has several times placed his claims to a title before Government. It is therefore to be hoped that at the next bestowal of the birth-day honours the claims of these gentlemen will not be overlooked. The Honourable Mr. Gonne no doubt quietly discharged the duties of the office of Chief Secretary to Government, but did not do useful service either to Native or to the people of Bombay. The bestowal of a title on him cannot therefore be recorded with much gratification. On the other hand, the creation of Dr. Hunter as a Companion of the Star of India has given great satisfaction to Natives, whose well-wisher the Doctor has been and to whom he has rendered valuable services. [The Jáme Jamshed (102) of the same date and a correspondent of the Jáme of the 27th May also express much gratification with the bestowal of honours on Sir Jamsetji Jijibhái and the Honourable Mr. Káshináth Trimbak Telang. The Jáme, however, regrets that Mr. Perozsha Merwánji Mehta was not honoured with a title, and the correspondent of the Jáme expresses dissatisfaction at the omission of Mr. Dinshaw Mánakji Petit from similar honours, praising highly Mr. Dinshaw's liberal charities. The Jáme of the 26th May moreover complains that as usual this year's Birth-day Gazette has been more gracious to the officers of Bengal and the Panjáb than to those of Bombay and Madras. Some small titles are bestowed on a number of persons residing in Bengal or the Panjáb, not a single individual of the Bombay Presidency has been honoured with a similar favour. Three individuals of Bengal have been made Companions of the Indian Empire, whereas one gentleman alone of Bombay has received the same title. While the officers of the Educational Departments of the Panjáb, Bengal, Madras and even Coorg have been liberally rewarded, Bombay has been completely passed over as regards its Educational officers. After advancing the claims of Professor Wordsworth to a title, the Jáme disapproves of the bestowal of titles on Native Princes and Chiefs, and observes that the Honourable Mr. Thompson, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, has no claims whatever to a birth-day honour which his friends and admirers have been so anxiously desiring he should get.]

Says that no delay should be made in improving the defences of Bombay.

The Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 25th May observes:—Those having any considerable interest in the wealth and general prosperity of Bombay must feel thankful to the Times of India for its energetic and persevering advocacy in the matter of securing to this city more effective defence works than it is supposed to have. The city has in fact no defence works to protect it against the naval demonstration of a foreign enemy. It is simply amazing how the capitalists, merchants and owners of property of such immense value as there is in Bombay go on year after year quietly putting up with the utterly undefended situation of the port and city. Such is the general apathy on the subject that it is hard to awaken even those who run the greatest risk from the unsatisfactory state of affairs to a sense of their danger. While the people continue to be thus careless and apathetic, the Government appears satisfied with doing what is worse than useless, as will be clearly seen from the able remarks on the subject made by the Times of India of Wednesday last. The Native associations and other friends of the country, and the advocates of economy in the public expenditure and of efficiency in the national defences, would do well to pay due attention to the subject. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (105) of the same date expresses somewhat similar sentiments.]

Advises Government to find out a place suitable for the location of the lepers in Bombay.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 27th May heartily approves of the refusal of the Bombay Government to allot a spot on either the Sion, Mátunga, Siwri or Warli hills for the location of the patients suffering from black leprosy, and observes that the Catholic priest who has undertaken the charitable work of providing for the incurables ought not to be put to the trouble of finding out a place which would be unobjectionable for the location of the lepers. Government should ascertain what place would be suitable for the leper hospital, and if this is done, there will be very little delay in providing a good locality for the lepers.

Says that payment of rent in kind is becoming a growing necessity in the case of cultivators.

In a paragraph headed "Our Revenue Assessments," the Native Opinion (11) of the 25th May says:—Another champion has appeared in defence of our system of cash payments by the cultivating ryots. He argues that because every transaction of the ryot with his neighbour is done in grain, the payment of rent to Government should necessarily be in money. But the very nature of his transactions in kind proves that he has no money to pay, and when he is compelled to do that, he has either to sell his grain at a disadvantage or pay the much-abused Bania a high rate of interest for the same. Under the circumstances the ryot is between two stools having no choice but to pay the amount of assessment in hard cash. But if the rent were paid in kind, its incidence in respect of his circumstances would be commensurate with his annual outturn, and so he will not feel the pinch of a cash payment. The rate of Government assessment is crushing in the first instance, and so this difficulty of payment is still more heightened by the exorbitant rate of interest at which he has to borrow. This double strain on the means of the ryot can easily be avoided, if the amelioration of his condition be really at heart, by the introduction of rent payments in kind. Whatever Mr. Brownlow Fforde may urge in favour of his pet line of argument, the ryot's very inability to keep any money transactions with his neighbours proves the argument that rent payment in kind is becoming a growing necessity in the case of our agriculturists.

Is of opinion that the Native Princes and Chiefs of this Presidency should not be called upon to contribute to the guarantee fund of the coming Bombay International Exhibition.

The Jáme Jamshed (102) of the 26th May observes that it is not right to call upon the Native Chiefs and Princes of this Presidency to contribute to the guarantee fund of the Bombay International Exhibition, since the territories of these princes will not receive any appreciable benefit from the exhibition and the Chiefs themselves are not in a thriving condition. The Thákor of Bhávnagar has subscribed Rs. 50,000 to the fund, but other Chiefs are not so rich. The local railway companies, steamer companies, and the cotton and other mills will receive the greatest benefit from the exhibition, and they should contribute large sums. The poor Native Princes and Chiefs should not be made to incur a risk even on account of the guarantee fund. [The Yajdán Parast (125) of the 25th May expresses similar sentiments.]

Says that the Bhandáris or toddy and country spirit sellers of Bombay ought to get the redress for which they have memorialized Government.

With reference to the memorial submitted to Government by certain Bhandáris or toddy and country liquor sellers of Bombay praying that a reduction be made in the duty levied on toddy and that the severity of the rules for the sale of spirits be relaxed, the Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 30th May observes that the memorialists complain that the heavy duty on toddy and the stringent rules for its sale have ruined their business and a number of them have given it up, and this complaint of theirs is well-founded. If the memorialists are refused the relief for which they pray, the Bhandári toddy and spirits sellers will be completely ruined. The heaviness of the duties levied on toddy and spirits and the stringency of the rules are felt not only by the Bhandáris but by other classes also, who too have been complaining against them. Notwithstanding this fact some persons enter into the business of toddy and spirits selling with great eagerness and secure shops for their sales by bidding large sums for them. This anomaly can however be explained away. Some persons stick to the business because it has continued in their families for a number of years; others take to this trade because they cannot follow any other; while some follow this calling at a loss, which they make up from the profits earned by them in some other trade. The memorialists state that the number of Pársi liquor shops has increased in proportion to the decrease of the Bhandári liquor shops, and that the Pársi liquor sellers are thriving. This statement may be true, as the Pársis are more intelligent than the Bhandáris in achieving success in business, and keep liquor shops on a scale larger than the Bhandáris can keep. But the Pársi liquor sellers also complain that the business has become a losing concern.

Suggests the appointment of a bench of Honorary Magistrates at Sholápur unconnected with the municipality for the disposal of municipal cases and petty crimes.

The Kalpataru (36) of the 25th May says that the District Magistrate has recommended Government to appoint Ráo Báhádur Appáji Ráoji Degaumkar as Honorary Magistrate at Sholápur for deciding municipal cases. The selection is unexceptionable, but it would be better if a bench of Honorary Magistrates were formed at Sholápur for the prompt decision of municipal cases and petty crimes. Benches of magistrates for the disposal of petty criminal cases and municipal disputes already exist in Dhárwár, Pandharpur and other places, and there is no reason why a similar institution should not be established at Sholápur. The Honorary Magistrates should be selected from among those who are not municipal commissioners. By appointing municipal commissioners to adjudicate upon municipal cases it would seem as if complainants would have to sit in judgment on accused parties. The Kalpataru trusts that a bench of magistrates unconnected with the municipality will be appointed to decide municipal cases and petty crimes.

Requests Government to reconsider their decision in the matter of the transfer of Mr. Adarji Jivanji to the Panch Mahâls.

The Suryă Prakâsh (82) of the 24th May says that the people of Surat are very much displeased with the transfer of Mr. Adarji to the Panch Mahâls, for he had won their love by his affability and justice. It is said that frauds were practised in the distillery prior to his appointment at Surat. He is not the only person to be blamed in the matter, for Mr. White is an old officer of Surat, and it was his first duty to look after the management of the distillery. It is not creditable to Government that a Native Magistrate should be held responsible for the frauds, irrespective of the officer whose duty it was to attend to the supervision. The people of Surat are going to memorialize Government in favour of Mr. Adarji. Government ought to reconsider their decision and re-appoint Mr. Adarji to his original post. By so doing many Native officers will be pleased to find that justice will be always done to them.

Strange conduct of the Deputy Educational Inspector of Dhárwár under certain circumstances.

The Chháva (23) in its issues of 18th and 25th May states that on the morning of the 16th May a barber named Jotiba was shaving one Somáji, a servant of Swamiráo Tolmati Vakil, on the premises of the Kánarese school near the library at Dhárwár. The master of the school, named Vajepe, saw what was being done but contented himself with blaming the barber and Somáji. In the meantime the Deputy Educational Inspector, Mr. Shriniwás Rámchandra Rodh, arrived at the school premises, and observing what was going on struck with his stick both the barber and Somáji. He however did not stop here, but hit, it is said, the master of the Kánarese school with his stick. The Chháva expresses dissatisfaction with the conduct of the Deputy Educational Inspector, and observes that the impropriety of striking the master in the presence of his pupils did not present itself to his mind.

Requests Government to send other than Bráhman officials to the Junnar Táluka on account of the feud which exists between Bráhmans and the cultivating classes.

The Din Bandhu (6) of the 25th May says that the inhabitants of about forty villages in the Junnar Táluka of the Poona Collectorate having agreed among themselves to have marriages and other religious ceremonies performed without the aid of Bráhman priests are in the greatest dread of the authorities who are almost all Bráhmans. Already three hundred marriages have taken place in which the aid of the Bráhman priests was not sought. The Bráhmans used to charge from ten to twenty rupees for performing each marriage ceremony, and in case of the inability of the ryot to make the payment they used to take bonds for the amount as if the sum was actually lent in cash, and as a collateral security the land of the agriculturist was mortgaged. The Bráhmans in their greed have surpassed the Márwádis. The lands of the agriculturists in the village of Utúr have been thus wrested from their owners by the Bráhmans. The Bráhman money-lenders keep their eye on the acquisition of the landed property of the ryots. In the village of Utúr the relations between the Bráhman and the cultivator are strained. The former will endeavour to do all in his power to annoy the latter. In the Junnar Táluka all the officials are Bráhmans, and consequently it is impossible for those cultivators who are opposed to Bráhmans, to obtain justice. The Din Bandhu trusts that officials of other castes besides Bráhmans will be sent to the Junnar Táluka.

Says that a large number of labourers are being caught and forcibly made to work in the repairs which are being made to the tank at Waghad in the Násik Collectorate.

The Násik Vritt (46) of the 24th May says that large numbers of labourers are being forcibly collected and made to work in the repairs which are being made to the dam of the Waghad tank situated in the Dindori Táluka of the Násik Collectorate. Much oppression is practised in collecting labourers, who are mostly agriculturists. Owing to the approach of the monsoon they are required to work in their own fields in order to prepare them for raising crops and also for thatching the roofs of their houses. It is said that the inhabitants of villages are lying concealed in order to avoid being forcibly taken away. It would be well if Government were to take due notice of the reprehensible practice of pressing labourers into service against their own will.

Prevalence of cholera of a bad type in the villages of Dánti and Dhorái near Bulsár.

A correspondent of the Gujarát Mitră (79) of the 25th May, writing from Bulsár under date the 23rd idem, states that cholera has been prevailing for the last twenty days in the villages of Dánti and Dhorái, which are inhabited solely by fishermen, and about fifty persons have fallen victims to the epidemic. Nobody seems to care for these unfortunate villagers.

Suggestion for the curtailment of the number of working hours of labourers in the cotton and other mills in Bombay.

In alluding to the report that Government intend to appoint a committee to enquire into the complaint that the mill-labourers in Bombay are overworked, the Jáme Jamshed (102) of the 31st May observes that there is no doubt that the mill hands are overworked. Some persons however remark that the labourers work hard willingly, and if the number of hours for which they work is curtailed they will suffer a pecuniary loss. This argument may be met by the assertion that the workmen should not be allowed to work so hard as to injure their health. Persons experienced in mill work observe that the labourers will do in ten hours the same quantity of work as is done by them now-a-days in twelve hours, and the proposed committee ought to make a careful enquiry on this point. The committee should be composed of independent gentlemen and should visit all the cotton mills. It should take the evidence of proprietors of the mills, experienced medical practitioners, benevolent persons, and of intelligent mill-labourers, and then submit a report to Government. It is said that Government intend to enquire whether or not the mill buildings are sufficiently airy and commodious. There is no use in reviving the question, as the late Mill Inspector has already reported that the factories are so well built as to duly preserve the health of the labourers working in them. It would be well were the committee to enquire and ascertain what loss would be incurred by the proprietors of the mills and how much would the health of the mill-labourers be benefited if the mills were closed on Sundays and the labourers made to work daily from 7 o'clock in the morning to 12 noon, and from 1 in the afternoon to 5-30 in the evening; what arrangements should be made as regards accidents occurring to the mill hands; what should be done for the proper education of the children working in the mills; and similar other matters. After receipt of the committee's report Government should enact a law prescribing the number of hours for which the mill hands should work daily.

Want of repairs to the road between Tuljápur and Sholápur.

A correspondent of the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 26th May says that in the Sholápur District on the road between Tuljápur and Sholápur a toll is levied on conveyances and animals, but unfortunately the road itself is neglected and is now in a state of disrepair. It would seem as if no repairs had been made to the road since it was first made. The correspondent trusts that immediate steps will be taken to make repairs to the road in question.

Expresses a hope that the cases of clerks in the Dhárwár Post Office who are under suspension may be decided without delay.

The Dhárwár Vritt (27) of the 22nd May says that some four months ago several clerks in the Post Office at Dhárwár were suspended from office, but no further action has been taken. The suspended clerks are waiting with anxiety to know their fate. The Dhárwár Vritt trusts that the Post Master General will not make any further delay in deciding their cases.

Railways.

Criticises the evidence given before the Select Committee on Indian railways by certain witnesses.

The Rást Goftár (112) of the 25th May observes that the enquiry that is being made by the Select Committee on Indian railways is one-sided as no Native witnesses who can represent Native public opinion have been examined by the Committee. However there is some hope of the enquiry proving somewhat beneficial, as the witnesses hitherto examined have shown the difficulties that would be experienced by the rapid extension of railways as recommended by the European merchants. The Government of India already annually spends 2½ krors of rupees on new railway lines, and would like to increase the expenditure to ten krors per annum; the European merchants however recommend that 20 krors should be laid out annually on such works. But the witnesses connected with the different Chambers of Commerce recently examined by the Committee have recommended that the annual expenditure should be between 5 and 8 krors. Most of the witnesses suggested that the proposed railway extension should be achieved by means of guaranteed railway companies formed in England. Mr. Bythel has however shown that the G. I. P. Railway Company considerably increased its carriage rates for goods since 1869 and placed hindrances in the way of the extension of commerce; and his commencing statement shows the great risk incurred in entrusting the construction of railways to guaranteed companies. The guaranteed interest will be a heavy burden on the Indian finances, and the oppressive conduct of the railway companies in the matter of goods rates will be unbearable. General Trevor has proved in his evidence that great loss has been incurred on account of the heavy charges for exchange. The Goftár heartily approves of the evidence given before the Committee by Mr. Donald Graham. With reference to the statement made before the Committee by Mr. Hardie that he was not aware that the natives of India objected to the rapid extension of railways, the Goftár observes that the statement is incorrect. Natives disapprove of the suggestion for the rapid extension, as the same if adopted would considerably increase the public debt of the country, and they have given expression to this opinion through the Native press. The multiplication of railway lines within reasonable bounds is highly desirable; but Natives look with contempt upon the selfish suggestion that poor India should be made to incur a heavy debt for the benefit of the manufacturers and merchants of England. India has been ruined by the system of guaranteeing interest on the capital of railways constructed by private companies. If railway lines in India earn profit, why should private companies seek the guarantee of Government? And if these companies cannot earn profit without Government guarantee, how can the railway lines be said to be profitable concerns?

Suggests that the Native Princes and Chiefs should be encouraged to construct railways in their respective territories.

With reference to the question of the rapid extension of Indian railways, the Gujarát Mitră (79) of the 25th May advises the Government to encourage the various Native Princes and Chiefs to construct railways in their respective territories. These feeders to the main lines should be made on the narrow guage and the Princes and Chiefs should provide the funds for constructing them. Wherever political, commercial or other considerations should require that the lines should be constructed on the broad guage, the paramount Government ought to bear a portion of the cost of the line.

Says that the services of Mr. Duxbury, the Traffic Manager of the B. B. & C. I. Railway, should not be dispensed with on the amalgamation of that line with the Rájputána-Málwa Railway.

The Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 25th May observes that a general satisfaction was expressed by Natives when they learnt that the amalgamation of the management of the B. B. & C. I. and the Rájputána-Málwa Railways would take place soon. But the feeling of exultation has toned down latterly, owing to the rumour that the much-desired change will occasion to the people of this country the loss of the valuable services of the present able and popular Traffic Manager of the B. B. & C. I. Railway. The rumour is to the effect that it is in contemplation to induce Mr. Duxbury to vacate the place that he has so long filled with great credit to himself, in order to make room for some one in the favour of persons high in office. It is impossible to say at present how far the rumour is true. But whatever may be the conditions about the proposed amalgamation of the management of the two railways, the removal of Mr. Duxbury from his post will be a gross blunder as regards the public interests, and not merely a matter of personal injustice to him alone. For the best justification for the amalgamation of the two lines may be supposed to lie in the good result of the management of the B. B. & C. I. Railway by Mr. Duxbury. It would therefore be a very extraordinary way of striving to secure similar results for the joint concern by first getting rid of the very gentleman whose ability and experience can alone be expected to vouchsafe the same to the highest degree. Indeed not merely because Mr. Duxbury has high claims on the gratitude of his employers and the public, but that it would be in accordance with common sense and to the interest of the latter that nothing should be allowed to take place that might preclude his being the head of the new or joint management of the two railways. Justice, economy and efficiency have been the principles on which he has acted all the while, and his ability and long experience, if allowed to influence the new management, will not fail to secure the happiest results to all concerned. We earnestly trust that the rumour to which we have referred may turn out groundless, and that the Native community will have the satisfaction of hearing the deservingly popular Traffic Manager of the Baroda Railway selected to be the head of the amalgamated management of the two lines named above. [The Kaiser-i-Hind (105) of the same date, a correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (102) of the 26th May, and the Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 31st May express similar sentiments.]

A suggestion to the G. I. P. Railway Company.

The Gujaráti (98) of the 25th May says that the permission given by the G. I. P. Railway authorities to Native ladies and gentlemen to travel together in the same carriages appears at first sight to be convenient for families. But if certain precautions be not taken, the convenience would prove harmful. There is great likelihood of low and disreputable people occupying the same carriages with respectable ladies and proving a nuisance to them. It would be better therefore if the Railway Company were to provide family carriages, in which ladies or women accompanied by the male members of their families only should be allowed to travel.

Municipalities.

Complains of the deficient water-supply of Bombay in the hot season.

The Káside Mumbai (107) of the 26th May says that water, good or bad, is not supplied in sufficient quantities to some parts of the town at this hot season of the year. The people complain of the conduct of the municipality in this matter, but it does not speak well for the municipal officers who do not care much for the quarters inhabited by poor men. A strong complaint is made at present regarding the deficient supply of water to some parts of Mázgaon. The condition of the road in Navgar Street, Mázgaon, is so very bad that pedestrians cannot go over it at night without stumbling. The residents of that street petitioned the municipality 12 months ago to provide them with light, but no definite answer has been given nor is the street lighted. Is this conduct becoming? [The Gujaráti (98) of the 25th May complains of the deficient water-supply, says that the members of the Municipal Corporation of Bombay do not really care for the comforts of the poor but attend to the conveniences of Europeans and well-to-do Natives, and advises the Government and the municipality to adopt measures for removing the cry of scarcity of water.]

Disapproves of the diversion of the sewage outfall from Carnac Bandar to Warli.

In a paragraph headed "The Carnac Bandar Nuisance," the Subodh Patrika (15) of the 25th May says:—The Town Council on Wednesday last adopted Colonel Merewether's proposition to divert the sewage outfall, as an experiment, from the Carnac Bandar to Warli, flushing the sewer with sea-water, and to recommend the Corporation to sanction a grant of Rs. 8,540 from surplus cash balances for the expenses of so doing. Both the Health Officer and the Executive Engineer who were consulted gave extremely guarded opinions. We are half afraid that the experiment will end in causing a greater nuisance than the keeping of the depôt itself does. A little laxity in superintendence and a little carelessness may lead to the formation of deposits of sewage in the sewer. These will surely breed disease in the very heart of the city. The whole drainage scheme itself had its opponents and has them still. This scheme of sending the whole sewage through particular parts of the city is even more objectionable. But the pressure from Government was great to abate the Carnac Bandar nuisance and the choice of the ways of so doing which the Town Council had was very limited. But we greatly doubt if they had been happy in their adoption of the present scheme in preference to all the others suggested. The scheme has been proposed only as an experiment. We presume the test of its success or failure will lie in the fact to be ascertained hereafter whether more men die than before or less on account of the scheme. A very cheerful experiment to contemplate, no doubt! But the Town Council have at last the satisfaction of having got rid of the business for the present, somehow. The question now is what will the Corporation do?

Sale of putrid fish and stale meat at Nal Bazár, Bombay.

The Káside Mumbai (107) of the 28th May says that if Bazár Inspectors do not sufficiently look active at this hot season of the year, there is every likelihood of cholera breaking out in Bombay among the poorer classes. At Nal Bazár fish is sold in large quantities at present and the black pomfret (halva) is so very delicate that it becomes putrid in a short time. If such fish is sold for human consumption, will not cholera break out in the city? Moreover, several butchers pass off stale meat as fresh and sell it along with fresh meat. It is necessary that the authorities should prevent the sale in the different bazárs of articles unfit for human food.

Requests Government to rebuke the Collector-president of the Surat Municipality and his Assistant, Mr. Lely, for repressing the free expression of opinion by the members of the local municipality.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 29th May, in an article headed "Municipal Government in the Mofussil," quotes in extenso the statement of facts furnished by a Surat correspondent of the Amrit Bazar Patrika of Calcutta to that paper in connection with the recent case of unseemly conflict between the official and elected members of the Surat Municipal Board, and remarks:—Now if the facts of the case in question be as they are alleged to have been, it certainly behoves the Bombay Government to administer a sharp rebuke at any rate to Mr. White, the Collector, and his Assistant, Mr. Lely, for the disreputable part they took in crushing a free expression of non-official opinion on the case before the corporation for disposal and also to cancel all the proceedings in that case. If what Mr. Peile said in his masterly speech on the 25th August last year, when he introduced the two Local Self-government Bills, be not all moonshine, he is, we dare say, in honour bound to uphold the judicious principles he then enunciated. Mr. Peile then said:—"There is, of course, a right and a wrong way of exercising official guidance, and it has been proved by instances under the present law, among which I may mention the administration of the Surat Municipality under my honourable friend Mr. Hope, that it is quite possible, even with ex-officio presidents, to teach unofficial sub-committees to work freely and independently. I feel confident that, when the desire of the Government is correctly understood, district officers will order their participation in the business of local boards in a way to encourage the growth of local liberties and not to discourage or repress them." What can be more plain than the declaration of policy contained in the foregoing extract from Mr. Peile's speech of August last? And yet we find the Collector-president of a leading and flourishing municipality like that of Surat actually discouraging and repressing the growth of local liberties instead of encouraging them!!! Again, why was it that the official members with Mr. White at their head were so much interested in remitting the fine which the Electric Light Company had incurred by its inability to fulfil its contract, and on the very strength of the terms of the said document? If, as is alleged, no services according to the stipulated conditions in the agreement were rendered to the rate-payers of Surat by the said company, was it fair, we ask, on the part of the official members to advocate such indulgent and lenient treatment at the expense of the poor rate-payers? We are often told that the presence of official members in our local boards is essentially necessary with a view to check the so-called tendency on the part of the non-official Native commissioners to act from private, sectarian and interested motives at the cost of the rate-payers. But, as the Latin proverb declares, quis custodiat ipsos custodes, who will guard the guardians themselves if they, unmindful of their sacred trust, themselves set a bad example? Mr. Peile at the conclusion of his speech, referred to above, thus alluded to this tendency:—"But we have not arrived at that yet, and much has to be learnt before there can be really popular movement to occupy the ground which is opened out by these measures. In reaching that consummation we shall now transfer some of our responsibility to the men of 'the party of progress and reforms,' and they must decentralize as well as the Government. We should not be satisfied if political education were to stop short at a small class marked out by special circumstances from the masses. We have that form of polity already in the Native States, where the local administration is quite indigenous, but in no way popular or representative, and therefore generally very far from progressive. To reproduce that position in our districts would be a very partial success, which would go a very little way towards the establishment of free institutions. Private and party motives would dominate the local councils, and the popular indifference and aversion to municipal regulations (institutions?) would be aggravated." We leave it to the reader and to Government to judge if there were any "private and party motives" at the bottom of these high-handed proceedings on the part of Mr. White, Mr. Lely and their supporters, and whether such proceedings are not calculated to "aggravate the popular indifference and aversion to municipal institutions." In conclusion we trust that the Bombay Government will, if the case be really as it is represented by the Surat correspondent of the Amrit Bazar Patrika, administer a sharp rebuke to the officers concerned, so as to be an example to others who may be similarly disposed.

Says that the Surat Municipality has acted wisely in retaining the services of Dr. Dosábhái as Superintendent of the Párekh Dispensary.

The Suryă Prakásh (82) of the 24th May says that the municipal committee have adopted a wise resolution in retaining the services of such a clever and experienced doctor as Mr. Dosábhái. Looking to the large number of the destitute and the poor in Surat, it is necessary that a well-paid doctor should be appointed Superintendent of the Párekh Dispensary. There is no reason for Government exercising parsimony in this matter, for they will thereby be giving discouragement to the charitably disposed. The poor, with whose condition Dr. Dosábhái is well acquainted, are pleased with the retention of the doctor's services and thank the committee for so doing. The municipality has acted justly in the matter, for it has done real justice to the poor. It has thereby earned their blessings.

Disapproves of the action of the Surat Municipality in connection with the retention of the services of Dr. Dosábhái as Superintendent of the Párekh Dispensary.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 25th May says:—Dr. Dosábhái Pestanji is an elected commissioner of the Surat Municipality. He managed to get elected by the people, but has ever since been on the official side. And he has had his reward. Government some time ago wisely suggested that the pay of the Superintendent of the Párekh Dispensary (Dr. Dosábhái) ought to be reduced from Rs. 350 a month to Rs. 150. As there is a large Civil Hospital at Surat and a number of private dispensaries, there is no need for a highly paid Assistant Surgeon. We think Rs. 100 a month is quite enough for an hour or two's work every day. But Dr. Dosábhái, the elect of the people and the favourite of the officials, is not going to be put upon short commons. So he, himself a commissioner, presses his claim upon his colleagues for full pay, and gets it confirmed for the year—Rs. 4,200. Such is our information. Now, there may be nothing wrong legally in this procedure. But its moral effect will be the ruin of municipal self-government at Surat which Dr. Dosábhái and a few others have so cheerfully been helping to bring about. Dr. Dosábhái is said to be a very worthy man and at the top of his profession. We leave it to him to say whether he could not find a better way of making himself useful to his country. If his hopes of immortality are centred in officialism, why does he prevail upon the unhappy rate-payers to elect him? And having been elected, why does he misuse his powers this way? Such irregularity is possible only under an official president, and it is on that account that we have from the beginning objected to the District Collector being entrusted with the scheme of local self-government.

Overloading of carts and cruel treatment of bullocks in Vengurla.

The Vengurla Vritt (72) of the 22nd May in its local news states that bullock-carts are frequently to be seen overloaded with goods in Vengurla. They are besides driven by young boys and the bullocks have usually no nose-bridles. During night bullock-carts are being frequently driven along the roads without any lamps. Owing to overloading, the bullocks are unable to drag the carts, and consequently they are treated cruelly. The local municipality has passed rules for the guidance of the owners of bullock-carts which ply for hire, but unfortunately they are not enforced. It is to be hoped that the local Mámlatdár will bring to justice those cart-drivers who act in violation of the municipal regulations.

Says that Government ought to ascertain the truth of the statement made by the Hitechchhu of Ahmedabad that Mr. Reid is sometimes deceived by those about him.

The Samsher Báhádur (103) of the 23rd May expresses satisfaction with the withdrawal of the prohibition placed on the giving of caste feasts at Ahmedabad, quotes the remarks made by the Hitechchhu (80) of Ahmedabad of the 22nd instant that Mr. Reid is sometimes deceived by those about him who conceal the real state of affairs in connection with the municipality (vide page 20 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 24th May), and observes that the remarks made by the Hitechchhu are very severe. Government ought undoubtedly to find out who these men are. Mr. Reid is surrounded by the municipal commissioners and the officers of the municipality at the time of the holding of the general meeting of the municipality. A very serious charge appears to be laid against these men by the Hitechchhu, and it is to be hoped that Government would enquire into the matter and remove the alleged intriguers from the municipal board.

Native States.

Praises the Mahárája of Jeypur for abolishing the transit duties hitherto levied in his State.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 31st May records with great satisfaction the abolition of the transit duties, except upon opium and other intoxicating drugs, in his territory by the Mahárája of Jeypur. The fact, observes the Samáchár, that the State can bear the loss of the transit duties without imposing a new tax to make up the loss proves the general good management and the prosperous condition of the State, and reflects great credit on the prince. The Pioneer confirms the inference by some incontrovertible statements. The Mahárája has set an example which the other princes and chiefs ought to follow willingly.

Berár Affairs.

Suggestion with respect to the filling up of posts of Extra Assistant Commissioners and Tahsildárs.

The Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 26th May says:—We have seen many instances in which Mámlatdárs in the Bombay Presidency have risen to the post of Deputy Collectors. In Berár similar appointments are conferred in the majority of cases by favouritism and not by seniority. Hence service in Berár does not possess that inducement which ought to act as an incentive to work. In the first place the offices of Tahsildárs and Extra Assistant Commissioners ought to be given by competition and not by favouritism as we often see. When there are vacancies, outsiders are imported into the service, superseding the claims of those who are already in the department. This process of importing foreigners results in the stagnation of promotion, and is attended by other evils which it is impossible to remedy. We know of an instance in which an Extra Assistant Commissioner, notwithstanding his repeated failure in passing the necessary examinations, was invested with civil and criminal powers, which he exercised for a number of years and was afterwards declared incompetent and thrown out of the service. The public must lose faith in the justice administered by such a man. The service must be thrown open to competition,—a system which will go a great way in bringing the department to the highest standard of efficiency. There would be no room for complaint if men deserving of promotion were given their due. If the system obtaining in the Bombay Presidency were adopted by this Administration there would be no heart-burning and no discontent. It would attract able men and would hold out prospects to those already serving. In making the above remarks we are not actuated by sinister motives towards any particular individual, but we have made them in the hope that the Administration may make definite rules which should guide its action in disposing of these places.

Complains that some Deputy Commissioner passed one order in his capacity as a Civil Judge and another diametrically opposite in the same case in the capacity of a Collector.

The same newspaper says:—A person brought a suit on a mortgage bond for the recovery of his mortgage debt. The Court passed a decree ordering it to be satisfied by instalments of Rs. 80 per annum. On appeal to the Deputy Commissioner, the mortgagee pointed out that no instalments could be allowed when money is secured by mortgage. The decree of the lower Court was therefore modified by reversing the order regarding instalments. The judgment-debtor then applied for the execution of his decree. The decree was as usual sent to the Collector for disposal who forwarded it on to a Tahsildár. The Tahsildár let out the land on a long lease, which secured Rs. 50 per annum to the judgment-creditor. He then applied to the Deputy Commissioner in the capacity of a Collector not to confirm the order passed by the Tahsildár. The Deputy Commissioner, notwithstanding his own order to pay money all at once, confirmed that of the Tahsildár. Now we leave it to our readers to determine as to what amount of hardship and expense the mortgagee had to undergo. He found himself in a worse position than he was before the appeal was made. If the decrees of Civil Courts are not respected by the Revenue authorities they are a mere nullity, and this procedure of the Revenue Courts is calculated to lessen the faith which litigants have in the Civil Courts that their decrees shall be executed in the manner they are passed. We invite the attention of the Commissioner and the Resident with a view to their taking such steps as they may deem necessary for giving effect to the decrees of Civil Courts and thus protecting the interests of litigants.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
4th June 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári: Expression of opinion that the Bhandáris or toddy and country spirit sellers of Bombay ought to get the redress for which they have memorialized Government 13
Annual visits of the Viceroys and Governors of presidencies to the hills:
  Costliness of the migration of the Supreme Government to Simla and remarks in connection therewith 10
  Disapproval of the— 10
Arms Act: Condemnation of the— 11
Bench of Honorary Magistrates at Sholápur: Suggestion for the appointment of a — unconnected with the municipality for the disposal of municipal cases and petty crimes 13
Bombay International Exhibition Guarantee Fund: Expression of opinion that the Native Princes and Chiefs of the Bombay Presidency should not be called upon to contribute to the — 13
Bráhman officials in the Junnar Táluka: Request to Government to send other than — on account of the feud which exists between Bráhmans and the cultivating classes 14
Cholera: Statement that — of a bad type prevails in the villages of Dánti and Dhorái near Bulsár 15
Civil Service of India: Advice to the people to continue agitating the question of the limit of age of candidates for the entrance examination of the — 9
Defences of Bombay: Expression of opinion that no delay should be made in improving the— 12
Disestablishment of the English church in India: Advocacy of the —
  The Dnyánodayă 10
  The Indu Prakásh 9
Export and import trade of India: Expression of opinion that increase in the — is no indication of the prosperity of the people ... 8
Forced labour: Statement that a large number of labourers are being caught and forcibly made to work in the repairs which are being made to the tank at Wághad in the Násik Collectorate ... 14
Land revenue: Expression of opinion that payment of rent in kind is becoming a growing necessity in the case of cultivators ... 12
Lepers in Bombay: Advice to Government for finding out a place suitable for the location of the— 12
Manufacturing industries in India: Expression of opinion that Government should appoint a commission to devise schemes for the commencement of— 9
Maxims of government in India enunciated by Sir James Stephen: Remarks on certain— 3
Popularity of Lord Ripon among Natives: Statement of reasons for the— 8
Public Honours: Criticism on the honours bestowed on the Queen's birthday 11
Public Service:
  Expression of a hope that the cases of clerks in the Dhárwár Post Office who are under suspension may be decided without delay . 15
  Request to Government to reconsider their decision in the matter of the transfer of Mr. Adarji Jivanji to the Panch Mahals ... 14
  Strange conduct of the Deputy Educational Inspector of Dhárwár under certain circumstances 14
Roads: Want of repairs to the road between Tuljápur and Sholápur ... 15
Working hours of the labourers of the cotton and other mills in Bombay:
  Expression of opinion that the — should be curtailed ... 15

Part II.—Railways—

Amalgamation of the B. B. & C. I. Railway with the Rájputána-Málwa Railway: Expression of opinion that the services of Mr. Duxbury, the Traffic Manager of the B. B. & C. I. Railway, should not be dispensed with on the— 16
Construction of railways: Expression of opinion that the Native Princes and Chiefs should be encouraged in the — in their respective territories 16
Evidence given before the Select Committee on Indian Railways: Criticism on the — by certain witnesses 15
G. I. P. Railway Company: A suggestion to the— 17

Page.

Part III.—Municipalities—

Ahmedabad: Expression of opinion that Government ought to ascertain the truth of the statement made by the Hitechchhu of — that Mr. Reid is sometimes deceived by those about him 20

Bombay:

Complaint regarding the deficient water-supply of — in the hot season 17

Disapproval of the diversion of the sewage outfall from Carnac Bandar to Warli 17

Sale of putrid fish and stale meat at Nal Bazár 18

Surat:

Disapproval of the action of the — Municipality in retaining the services of Dr. Dosábhái as Superintendent of the Párekh Dispensary 19

Expression of opinion that the — Municipality has acted wisely in retaining the services of Dr. Dosábhái as Superintendent of the Párekh Dispensary 19

Request to Government to rebuke the Collector-president of the— Municipality and his Assistant, Mr. Lely, for repressing the free expression of opinion by the members of the local municipality . 18

Vengurla: Overloading of carts and cruel treatment of bullocks in— ... 19

Part IV.—Native States—

Jeypur: Praises of the Mahárája of — for abolishing the transit duties hitherto levied in his State 20

Part V.—Berár Affairs—

Judicial affairs: Complaint that some Deputy Commissioner passed one order in his capacity as a Civil Judge and another diametrically opposite in the same case in the capacity of a Collector... ... 21

Posts of Extra Assistant Commissioners and Tahsildárs: Suggestion with respect to the filling up of— 20

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 7th June 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
16	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI
17	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
18	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
19	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
20	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
21	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*24	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*26	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
29	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
30	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
31	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
32	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
33	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
34	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
35	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
36	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*38	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
39	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
40	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
41	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
42	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
43	„ Maháráshtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,000
44	„ Maháráshtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
45	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
46	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*47	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
48	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
49	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
50	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*51	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
52	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*53	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*54	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*55	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*56	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
57	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
58	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
59	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
60	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
61	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*62	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
63	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*64	„ Shivájí[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
65	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
66	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
67	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

57
OFFICE
JUL 1884

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	MARA'THI—continued.
*68	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
69	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
70	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
71	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
72	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*73	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
74	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*75	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*76	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
77	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	ANGLO-GUJARA'TI.
*78	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
79	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
80	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
81	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
82	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	GUJARA'TI.
83	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
84	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
85	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
86	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*87	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
88	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
89	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
90	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
91	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
92	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
93	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
94	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
95	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
96	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
97	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
98	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*99	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
100	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*101	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
102	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
103	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
104	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*105	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
*106	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
107	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
108	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
109	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
110	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
111	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
112	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
113	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
114	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*115	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
116	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
117	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*118	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
119	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*120	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
121	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
122	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
123	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
124	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
125	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	KA'NARESE.
126	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*127	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
128	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	225
129	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*130	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	SANSKRIT.
*131	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	URDU.
*132	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
133	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	PERSIAN.
134	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	ENGLISH, MARA'THI AND URDU.
*135	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	SINDI.
*136	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Remarks on certain maxims of Government in India enunciated by Sir James Stephen.

In continuation of the article headed "The true foundations of British rule in India" reported at pages 3—7 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 31st May, the Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajánik Sabha (4) for the month of April but received on the 22nd May says:—Sir James Stephen doubtless holds it to be "self-evident" that "the natives of India neither understand the policy of introducing European civilization into the country, nor could they be trusted to carry it out if they both understood and liked it, except under constant and vigilant European superintendence." Without going into the evidence which Sir James Stephen, somewhat inconsistently perhaps, proceeds to give of this "self-evident" proposition, we are content to admit it to be true if understood of the whole Native population of the country. This would be not merely true but a truism, and applicable not merely to this country but mutatis mutandis all the world over. Its being a truth or a truism, however, and of general or only special application has not much relevancy to the practical question of administration. Is there not a sufficient number among the natives of the country who understand the principles of European civilization to render it desirable that their help should be secured by the British Government in the noble task which lies before it? If there is—and we will venture to challenge Sir James Stephen to deny that—is it not desirable that they should be associated with Europeans in the government of the country? We hold that they should be associated, and not merely, so to say, on the ministerial side, for that involves in truth a very narrow view of the whole question. We would take higher ground and maintain without any hesitation that provision should be gradually made for their activity in the service of their country from the side of Her Majesty's opposition also, that is to say, in the way of independent non-official help and criticism. It is all very well for Sir James Stephen to take the extreme fraction of Musalmán and Hindu irreconcileables and say that they would like to exterminate one another. But the question of the Europeans leaving the country for good, within the lifetime of Sir James Stephen—or even of the longest lived of the latest born among the children born to-day—is not within the domain of "practical politics." And therefore, even assuming the truth of what Sir James Stephen says about the contradictory wishes of "Hindus, Musalmáns, Sikhs, Burmese and Pársis," it has no manner of relevancy to the only question, which is at all a practical one and the only one which we care to discuss here, namely, is the introduction of a certain small, but gradually increasing, element of popular government in India a desirable measure or not? We say that it is, and in our remarks on the inherent and necessary impermanency of absolute government we have stated our reasons for saying so. Sir James Stephen says it is not, and we have already stated why we are dissatisfied with his opinion on the point. But even on his view we fail to perceive any sound reason for throwing away such a valuable help in the government of the country as can be furnished by the intelligence, sympathy and knowledge of the people which may be found among the children of the soil. Sir James Stephen next proceeds to dwell on the difficulties which lie in the way of the operation of "changing" the Government of India "from an absolute government founded on military force" into "a representative government founded on popular election." We need not stay to point out that, understood in their literal sense, these words signify an operation which nobody supposes to be in the domain of "practical politics"—nobody either among those "Anglicised Bengal Bábus" at whom Mr. Justice Stephen indulges in the oft-repeated, but none the less unworthy, gibes and jeers, or among those "English theorists" who rouse his ire by what he is pleased to call their "restless, dissatisfied, officious interference" in that best of all possible governments which was administered by Lord Lytton and Sir John Strachey. However, we need not go further into that matter, because we are content to admit that the proposal, if anybody entertains it, to at once transform the present despotism of the Government of India into a popular government exactly like that of England involves an operation of great difficulty. The truth, as we have said, is that nobody has for an instant entertained such a proposal; but many have entertained, and in their own several ways have propounded, proposals for taking small, well considered, tentative measures towards this ultimate transformation. If then Sir James Stephen's arguments are directed against this class of proposals, we have only to say that we must respectfully take leave to dissent from his views. Sir James Stephen says that the proposals are entirely "gratuitous." We have already pointed out why we think this view an erroneous one. The influences that are at present operating upon our countrymen must, whether Sir James Stephen approves them or not, and whether they are unwelcome to him or otherwise, direct the movement of Indian political life in the direction which he so much dreads. We do not dread it, we rather welcome it. And we think also that true statesmanship lies in preventing that movement from breaking away headlong, loose from all regulation, and in keeping it in hand and under perfect control by yielding to it little by little, with careful circumspection. It may be that "that state craft in its higher departments," of which Sir James Stephen's favourite Viceroy used to speak so much, dictates a different policy. It may be that the practical experience of the European continental despotisms and political theories antagonistic to the doctrines of Mill on Liberty alike lead to what Mr. Wordsworth called "Napoleonic maxim of everything for the people, and nothing by the people." But we will venture to say that the instruction to be derived from those quarters ought to be treated rather as corroborating our views; it must be regarded as teaching how not to do it. Sir James Stephen, contrasting "the Anglicised Bengali Bábus" with "the warlike and vigorous races of Northern India," says that the latter have "no desire whatever for any other political institutions than such as they have been accustomed to from time immemorial"—suggesting, apparently, that it is under such institutions that they have now the happiness to live. That however we doubt, and we have indicated already some reasons which go to confirm the doubt. We also doubt whether there is such complete satisfaction at existing political institutions as Sir James Stephen's words imply. It is well-known that from whatever causes,—and we do not intend to suggest that some of the causes have not been good and solid ones,—from whatever causes, we repeat, the progress of education has been very slow among "the warlike and vigorous races of Northern India." But even among them it has made, and is making, progress, and, in so far as it is doing so, is an intelligent interest and to a certain extent an intelligent dissatisfaction springing up and spreading about regarding the public affairs of the country. Is Sir James Stephen then prepared to recommend that the progress of education should be checked in this country? Is he prepared to hold that the educational policy of Government should be reversed in order to perpetuate "the institutions with which the Natives, if left to themselves, are perfectly satisfied, and which have conferred on them, and will if left alone continue to confer upon them, altogether inestimable benefits." We are not by any means blind to these great benefits, but on the other hand we also see that there is another side of the account which requires to be taken into the calculation. And with all possible affection and loyalty to British rule, we should be disposed to hold that the advantages of that rule were too dearly purchased, if as a result of them our countrymen were to remain for ever as children in swaddling clothes and leading strings under the patriarchal government of Anglo-Indian officialdom. Mr. Justice Stephen winds up his paper by making the extraordinary statement—we certainly cannot characterize it by any milder term—that "in the presence of English voters and their leaders the English in India are weak and helpless, the Indian Civil Service is weak and helpless, the strongest and wisest man in the country is as helpless, if they differ from him, as a little child." We should like to know when and how this "weakness and helplessness" have manifested themselves. Everybody knows how Acts of the Legislature and Proclamations of the Crown have been shelved by the local authorities—by this very Indian Civil Service, which Mr. Justice Stephen thus calls upon us to commiserate for its weakness and helplessness. And everybody knows that the true view of this question was stated by such men as Mr. Mill and Lord Lawrence when they said that the great difficulties of a truly liberal policy in India are to be found in this weak, this helpless Anglo-Indian population. Is that party a weak, a helpless party, which has, even in Mr. Justice Stephen's estimation, "exaggerated the intrinsic importance" of the so-called Ilbert Bill, so that even Her Majesty's Judges have begun to exclaim that the fearful times of the mutiny have returned? Is that party a weak, a helpless party which has organised a series of mass meetings to create a sensation in England, and which has been crowing over its so-called "concordat" with the Government of India for the past few weeks? We who know what the Anglo-Indian population has done and can do, and who know their modes of operation and the advantages of their position, also know better than to accept such an opinion as that which Mr. Justice Stephen seems to have announced as a counterblast to the righteous utterances of Gladstone and John Bright. Thus we have gone through the main line of argument followed by Sir James Stephen in his paper on the foundations of the Government of India. Sundry points have been incidentally touched on in the course of the paper to which we have had no space for referring,—such points, for instance, as the differences between the nature of the British conquest of India and the conquests by other powers; or the difference between political power and ordinary property; and more especially, the points about the benefits of European civilization in the shape of the system introduced for the administration of justice, or the codification of the law; or the modes and the pressure of taxation. All these points are worthy of respectful consideration, and as far as we are concerned many of the observations—but not by any means all of them—which have been made by Sir James Stephen are observations in which we concur. But while he puts forward only one aspect of these matters, we must beg leave to point out that they have also another aspect which deserves consideration. Thus to take one instance, when we talk about the purity of the administration of justice, the fact thus referred to is an important fact, but against it we have got to set the equally important fact that the system of administration is ruinously costly, excessively dilatory, and in some respects certainly so entirely apart from the habits of the people that it is charged, and not entirely without reason, as being the source of a good deal of the so-called perjury on which prejudiced Anglo-Indians, in high places especially, are so fond of dwelling, forgetful apparently of the revelations made in their own courts of justice in recent days, which do not contrast very favourably with the revelations of our own. We point to this as merely an index of the general deductions that have to be made from the conclusions at which Mr. Justice Stephen arrives in his paper on these incidental matters. And we point to them, be it understood, not in a spirit of carping or cavil, but merely in order to show how the facts really stand. We have no hesitation in avowing our belief that after due allowance is made for these drawbacks the introduction of European civilization into this country must have a surplus, and a very substantial surplus, of benefit to the Indian people. And now we have done. As will have been seen, we dissent almost entirely from the political principles which Mr. Justice Stephen wishes to see prevailing in the government of this country. We consider those principles to be erroneous and of evil tendency. Our general conclusion is that while the shell and husk, if we may so express it, which belongs to the English constitution as it at present exists may be and ought to be cast aside, the real kernel of it is as suitable in this country as in the soil where it has had such vigorous and such beneficial growth. We agree that even this essential portion of that constitution should not be introduced all of a sudden. Let the progress towards it be by all means gradual. Let each successive step that is taken be justified by the event before further progress is attempted. But however slowly we may move, however cautiously and circumspectly we may look about us at every step that we take, let our progress be towards the goal which is indicated by the constitution of the great kingdom with which we are now so closely associated as parts of the great empire on which the sun never sets. Lord Ripon and his Councillors and the Government of Mr. Gladstone are very widely believed to be helping on our progress on these principles. And it is to this belief, derived not from mere sweet and well-turned periods, but from unmistakeable deeds, that the universal and genuine popularity of the present Viceroy, and in a small degree that of the Gladstone Government, among our countrymen is really due. It is a popularity which, we will venture to say, is creditable alike to the Viceroy and to the people. And the confidence which has thus been engendered in the minds of our countrymen with respect to the ruling race must be of lasting benefit to the true interests alike of England and India,—interests which, as Mr. Gladstone has once more declared within the past few weeks, are so far from being in conflict, that they are really identical.

Criticises the replies given by the Under Secretary of State for India to questions asked by Mr. Burt in Parliament about the severity of the Salt Act in the Madras Presidency.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 5th June observes that the members of Parliament who now and then put questions to the Secretary of State for India about the Indian administration deserve the hearty gratitude of the people of this country; but since sufficiently clear answers are not given to those questions, the labours of these benevolent gentlemen do not in many instances produce satisfactory results. Recently Mr. Burt asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether he was aware of the loud complaint raised by the people of the Madras Presidency against the severity of the Salt Act. Mr. Cross replied that he was not aware of the alleged complaint, and expressed his readiness to remove it if any grounds for it really existed. It is very strange that the Under Secretary of State should be ignorant of the existence of the grievance and that he should have given a promise to Parliament to pay immediate attention to it. The complaint about the excessively heavy salt duty, the dearness of salt, and the evil effects of these is not confined to the Madras Presidency; it prevails throughout India. The silence of the people on this question is entirely owing to their inability to obtain redress and their unusual meekness. Mr. Cross has promised to pay immediate attention to the complaint, but were the people to pray once more for the reduction of the salt duty they would be told that Government cannot afford to give up any portion of the present revenue. Mr. Cross stated in reply to another question from Mr. Burt that of the large number of persons who were tried last year in the Madras Presidency for committing offences against the Salt Act many were let off without any punishment. This reply may appear satisfactory to persons who have no experience of India; but those who have lived in the country are well aware that poor people committed to take their trial suffer much misery before they are discharged by a criminal court. Mr. Burt should not have remained silent when Mr. Cross stated in reply to his question that the salt duty was considerably heavier than it was under the administration of the East India Company. Mr. Burt should have asked the reasons which induced Government to enhance the salt duty and should have pointed out that poor people suffer great miseries on account of it. Thousands of poor people eat rice gruel without a pinch of salt and eat dried fish without its being salted and thereby injure their health. Unless there are Indian representatives in Parliament the grievances of India are not likely to be presented in their genuine form and are not likely to be redressed.

Says that the contentment of the people of India is the strongest bulwark against a Russian invasion and advises Government to keep the inhabitants of India contented.

In an article headed "Russian Advance in Central Asia," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 2nd June says:—The success of Russian diplomacy in Central Asia must always be a cause of great disquiet to our rulers, and no less to ourselves. The reported cession of Sarakhs and the so-called submission of the Mero-Turkomans to the protection of the Czar bring the advanced guards of Russia within a few hundred miles of Herat, the most western outpost of the British Government. How loving is the submission of the Mero-Turkomans and other tribes to Russian protection is well described by a correspondent of the Times of India, who explains willing submission to be a Russian euphemism for conquest. But whether or no the Russians have a permanent hold on the affections of the Tartar races they have subjugated, one fact is clear that in spite of promises, treaties, or declarations of Russian ministers and Czars to the contrary, the Russians are advancing slowly but steadily towards India. This supposition is greatly strengthened by the dream of Skobeleff recently published. This dream of one of the greatest of Russia's modern generals, if genuine, illustrates very clearly, like the will of Russia's greatest Emperor Peter the Great, how the heart of the Russian nation is set upon the acquisition of India, how each foot of ground gained in Central Asia is looked upon as a step onward towards the final goal, and how a struggle with England is looked forward to as inevitable. This threatening attitude of Russia is a source of considerable anxiety. The political creed of Russia seems to be that the end sanctifies the means. Hence her promises and solemn assurances are as fragile as gossamer thread. Each further advance rouses England from her fancied security, and sets her thinking how to defend India from Russian designs. Afghanistan is greatly relied on as a neutral zone, but it is very questionable whether supposing Abdul Rahman remained firm and truthful he will at all be able to relieve the British Government from their danger. To our mind the best strength of our Government lies in the contentment and loyalty of their subjects. We can assure our rulers that every Native heart beats with a warm attachment for the British Government, that the sincere conviction of all thinking Natives is that in spite of occasional errors the British Government has on the whole been the most well-intentioned and beneficent Government and that of all European nations the English are the most noble, just and generous people. There have been individual administrators who have shaken the confidence of the Indian nations in this high ideal of their rulers, as there have been others who have fully borne out their expectations. The sum total of their experiences cannot fail to be favourable, and their obvious duty and security lie in supporting the British rule. Such a feeling of loyalty and affection has been greatly strengthened by the many acts of kindness of Lord Ripon, and it is the interest of the British Government to further nourish that feeling. If the British Government persevere in the same course of kindly treatment, the two hundred and fifty millions of India will be their best bulwarks against the attacks of any foreign power. [The Broach Samáchár (89) of the 5th June considers the present time as the fittest for striking a blow at the Russians, for they do not command sufficient strength in Central Asia at present. It is to the interests of the British that the Russian advance should be checked now before it gathers further strength.]

Reflections on the advance of Russia.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 1st June says:—The mere mention of a further Russian advance in the direction of India is enough to throw a portion of the British public into a flutter. A Russian scientific exploration, the alleged submission of Mero-Turkomans, and this time the cession of Sarakhs is enough to expose a ministry to volleys of questions on these heads. But how on earth can the Russians from an immense distance dislodge the Briton's firm footing in India when he is strong in his own house and has immensely fortified it? And are not the Russian internal troubles enough to keep the hands of their emperor, however ambitious he may be, employed? They may find it easy to subjugate a half-starved and ill-equipped people, but it is no joke to face a British army on its own ground. The uneasiness often displayed on this score in and out of Parliament only exposes the weak side of the British public, and must only inflame a stronger earth-hunger in the Russian breast. It is in the interests of the British people and those of India that such exhibitions should not be frequently repeated. [The Military Instructor (135) of the same date expresses similar sentiments and remarks that there is no reason for standing in fear of Russia, for her army, which is like that of Bájiráo or the Moguls, will not be able to make any stand against the disciplined forces, European and Native, of the British. Moreover, the Afghans will not allow non-Mahomedans to set foot in their country, for they look upon them as káffars and will have nothing to do with them.]

Denounces the insincerity of Lord Lytton in connection with the Civil Service question.

The Indian Spectator (1) of the 1st June, in an article headed "Lord Lytton's political morality," refers to the letter written by him to the Times regarding the Civil Service question, adverts to his utter failure to vindicate the policy pursued by him in the administration of India in a speech made by him in the House of Lords, and to the disregard for truth manifested in the speech he delivered at Woodstock, and remarks:—If there was one thing more than another that shipwrecked the administration of Lord Lytton and brought his Government into general contempt, it was its transparent insincerity and disregard for truth. Gifted with a vivid imagination that delighted in fiction and romance, and consequently set at naught the stern realities of the work-a-day world, an expert in the art of converting black into white and white into black, trained to that phase of continental politics which teaches dissimulation as the perfection of diplomacy, our ex-Viceroy so far succeeded in spreading the contagion of political immorality among his colleagues in Council that it is no wonder his administration became a by-word of reproach, and he himself left these shores almost a bankrupt in reputation. His Viceregal career was strongly marked by insincerity and mystery. He said one thing and meant another. Words never harmonised with deeds, nor deeds with words. He was troubled with a duplicate misfortune, that of deceiving the world and that of deceiving himself. When he betook himself to his native land we thought that the serene atmosphere of the House of Lords, generally chastening in its moral influence, would partially, if not wholly, cure him of his malady. But we hoped in vain. When the contradiction made by Lord Lytton first appeared in the papers we were lost in astonishment that the trick should be carried so far in broad daylight. We wondered whether this contradiction could ever stand even for a day in the presence of that despatch of 1878. The Indian Mirror and the Bombay Gazette have rendered excellent service to the people of India by once more reminding them of the existence of the despatch and the mischievous proposal contained therein to debar them from the competitive Civil Service by a fluke. Thus has truth again triumphed over all obstacles and its majesty been fully vindicated. But who can set a limit to the fallacies of that misguided proconsul whose administration did so much mischief to India and the Indians? Insincerity was the distinguishing trait of most of the members of the previous administration. But insincerity cannot stand long. [The Gujaráti (98) of the 1st June says that the part played by Lord Lytton in this matter is shameful. He is held in hatred by the people of India for his shameful policy and no trust has been placed on his words. He, however, now repents for his misdeeds. He considers the Natives worthy of becoming members of the Indian Civil Service and is favourably inclined towards increasing the limit of age. This result of the present controversy is satisfactory. It would be better if Lord Lytton were hereafter to openly acknowledge the truth instead of thus screening false assertions.]

Says that Lord Lytton's statement that he never advocated the exclusion of Natives from the Civil Service only exhibits his perversity of conduct.

In a paragraph headed "Lord Lytton and the Civil Service" the Native Opinion (11) of the 1st June says:—Elsewhere we print a portion of the ex-Governor-General's despatch to the Secretary of State on the question of the admission of Natives into this service. Anyone reading the letter to the London Times by Lord Lytton saying that he never advocated the exclusion of Natives from this service, side by side with the despatch published, will at once see that his Lordship's recent attempt at self-defence only paints in still deeper colours his perversity of conduct. A refuge in silence under the circumstances would have been more convenient to him; but it seems in politics as in diplomacy inconsistency and straightforwardness are synonymous terms, and what in the ordinary affairs of life would be set down for gross perjury is looked upon as excusable in diplomacy. We wish Lord Lytton had the courage of his own opinions. His free admission of what he had written some six years ago would have appeared more honourable than the disingenuous attempt he has made to conceal his weakness.

Suggests that the provincial Governments should be compelled to purchase country articles more largely than they have hitherto done.

In noticing the list of purchases of country articles made for the use of Government under the orders of the Government of India issued in 1881, the Rást Goftár (112) of the 1st June observes that the largest purchaser of country manufactures has been the Government of Bengal, which deserves great praise for evincing much anxiety for encouraging Native industries. It is worth while to know the reasons that prevented the other subordinate Governments from showing similar willingness, and they should be censured for this conduct and compelled to submit in future to the wishes of the Supreme Government more completely than they have hitherto done.

Recommends the multiplication and extension of remunerative industries in Indian jails.

In noticing the regret expressed by Mr. Keswick, the chairman of the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce, at the meeting of the Chamber held on the 29th May that the convicts in the Indian jails are made to manufacture certain articles, which being sold very cheap in the market merchants getting out similar articles cannot effect the sales of their wares at a profit, the Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 3rd June observes that well conducted prisoners who can from previous education prepare certain goods or who possess the necessary ability to learn the manufacture of those goods are alone put to manufacture them. This system has been followed for some years past and has proved advantageous to Government as well as the convicts; it brought in good earnings from convict labour and the convicts left the jail with the ability to follow some remunerative industry which they did not know before. Thus means were supplied to the prisoners of not returning to crime and settling to agreeable life by following some useful handicraft. The advantages of the system are quite plain, and it is therefore to be regretted that Lord Ripon's Government should have at one time requested the Secretary of State for India to grant permission for abolishing the remunerative jail industries. The refusal of the latter officer to grant such permission was highly gratifying and it is to be hoped that he will adhere to his decision. The Viceroy should direct his attention to the multiplication and extension of remunerative jail industries.

Advises that European soldiers going on hunting excursions should be kept under proper restraint.

The Jáme Jamshed (102) of the 4th June approves of the suggestion made in a recent issue of the Bombay Gazette that the soldiers of the British army in India should be employed frequently on hunting excursions for the purpose of getting rid of animals of prey, and observes that several regimental companies may be employed at a time under the immediate control of their respective officers, but care should be taken that no peacocks, partridges and other animals held sacred by Natives are killed and no offence is given to the people. If the evil proceeding from the existence of wild animals is appreciably lessened the people would be highly grateful to Government. The other evil of Natives meeting death at the hands of European soldiers who make a wrong use of their weapons deserves also to be considered. Within the last five years about ten dozen Natives met an untimely death at the hands of European soldiers, and in almost all these cases the pleas advanced in defence of the accused persons were either accident or insanity. The true reason of the sad casualties was that the European soldiers did not care for the life of a Native, and partial European juries screened them from the punishment which they richly deserved. Of late the contagion of making a wrong use of their weapons has spread to the Native soldier also. The time has now arrived for introducing into India the rule said to be prevailing in England for some time past that no ammunition should be left in the possession of soldiers, who should be made to deposit their rifles in the orderly room on their return to the barracks from the parade or from patrol duty. The proposed rules for keeping under proper restraint European soldiers going on hunting excursions should also be passed at once. Some European soldiers annoy poor villagers, particularly in the Panjáb and the North-West Provinces, where the people hide themselves on their approach.

Says that before starting an agricultural bank the scheme for working it should be published and experienced agriculturists should be invited to give their opinion.

With reference to the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Poona District, the Shetakaryáncha Kaiwari (14) of the 1st June says:—The scheme is undoubtedly an important one, as it has for its object the improvement of the dilapidated condition of the agricultural classes of the Deccan. But before giving it an experimental trial it would be as well to draw out a sketch of the mode of its working, to circulate it among the agriculturists of the different tálukas, and to call for the opinions of the intelligent and experienced of them as to whether such a scheme would be beneficial. It is presumed that agricultural banks will have dealings with the agriculturists only in cash. It should therefore be ascertained beforehand whether this mode of dealing would be convenient to them, and whether they would be willing and able to carry on cash dealings with the bank with a certain degree of regularity. There is a strong supposition that in working the proposed scheme Government officials, especially Mámlatdárs and their subordinates, will be entrusted with the work of advancing money and collecting the instalments of the debts. Were such an arrangement made, we are afraid the agriculturists will be subjected to much oppression. If this evil be left unguarded there would be no end to their troubles. We do not in the least mean to oppose the scheme of the agricultural banks. We would on the contrary strongly support it. What we wish in this case is that the plan must be well matured before it is put into execution. If it be thought by experienced agriculturists that the proposed scheme would be beneficial, we would strongly recommend Native capitalists to give it a liberal support. Sir W. Wedderburn's views on the subject are purely philanthropic, and we therefore wish him every success in his laudable undertaking. Should he succeed in his attempt he will be the liberator of the poor agriculturists from the slavery of the cunning money-lenders.

Is glad that Government have sanctioned the establishment of an agricultural bank as an experimental measure in the Junnar Táluka.

The Din Bandhu (6) of the 1st June, in an article headed "The Agricultural Banks," says:—That the state of the agriculturists is similar to that of the slaves in uncivilised countries can be proved by the fact that the former, when they borrow money from their sáwkárs, agree to the following verbal conditions generally apart from the exorbitant interest charged: That they (agriculturists) should devote a portion of their time everyday to do some household work at the sáwkárs', such as for instance cleaning the house, washing the cattle, the pots, &c.; that in the rainy season they should thatch the houses of the sáwkárs and that on marriage and other festive occasions they (agriculturists) should stay with them (sáwkárs) leaving aside all other work; that they should always accompany the daughters and daughters-in-law of the sáwkárs to the houses of their fathers-in-law and parents. Now these facts will manifestly show to anyone whether oppression is not exercised by the sáwkárs upon poor agriculturists without a particle of consideration for their pitiful condition. It is true that Government are perhaps in the dark as to the real condition of the agricultural population, but when the facts are as stated above, will they not give their attention to the matter which demands their immediate consideration? We are glad that Government have now sanctioned the scheme of the agricultural banks as an experimental measure.

Expresses astonishment that Mr. Dádábhái Nawroji's name should have been omitted from the list of persons on whom honours were conferred on the Queen's birthday.

The Indian Spectator (1) of 1st June says:—The omission of Mr. Dádábhái Nawroji from the list of persons on whom honours have been conferred this year seems to have caused something like blank astonishment. It would be meanness on the part of a Native journalist to overlook this fact for fear of being suspected of partizanship. We have learnt a good deal from Mr. Dádábhái's writings on the material condition of India in common with our contemporaries. And though there are points on which we may differ from him, still it must be admitted that like other writers we have recanted a good deal of our sanguine optimism. Mr. Dádábhái's pamphlets, the fruit of a lifetime of study and observation, have set some of the best intellects of England thinking, and there is little doubt that the means he has suggested will ultimately prove the only means to perpetuate the alliance between England and India which has been so strangely brought about and which is capable of affording indefinite happiness to the people of both countries. Apart from his other services, in which none of the citizens of Bombay have equalled him, Mr. Dádábhái has established his claim as a public benefactor. We think it is a political blunder on the part of Government to neglect such a man. We should be sorry if we wronged the authorities by charging them with neglect in this or in any other case.

Criticises the bestowal of this year's birthday honours.

The Yajdán Parast (125) of the 1st June is extremely glad that Sir Jamsetji Jijibhái and Mr. Káshináth Trimbak Telang have been rewarded with honours, but is much concerned to see that Mr. Dinsháh Mánakji Petit and Professor Dádábhái Nawroji have been passed over. Mr. Petit's magnificent public charities and the Professor's highly useful services to the public are well known, and their claims to honours at the hands of Government have been long advanced by the Native press. It is therefore to be hoped that the two gentlemen will not be forgotten at the bestowal of birthday honours next year. The Parast also remarks that the European friends and admirers of the Honourable Mr. Rivers Thompson are sorry that the Lieutenant-Governor was not made a K.C.S.I., but the Native public do not partake of the regret. In the matter of the Native Magistrates' Jurisdiction Bill he lent improper encouragement to the excitement shown by the Europeans against the measure and widened the breach between them and the Natives. His administration was moreover very distasteful to the Native population of Bengal. Hence his exclusion from the birthday honours was no injustice to him at all.

Takes exception to the policy of Government to tax subsoil water advantages and makes suggestions about the settlement of the land tax in perpetuity.

The Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha (4) for April 1884 but received on the 22nd May, in an article headed "A protest and a warning against the new departure in the Land Assessment policy," alludes to the resolution in the Revenue Department dated 26th March 1884 containing an exposition of the policy of Government in regard to the question of revenue survey and assessment, and says:—The only claim which Government can urge to tax subsoil water facilities, whether used or not, rests, according to Sir G. Wingate and those who think with him, on the imaginary rights of Government as landlord, and such a claim cannot be urged without a breach of the most solemn pledges given by Government from time to time, and without violating all the customary and traditional rights of their subjects. By the common law of the country the land revenue claimable by Government is not rent due to a landlord, but is a tax on rent, or a fixed share of the surplus produce, commuted for convenience into money-rates, which cannot be raised except when this surplus share is raised in value or quantity. The right of the Government is in the nature of fees paid to the Balutedárs for service done in the shape of protection afforded to the ryots. Just as the Bengal zamindár or the Bombay inámdár, who is an alienee of Government rights, cannot raise revenue from his occupancy or mirásdár ryots because of supposed or realized advantages due to possible or actual improvements effected by him, Government cannot claim additional revenue except when general prices rise or its public works expenditure confers actual advantages on the land. Quite apart from the inpracticability and injustice of this claim there are considerations of good policy which should keep back the Government from committing themselves to any such fatal step. Sir Louis Mallet, in his minute published in the appendix to the Famine Commissioners' report, has very wisely observed that the uncertainty, more than the actual weight of the assessment, of the periodical settlement was chiefly to blame for the backward state of the country. People wonder that the capitalist classes do not venture to invest their savings in the land. We ask what other industry weighed with uncertain burdens such as those which hamper the industry of the agricultural classes in this country would bear the same strain without breaking down under its weight? After twenty years' continuous discussion the Government of India have now been roused to the necessity of adopting measures to minimise this uncertainty and actually promulgating a resolution under which in future they propose to exempt all improvements from taxation, and to confine enhancements to easily recognised and appreciable causes of variation, such as a general rise of prices or the extension of public works benefiting particular parts of the country. The Bombay Government profess to fall in with these views, and make a parade of their determination to encourage improvements, even at the sacrifice of the revenue they derive from well irrigation. Under these circumstances we put it to the local authorities if anything can be more impolitic or inconsistent than this attempt to unsettle the classes and values of nearly every holding in the country for supposed advantages, which poor holders are admittedly not capable of turning to account. Such a suggestion can only proceed from a department which seeks an extension of its own lease of life at the risk of taxing the whole country for advantages not enjoyed. It will be impossible for any holder, if this policy is carried out, to foresee what with such an uncertain standard the burden on his land will be at the expiration of the settlement. Settlement work under such circumstances will only become synonymous with all that is irritating, burdensome and demoralizing in the abuse of power, and will throw back the country for another half a century. The Bombay system of settlement already labours under the difficulty that it has not, as under the North-West Provinces and Panjáb systems, any independent standard by which to guage the fairness and sufficiency of its assessments. The old settlements became popular because they were pitched advisedly low. This virtue of prudent abnegation has ceased to characterise the revision settlements, and it is very unfortunate that, just when the work of that department has been condemned by experts and by independent commissions, the Government is disposed to yield to its old temptations, thereby opening the sores which it was hoped would be soon healed up. This whole theory of State rights in subsoil advantages which cannot be realised is based upon communistic ideas, which in any other country would provoke active opposition, but in this country, which is unfortunately the subject of so many experiments, it will only aggravate the old evils of the absence of enterprise, helpless dependence, poverty, low conditions of existence, which have characterized our nation for a thousand years. The depletion represented by what is sneeringly called a scarcely noticeable levy from thousands and millions of poor cultivators will affect the body politic at its weakest source of life and strength. The Government might as well take pride for their statesmanship in giving the canal water free to those who use it and in taxing the springs all over the watershed which flow over into the canal, or they might as well water the tallest trees in their gardens and starve little by little the roots of the small vegetation which grows over the estate. The only effect of such economy will be that their canal will be dried up and their garden scorched into a desert. We have thus dwelt at some length upon the nugatory character, the impracticability, the injustice, and finally the unwisdom, of the course which the Government proposes to adopt in this connection. We are far from thinking that Government is animated by any sinister intentions. It is the penalty of foreign rule that the rulers, however well-meaning, are cut off from all healthy contact with those whose interests they seek to regulate, and all their sins of omission and commission must be attributed to ignorance and want of sympathy. It is this absence of sympathy and this profound ignorance which alone explain the difference of liberal policy in regard to the planting communities on the sides of the Himálayas in Assam, and Kumaon, and in the Nilgeries where Government have sold the freehold of land to private European settlers, and their niggardliness in regard to the revenue management of lands in the possession of their Native subjects, where the most distant approach to a permanent settlement is scouted as impracticable and unsafe. Sir James Caird in his remarks upon the condition of India has observed with a remarkable prescience "that there is strong proof that even a thirty years' settlement is not reckoned by the cultivator such a security as would lead him to spend any capital he can spare on permanent improvements. This is a feeling common to cultivators in all countries. A Government such as ours in India should offer every facility for changing the present tenure into freeholds, because it can be done without loss of revenue, and when done and in the process of doing this change would enlist the willing help of the most numerous and industrious classes in improving the yield of the land and uniting their interests with that of the rulers, through whom alone their possession would be assured." The Government of India in their reply to this suggestion pronounced it to be impracticable because of the apprehended loss of revenue. For the same reason the well-considered proposals of the Secretary of State for extending the permanent settlement to the other provinces were shelved by the Government of India. These apprehensions about the loss of expected revenue lie at the bottom of the unwillingness of Government to take any serious action in the matter. We have however on previous occasions shown that it is quite possible to effect an improvement in the existing arrangements without entailing any loss of revenue on the Government. We do not ask for any measures of a revolutionary character, such as the sudden and sweeping extension of the permanent settlement of money rates, or the selling of freehold in land to the masses. As a matter of fact people have not money enough and to spare for buying up the freehold on Government terms, and the permanent settlement of money rates will no doubt embarrass Government in the future when silver falls still more in value than at present. Our own proposal is that the permanent assessment claimable from all soils should be once for all fixed at a proportion of the gross staple produce, the proportion being based upon the principle of dividing the net profits in kind half and half between the Government and the private holder. This kind payment so fixed should be unchangeable for all time, whatever improvement the private holder may effect in his land. As, however, the Government cannot conveniently receive the kind payment, their disbursements being all in cash, we would commute the kind payments into money values, and these money values would be liable to periodical changes according as prices permanently rise or fall over a great part of the country. All that the Government will have to do under our arrangement will be to keep up accurate statistics of the changes in prices, and the results of 20 or 30 years' price currents will show whether higher or lower prices will be maintained in the next period of corresponding duration. Of course, as laid down by the Government of India in their resolution, it will not be just to raise money values to the exact margin of the permanent rise in prices. A due allowance will have to be made for increased cost of production and a higher standard of living, and a proportionate deduction will have always to be made on this account. Subject to this deduction the money values will remain constant for long periods, and the kind assessments will remain permanent for all time. Every owner or purchaser will know exactly his present and future liabilities, and a great stride will be taken in the improvement of the country by the security thus afforded to the capitalists and the poor farmers. The Government need suffer no loss, and will share proportionately in the increased prosperity of the country, and it will be moreover free to levy special rates for facilities of irrigation actually supplied by it at public expense. The people will have no ground left for complaint about heavy rates when prices were low, for if these low prices had any permanence in them, they would react upon the next periodical money commutation. The Government of India's proposals, based on the acceptance of existing initial values, classifications and measurements, approach in the long run and in a roundabout course to the condition of things which under our proposal will be more directly and speedily secured. It is very unfortunate that the Government of Bombay cannot be brought to see the unwisdom of their course in taking away by one hand what they propose to give up in another direction. It is time that such paltry tampering with great interests should cease. The government of a great country like this cannot afford with dignity to blow hot and cold in the same breath. A true statesmanlike grasp of the question in all its bearings will surely result in far more lasting benefits than this proposal to levy an unjust, impracticable and impolitic tax in lieu of the special water rates which, in deference to public opinion, Government feel themselves called upon to give up. The Survey Department has lasted long enough to outlive all the good that it was intended to achieve, and its further continuance under existing circumstances is a costly mistake, which in the long run will not be found to pay. If the money that is needlessly being spent on this department were saved and made over to the Public Works Department for the purposes of enabling it to dig wells and excavate or repair tanks at public expense, Government would find themselves doubly benefited, and the country would gratefully acknowledge their right to charge water rates on public wells. However this be, the time has certainly arrived when some finality should be enforced peremptorily as a condition of the further temporary continuance of this unsettling department. The real truth of the matter is that the rich lands of Gujarát, which are now ripe for a revision of rates, place temptations in the way of official greed, which is intelligible enough in the subordinate service, but for which there is no excuse in the case of the higher authorities, who are charged with the welfare of many millions of a densely populated and law-abiding country. We beseech Government not to hand over its conscience into the charge of any special department pledged to enrich the public treasury at the expense of the dumb millions, who, if they can only speak, will enforce instant obedience to their wishes.

Remarks in connection with the suggestion for the payment of land revenue assessment in kind.

The Sind Times (5) of the 30th May says:—There is much sound sense in Mr. A. Brownlow Fforde's letter to the Times of India pointing out the advantages of cash payment by the ryot. The difference between levying the land revenue in cash and levying it in kind is that the former system drives the ryot to sell and to bargain, while the latter obliges him to do what he now always does, viz. to barter. He has been from generations accustomed to direct barter, and he cannot therefore be cheated so long as he sticks to it. But in sales and bargains, and in negotiations for sales and bargains, he is like wax in the wily Márwári's hands and can always be cheated. We therefore fail to see how under cash payments the ratio of Government demand to crop value is very constant even in the case of embarrassed ryots. To ryots not embarrassed Mr. Fforde's arguments do not apply at all. To them payment in kind would, we think, be a gain. But we are not prepared to say it would be an unmixed gain. It is true that crop payment would lead to fraud and corruption, and this is a consideration which no one should lose sight of. But under the settlement the crying grievance of the people is that they are overtaxed. The modern revenue machinery is thoroughly unsuited to the genius of the people. The departmentalism, the circumlocution, the minute investigations, the wheels within wheels, which clog the course of revenue business, are felt to be most harassing and oppressive. As for fraud and corruption, we can quote from debates in the Bombay Legislative Council several admissions of the general venality of the subordinate tax-gatherers, even under the present system. The question is, which of the two evils is the greater—corruption under a simple system of payment in kind suitable to the country, or corruption under a complex system of payment in cash unsuited to the country? We incline to the opinion that the former is the lesser of the two evils, and that it is not even now too late to revert to the old primitive method of collection of assessment.

Approves of the appointment of Mr. Forbes Adam as an additional member of the local Legislative Council.

The Jáme Jamshed (102) of the 7th June expresses gratitude to the Honourable Mr. Macaulay for ably discharging the duties of an additional member of the Bombay Legislative Council, and entertains great hopes of Mr. Forbes Adams who has been appointed in the place of the former gentleman. The Jáme requests Government to appoint a Native merchant in the local Legislative Council.

Approves of the action of Government in the matter of the proposed leper asylum.

With reference to the refusal of Government to make over one of the old forts of Sion, Mátunga, Siwri or Varli for making it the head-quarters of a leper colony, the Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 1st June observes that the reasons for the refusal, as stated in the letter of Mr. Symonds and given after consulting the Sanitary Commissioner, appear to be sufficient, and Dr. Meurin or the public can have no ground to complain. The Government apparently sympathise with the benevolent project of the Bishop, and seem ready to aid his scheme should a practical way be pointed out to them for the purpose. His project is worthy of all praise. It appeals to the sympathy and support of all right-minded people in this city. It seeks to supply a great public desideratum which has long been felt on this side. And it is to be hoped that the worthy prelate will not be discouraged by the unavoidable refusal of the Government to concede his first request, but will continue to persevere in his attempt until success should crown his laudable endeavours. [The Rást Goftár (112) and the Yajdán Parast (125) of the same date express similar sentiments.]

Remarks on the Government resolution declining to grant a site for a leper asylum.

In a paragraph headed "Leper Asylum," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 2nd June says:—The Government of Bombay have issued a resolution declining to sanction any of the forts at Sion, Mátunga, Siwri or Varli to be converted into an asylum for lepers. Our readers are aware that last year some benevolent gentlemen of Bombay started a scheme to build a hospital for lepers in a place sufficiently secluded and distant from the city, and requested Government to grant them one of the four above-named forts. Government have now declared their readiness to assist any such movement, but do not consent to any of the particular forts named to be occupied. The objections set up by Government to the proposals of the promoters of the asylum scheme are undoubtedly sound, but we wish Government had in refusing the proposed sites themselves suggested or offered a more suitable one. Such a suggestion or offer would have given more genuine testimony of the sincerity of Government than the general assurance of good will contained in the last paragraph of their resolution. We hope, however, the promoters will not let the scheme fall through.

Expresses regret at Government having declined to grant a site for a leper asylum.

The Native Opinion (11) of the 1st June, in a paragraph headed "The proposed Leper Asylum," says:—We are sorry the Local Government should have declined to accord the above proposal the amount of sympathy and moral support it deserved. Such an institution is badly needed in Bombay, and if Sir James had given the support he did to the St. John's Ambulance Association a leper asylum would have been now in existence. We hope the scheme will not be given up. If it is persisted in and the philanthropically disposed shettias extend their support, the scheme will soon bear fruit.

Says that steps should be taken at once for providing sufficient accommodation in the lunatic asylums of this Presidency.

In alluding to the Government resolution on the report on the lunatic asylums of this Presidency for the year 1883, the Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 1st June says:—It appears that the old-standing complaint about the want of accommodation in the asylums continued to exist during the year, though the inadequacy of space was not quite so pressing as in the previous years. The consequence was the necessity to refuse admission to patients until vacancies occurred in four out of the five existing asylums. Nor can be there any saying with confidence as to when this very unsatisfactory state of affairs will end. Though Government state in the review of the report for 1882 that when the new asylum at Ratnágiri is completed the existing institutions will be relieved of the pressure now felt, yet the said completion appears as yet a very remote contingency. The present resolution states, the said asylum at Ratnágiri is estimated to cost in all Rs. 92,345; but of this sum Rs. 13,250 were spent up to the end of 1882-83, only Rs. 3,000 were to be spent in 1883-84, and no more than Rs. 20,000 have been provided for the purpose in the Public Works Budget for 1884-85. Thus at the end of the current official year Rs. 36,250, or merely a trifle more than one-third of the total grant required for building the asylum, will have been made, and the work will have advanced to that extent at the end of March next. This will not prove encouraging to the hopes of those wishing the unfortunate lunatics to be better cared for than has been the case for years past. A large portion of the public will be disposed to look upon the indifference with which Government allows this state of affairs to continue as reproachful to the State. It is true that Government in its present resolution recommends the Public Works Department to provide, if possible, a larger grant in future with a view to the speedy completion of the Ratnágiri Asylum. But unless pressure is brought to bear on the said department to induce it to give effect to the recommendation, it will prove a mere dead letter. Care should be taken by the authority to whom it may concern to see that the important recommendation is attended to. In the meantime Government should try to adopt some temporary means of relieving themselves of the blame in the matter.

Disapproves of the proposed extension of the Indian Factory Act to small mills and factories.

In noticing the report which appeared in a recent issue of the Times of India that Government intend to appoint a commission for the purpose of ascertaining the necessity for bringing under the Indian Factory Act the mills and factories in which steam-engines of certain horse-power are used and less than one hundred persons are employed as well as those factories in which no steam-engines are in use but which are worked by less than one hundred hands, the Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 4th June observes that the Factory Act has not met with the full approval of the public, and its extension must prove distasteful to them. Past experience has shown that the officials entrusted with carrying a legal enactment into effect prove by their improper mode of working more troublesome than the legal measure itself, and hence the proposed factory law would very likely prove distasteful to the public. It is complained that in the wool-cleaning factories much dust and particles of wool fly about in the air and produce a bad effect on the health of the workmen. The nature of the work of cleaning wool is such that dust must fly about and no amount of legal enactments or of official interference can prevent the flying of dust. A legal enactment may at the best create some convenience for the workmen, but this may be secured without the intervention of a law. The workmen in English cotton mills complained to Parliament the other day that the current practice of applying starch to cotton cloth injured their health, and though the prevention of the existing system of starching thread and cloth would be highly beneficial to cotton industry, no steps have been taken by the authorities in the matter as it would prove distasteful to mill-owners. If the Bombay Government really wish to appoint a commission, they should publish the grounds on which it is thought desirable to take the step, and appoint on the commission some Native gentlemen of experience possessing sufficient independence of character. [A correspondent of the Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 7th June expresses approval of the above sentiments, and observes that there are about one dozen small factories worked with small steam-engines in Bombay to which it is intended to apply the Factory Act. The wool-cleaning factories and the flour mills come under the definition of a small factory, but in none of them children are employed. A few grown up men are employed in these factories, which are worked at times, and the mill hands have not hitherto complained of any inconveniences. The application of the Factory Act to these factories will only cause a hindrance in their proper working.]

Advocates the establishment of appellate benches in the mofussil for the disposal of appeals.

The Gujaráti (98) of the 1st June refers to the intention of the Bengal Government to establish four appellate benches in that presidency with a view to avoid delay, expense and inconvenience to suitors, and observes that the Bombay Government should also open such appellate benches in this Presidency. At present people have to come to Bombay for appeal from Sátára and even from Viramgám and Godhra. It is the duty of Government to see that justice is cheaply and easily dispensed to the people, because it derives a large profit from the administration of justice by the institution of court-fees. As an experimental measure appellate benches should be opened at Ahmedabad and Poona. These two cities command a central position. By the establishment of appellate benches much delay and expense will be saved to appellants. A Civilian of great experience and well acquainted with the manners and customs of the people and a Native Subordinate Judge of long standing and experience should be appointed Judges in each of these courts. It should be ruled that the decision of these appellate benches could only be reviewed on appeal by the Privy Council. The subject is very important and worthy of attention. For the comfort of appellants and for reducing the arrears in the High Court, Government ought carefully to attend to the above suggestions. It is to be hoped that the Bombay Government, following in the wake of the Bengal Government, will ask the sanction of the Secretary of State for India for establishing appellate benches in this Presidency.

Suggests the creation of a bench of honorary magistrates in all large towns for the disposal of petty criminal cases and municipal offences.

The Arunodayă (17) of 1st June, in alluding to the contemplated creation of a bench of honorary magistrates at Sholápur, observes that Government ought to have benches of honorary magistrates in all large towns for the decision of petty criminal cases and offences against the municipal laws. Many advantages will result from the creation of such magistrates. Government will be as it were allowing Natives to take part in the management of public affairs and the work of the officials will be reduced. The people in the neighbourhood of the capital are more intelligent as compared with those who reside far away from it. Hence benches of magistrates ought to have been sanctioned long ago in all large towns near Bombay, but the creation of honorary magistrates in places very distant from Bombay might lead people to think that Government did not wish this experiment to prove successful. In order to remove this idea from the minds of the public, the Arunodayă trusts that benches of magistrates will be sanctioned in all large towns.

Complains of the severity of the A'bkári Act.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (105) of the 1st June revives the old complaint that the country spirituous drinks have become very costly and various adulterations thereof have injured the health of their consumers. It condemns the practice of giving liquor contracts for an entire district to a single individual. The Kaiser further observes that the consequence of the stringent A'bkári Act and of its strict operation has been that the country spirituous liquors have been made very dear, that the ábkári income has been considerably increased, and that the consumption of Europe spirituous drinks has been encouraged. The Europe liquors are largely adulterated and consequently the health of their consumers will suffer terribly. It is said that it is intended to give the liquor contract for the city of Bombay to a single individual. If this comes to pass hundreds of poor families which eke out their livelihood by the retail sale of country spirits will be completely ruined.

Complains of the excessively heavy tax on toddy and toddy licenses.

A correspondent of the Din Bandhu (6) of 1st June, signing himself a Bhandári, says:—A perusal of the A'bkári Revenue Collector's notice dated 6th ultimo about the auction sale of toddy and toddy spirit licenses will convince an impartial judge that the taxation on toddy and toddy spirit is heavy and its restrictions onerous. The Bhandáris or toddy and toddy spirit dealers have up to 31st July 1884 to pay Rs. 2,581 per annum for each license of 100 cocoanut trees at Rs. 1½ per tree per month, but for the same license they will have for the future to pay the probable gallon fee of Rs. 4,201 (including fazindárs' rent) per annum at the rate of Rs. 2-6-0 per gallon; while in 1782 they had only to pay Rs. 12½. They have up to 31st July 1884 to pay, on an average, Rs. 150 per annum for a toddy and toddy spirit license, but they will have for the year 1884-85 to pay Rs. 500 or so for the same; while in 1841 they had to pay Rs. 2 only. They are therefore obliged to ask why they should be overloaded with such an enormous, unbearable, unpopular tax which tends to destroy the Native industry.

Requests His Excellency the Governor of Bombay not to delay any more in taking due notice of the Charni Road level crossing case.

In noticing the statement made in a recent issue of the Times of India that Dr. Banks' case will be shortly taken before Parliament, the Jáme Jamshed (102) of the 7th June observes that some one ought to ask the reason why a severe minute was indited by the Bombay Government in the Doctor's case and why Captain Fergusson's case was simply passed over. Captain Fergusson and Colonel Brown deserve more censure than was passed upon Dr. Banks' conduct. It is to be regretted that Sir James Fergusson should have used in these cases, as well as in that of the Collector of Surat and his Huzur Deputy, different scales for the dispensation of justice. His Excellency ought to take at once due notice of the Charni Road level crossing case.

Says that Mr. Mackenzie, the Collector of Broach, ought to enquire into the case of assault committed by Mr. Pestanji Jamshedji, the head clerk in the Local Funds Department, on a bhisti in broad daylight.

The Broach Samáchár (89) of the 5th June observes that it is said that Mr. Pestanji Jamshedji, the head clerk in the Local Funds Department at Broach, severely assaulted with a stick a bhisti (water-carrier) near the Katpor Gates in broad daylight. It is said that the matter was to be taken before the Magistrate, but it has been amicably settled. There can be nothing more disgraceful to the Pársis than that a respectable officer and a descendant of the well-known Dastur family should thus commit an assault in a public street, for it is most cowardly that a respectable man should beat a poor labourer. Several haughty Anglo-Indians who assault poor Natives are vilified by the Native public. A respectable Native who beats a poor man and escapes punishment should in the same manner be exposed. The Samáchár will be glad to publish any explanation regarding the assault. But Mr. Pestanji and those who pride in beating poor people should know that the latter ought not to be thus treated. The bhisti was strong enough to beat two men like his assailant, but he knew that he was poor and that he would have to suffer severely for retaliating. So he quietly submitted to be beaten. With a view that such instances may not occur again, the Samáchár recommends Mr. Mackenzie, the newly appointed Collector of Broach, to duly enquire into the matter of the assault committed by one of his subordinates. The present Government is most anxious to make a public example of those officers of Government who oppress the poor. With a view to stopping such unseemly conduct they degrade Europeans high in office. When such is the case, it is necessary that Government and Government officials should take notice of the conduct of a Native servant of Government, who though well acquainted with the law mercilessly assaulted a poor Native in a public street. The Samáchár will hereafter inform its readers what action the new Collector takes in connection with this suggestion. Notwithstanding this, if Mr. Pestanji will assure the Samáchár that the bhisti was beaten for some grave offence or that he did not beat him at all, it will do him justice without delay.

Approves of the formation of a public park in Bombay and requests Government to support the scheme.

In a paragraph headed "Fergusson Park," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 2nd June says:—That suggestion of P. B's is indeed a fine one. It has been pretty generally supported by the press, and it would be a graceful thing for Government to give effect to it by lending it their countenance. For our part we greatly rejoice to see the lungs of our city improved and our health resorts multiplied. The only considerable health resort for Bombay is the Victoria Gardens, but it is at the northern extremity of the island, and is so out of the way and distant from the greater part of the city that a good park or garden on its southern side is a great want and the proposal to form a park on the Esplanade is very well suited to meet that want. By associating the laying out of the park with the name of our respected Governor, the proposal will surely improve its chances of success. We trust the Government will see their way to make a free gift of the site for the park, but if that is deemed too great a sacrifice of the public revenues, we hope the public spirit of our citizens will not be unequal to the occasion. A public subscription should be started and the land should be bought up from the Government. We can assure our shettias their money will be more usefully employed in laying it out on a public park in honour of Sir James Fergusson than on the equestrian statue of His Excellency's predecessor.

Treasure trove at Broach.

The Broach Samáchár (89) of the 5th June states that one Gomti, a Hindu widow residing in Kesurmáma's Chakla, Broach, is said to have met with a treasure trove of about Rs. 5,000 when constructing a privy in her residence. The police ought to ascertain the truth of this rumour. [The Broach Vartamán (90) of the 2nd June makes a similar statement.]

Says that Government should furnish vernacular newspapers with copies of resolutions and reports which are made public.

The Satyá Shodhak (61) of 1st June alludes to the resolution of Government for 1882-83 on municipal administration in the Bombay Presidency, and observes that vernacular newspapers have not been furnished with a copy of this State document. Some English newspapers however have received a copy of this resolution. The Native newspapers have to depend for this kind of information on English journals when it is in the power of Government to supply them with it themselves. The Satyá Shodhak trusts that Government will hereafter furnish vernacular newspapers with copies of resolutions and reports which are made public.

Reflections on the career of Sir Bartle Frere.

In an article headed "Sir Bartle Frere," the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 2nd June says:—He was an administrator of the type of Elphinstone, Malcolm, Metcalfe and Munro, whose memories were fresh in the Deccan when he first arrived there, and if he did not reach the ideal of these great masters to the full, it must be admitted he was no mean pupil of theirs. Sanguineness and impulsiveness were his great faults, and latterly there was a notion among Natives that he was not quite sincere in his warm protestations of affection for them. Some would liken him rather to his successor Sir Richard Temple than his great predecessors named above. His conduct after leaving Bombay gave colour to this supposition. In the inglorious Afghan war he supported Lord Lytton and the Marquis of Salisbury, and in the discussions on the Ilbert Bill likewise he threw his weight on the wrong side. But to our mind these latter manifestations mark not a change of mind, but an attempt at trimming and coquetting with his opponents when he had lost the confidence of his friends. As observed above, his life was embittered at its close, and his sayings and doings then cannot be taken to rightly interpret his career in the bloom of his life here. His character as an Indian administrator we would measure by his words and deeds here, and they were enough to stamp him as a great, if not one of the greatest of administrators. But let us not forget that for thirty long years, amid many adverse influences, he preserved a character for steady friendship and sympathy with the fallen sons of the soil, that he gave the blessings of good government with an equal hand to vast tracts of unsettled country, and that he was one of the few Englishmen who kept their heads cool during the storms of 1857. As a Councillor to the Viceroy at a time when the prevailing European sentiments ran high against Natives he maintained the principles of equality and justice; as a ruler he enforced these principles into practice. [Many of the papers received in this week express deep regret at the death of Sir Bartle Frere.]

Legislation.—The Bengal Rent Bill.

Supports the Bengal Rent Bill.

The Bombay Chronicle (78) of the 1st June observes that the sole aim and purpose of Government in the matter of the Bengal Rent Bill is to enable the poor cultivators of the soil to enjoy a fair share of the produce of their hard labour and their legal rights as such cultivators. Throughout all their proceedings in the matter of this troublesome Bill every effort would appear to have been made by the authorities to give full effect to this desire. The Government, while being made the subject of undeserved reproaches and utterly unmerited rebukes by interested and short-sighted opponents of the Bill, have nobly managed to give every facility to the latter for the full vindication of what they might hold as their view of the case, and for protecting the so-called interests of those on whose behalf they might be opposing the great measure of important State policy embraced in the said Bill. It is in pursuance of this commendable and generous course that the Government of Bengal have now "issued a circular directing all Commissioners of divisions to consult their district officers on questions connected with the Tenancy Bill." The fact of the circular constitutes further telling evidence of the earnest desire of the authorities to legislate on the subject only for the good of all classes of the people and with the aid of the full light of all available information in respect of every interest which its different provisions may be supposed to affect. And in the face of such evidence independent judges of public measures must concede that the Government deserve to be spoken of in more becoming tone than so many opponents of the Tenancy Bill have thought proper to do.

Education.

Bad condition of the Kánarese school No. 5 in the Dhárwár District.

The Chháva (23) of the 1st June says that the Kánarese school No. 5 in the Dhárwár District is in a very bad condition. It is attended mostly by children of the Kakar caste. The average attendance is 73, which is half the number borne on the rolls. Mahár children are allowed to sit with those of Kunbis and Mahomedans. Girls of respectable parents are made to sit with girls of public women. There is a Maráthi map of the Bombay Presidency in the school while the vernacular of the children is Kánarese. The master of this school is sometimes absent and frequently comes late. In March last two members of the school committee reported that the master, Fakir Sáheb, should be reduced on account of his constant absence from the school, but nothing has as yet been done to carry out this recommendation.

Railways.

Recommends that some Native gentlemen should be sent to give evidence before the Select Committee on Indian railways.

The Jáme Jamshed (102) of the 2nd June observes that the natives of India have more concern with the question of the rapid extension of railways in this country, on which subject evidence is being taken by the Indian Railway Committee, than European merchants can have; and hence it is desirable that Native gentlemen from each of the three presidencies possessing the requisite experience should be sent to England to give evidence before the Committee. The travelling expenses of the three witnesses should be paid from the public treasury, as has been done in the case of the Honourable Dr. Hunter, Major Conway Gordon and another European gentleman who have been deputed to appear before the Committee.

Says that a third class carriage should be set apart on the G. I. P. Railway for passengers who are accompanied by the ladies of their families.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of 5th June says that the permission recently given to third class passengers to travel on the G. I. P. Railway line with the ladies of their families in the same compartment would appear to be advantageous to the public, but it is likely to prove otherwise, since an opportunity will be afforded to disreputable persons to misbehave before respectable women. In order to prevent women of respectability from being subjected to annoyance, it would be well if a carriage or two were reserved in each train for the use of such passengers only as are accompanied by the ladies of their household. The Dnyán Prakásh is also of opinion that there should be an intermediate class between the second and third or the fourth class should be revived. Those persons who cannot afford to travel second class find that the present third class is not good enough for them.

Says that Mr. Duxbury should not be removed from the management of the B. B. & C. I. Railway on the amalgamation of that line with the Rájputána-Málwa Railway.

The Jáme Jamshed (102) of the 4th June joins its Native contemporaries in noticing the rumour that Mr. Duxbury is to be removed from the management of the B. B. & C. I. Railway on the amalgamation of that line with the Rájputána-Málwa Railway, and expresses a hope that he will remain in office. The reasons advanced in support of the advocacy of Mr. Duxbury's cause are the same as those put forth by the Bombay Chronicle of the 25th ultimo and reported at page 16 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 31st May. [The Suryă Prakásh (82) of the 31st May requests Government to retain the services of Messrs. Wood and Duxbury, the Agent and the Traffic Manager respectively of the B. B. & C. I. Railway on the amalgamation of that line with the Rájputána Railway.]

Says that the passengers on the Rájputána-Málwa Railway suffer from certain inconveniences.

The Bombay Samáchár (88) of the 7th June observes that the passengers on the Rájputána-Málwa Railway suffer great inconveniences. No urinaries are made in the carriages, and as the trains stop at each station for a few minutes and the doors of the carriages that are locked from the outside are not opened soon, the passengers suffer considerable annoyance. Sufficient drinking water is not supplied to the passengers, who though willing to pay a small extra charge for it do not get it. Sometimes female passengers are made to sit in the carriages in which male passengers are sitting and thus inconvenience and annoyance are caused to the former. The passengers suffer from several other inconveniences.

Municipalities.

Says that certain Government officers on the managing committee of the Poona Municipality do not attend the meetings of that committee.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 2nd June, in an article headed "The attitude of subordinate officers to the Local Self-government Scheme," says:—Last year in March the elective principle was first introduced into the constitution of the local municipality and the new body acceded to office in June following. On 2nd July 1883 the first managing committee was elected. Of the seven members elected only one was from among the ex-officio members, and this one was Mr. C. W. Richardson, then acting City Magistrate. That evening the managing committee held its first sitting and elected Mr. Dorábji Padamji as its chairman till the end of March 1884. Mr. Richardson was in our midst during nearly the whole period of nine months, and yet he is reported to have attended not a single meeting of the managing committee during that period. Again in April last with the commencement of the new year fresh elections for the managing committee took place, and in the meantime the permanent City Magistrate, Mr. Plunkett, had returned. He was elected among the seven members. But the new managing committee also elected Mr. Dorábji Padamji as its chairman. The result has been that like his locum tenens Mr. Plunkett is also reported to have attended not a single meeting of the managing committee. The practical result is that though seven members are supposed to work, the burden of work falls upon six only. This is certainly not fair. One would suppose that Mr. Richardson and Mr. Plunkett would have resigned their seats on the committee. But they did nothing of the kind. Now what does this signify? If we are not much mistaken, prior to 1875 the then City Magistrate, Mr. E. T. Richardson, used to be a member of the managing committee without being its chairman; and it is said he never regularly absented himself from the meetings of the committee, but on the contrary worked cordially and harmoniously with his colleagues. It is pretty generally understood that if Mr. Richardson had been appointed chairman, or if Mr. Plunkett were appointed chairman tomorrow, they would have both worked cheerfully. It is on the cordial co-operation of this class of officers that the Government of India rely for the success of their policy !!! Besides these officers are encouraged in this sort of attitude by the district officers !!! Mr. Peile confidently said from his place in Council last year that when the desire of Government is correctly understood the district officers (by which term he meant, we suppose, the district officers and the whole of their staff) would order their participation in the administration of local affairs accordingly. May we venture to ask the honourable gentleman if this is the right way of understanding the desire of Government—the way in which the local staff of this district has understood the desire of Government? We hope the Bombay Government will take a due note of the fact which we have mentioned above, and issue stringent instructions for the guidance of their officers.

Disapproves of the alleged intention of the Surat Municipality to purchase the electric light engine which hitherto supplied light.

The Gujarát Mitră (79) of the 1st June condemns the alleged intention of the Surat Municipality to purchase the electric light machine which hitherto supplied light to a portion of that city, but which has been found to be not sufficiently good to do the work satisfactorily. The Mitră hopes that the corporation will not be so indiscreet as to purchase a worthless thing.

Berár Affairs.

Criticises the rules regarding the employment of pleaders and authorised agents in revenue cases.

The Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 2nd June, in alluding to the rules regarding the employment of pleaders and authorised agents in revenue cases, says:—Rule II. is objectionable on principle. There should be no restriction placed upon litigants engaging a pleader to conduct their cases. This rule as it stands does not allow full freedom of action to the litigants unless they fall within one or the other of exceptions under which they are entitled to represent themselves by pleaders. As in civil cases litigants are allowed to employ pleaders to conduct their cases without any distinction whatsoever, whether their cases are simple or difficult, so also in revenue cases there appears to be no sufficient reason why the discretion of litigants should be fettered. We are at a loss to understand why the Administration should have taken upon itself the task of dictating to litigating parties about the employment of pleaders. It might be argued that in framing this rule this Administration was actuated by benevolent motives to save that little money which could be paid for legal assistance which is not necessary. If this be the real motive of the framers of the rule we give them credit for it, but notwithstanding this it will not find favour with the public. It is a matter of privilege or right which one may exercise or waive. It would appear to be the look-out of those who have to open their purse rather than that of the Administration. If all facilities are allowed to persons fighting their cases in civil courts there is no reason why some or any of them should be withheld in revenue matters. Next we come to Rule III. This rule deals with the employment of pleaders in intricate or difficult cases. Now the question, what is an intricate or a difficult case is nowhere defined. It must depend upon its own merits to be decided in each particular case. What to one officer may seem an intricate or a difficult case may appear to another to be a very simple one, and hence there will always be conflicting decisions. This rule allows that when a court considers it necessary or advisable that a pleader should be employed it should record its grounds for so thinking. It appears however to have been drawn without reserving any powers to the appellate courts to see whether there has been a proper and sound exercise of discretion. Rule IV. empowers revenue courts to admit authorised agents in all cases in which they may see sufficient reason to grant the permission. This rule is very vague. It is capable of any interpretation which a court may like to put on it. It would chiefly depend upon the whim of an officer presiding in each court for the time being to allow or disallow it. Rule V. is the most important of all the rules. It deals with the remuneration of pleaders. Its chief feature consists in prohibiting all the courts from taking judicial cognizance of any arrangements that may be entered into by pleaders with their clients. It is strange that the framers of this rule should disallow pleaders' fees in revenue matters. Pleaders will seldom betake themselves to revenue business, since in the majority of cases the major portion of the remuneration fixed is to be paid after successful termination of the case. Public interests, we are sure, must suffer so long as these rules stand as they are. Rule V. is silent with respect to the arrangements for the remuneration of authorised agents. But since there is no special exclusion it appears they can sue their employer for their remuneration. If this is so, it is very strange that while pleaders are precluded from suing their clients authorised agents can do so. On the whole we think these rules are anything but satisfactory. Though it may appear to some that a new field for professional men is opened, yet it will be found in the working of them that they are beset with difficulties. However something is better than nothing.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
10*th June* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

Ábkári:
  Complaint regarding the severity of the — Act 17
  Complaint regarding the excessively heavy tax on toddy and toddy licenses 17
Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
  Expression of opinion that the contentment of the people of India is the strongest bulwark against a Russian invasion and advice to Government to keep the inhabitants of India contented ... 6
  Reflections on the— 7
Agricultural Banks:
  Expression of opinion that before starting an agricultural bank the scheme for working it should be published and experienced agriculturists should be invited to give their opinion ... 9
  Expression of satisfaction at Government having sanctioned the establishment of an agricultural bank as an experimental measure in the Junnar Táluka 10
Appellate benches in the mofussil for the disposal of appeals: Advocacy of the establishment of— 16
Assault committed by Mr. Pestanji Jamshedji, the head clerk in the Local Funds Department at Broach, on a bhisti: Expression of opinion that Mr. Mackenzie, the Collector of Broach, ought to enquire into the case of — in broad daylight 17
Bench of Honorary Magistrates: Suggestion for the creation of a — in all large towns for the disposal of petty criminal cases and municipal offences... 16
Bombay Legislative Council: Approval of the appointment of Mr. Forbes Adam as an additional member of the— 14
Career of Sir Bartle Frere: Reflections on the— 18
Civil Service of India:
  Denunciation of the insincerity of Lord Lytton in connection with the Civil Service question 7
  Expression of opinion that Lord Lytton's statement that he never advocated the exclusion of Natives from the — only exhibits his perversity of conduct 8
Fracas at the Charni Road level-crossing: Request to His Excellency the Governor of Bombay not to delay any more in taking due notice of the— 17
Hunting excursions: Advice that European soldiers going on — should be kept under proper restraint 9
Indian Factory Act: Disapproval of the proposed extension of the — to small mills and factories 15
Jails: Recommendation for the multiplication and extension of remunerative industries in Indian— 9
Land Revenue Assessment:
  Objection to the policy of Government to tax subsoil water advantages and suggestions about the settlement of the land tax in perpetuity 11
  Remarks in connection with the suggestion for the payment of — in kind 14
Lepers in Bombay:
  Approval of the action of Government in the matter of the proposed leper asylum 14
  Expression of regret at Government having declined to grant a site for a leper asylum 15
  Remarks on the Government resolution declining to grant a site for a leper asylum 14
Lunatic Asylums: Expression of opinion that steps should be taken at once for providing sufficient accommodation in the — of the Bombay Presidency 15
Maxims of Government in India enunciated by Sir James Stephen: Remarks on certain— 3

Page.

Part I.—Politics and the Public Administration—continued.

Public Honours:
- Criticism on the bestowal of this year's birthday honours ... 11
- Expression of astonishment that Mr. Dádábhái Nawroji's name should have been omitted from the list of persons on whom honours were conferred on the Queen's birthday 10

Public park in Bombay: Approval of the formation of a — and a request to Government to give their support to the scheme 18
Salt: Criticism on the replies given by the Under Secretary of State for India to questions asked by Mr. Burt in Parliament about the severity of the — Act in the Madras Presidency 6
Stores: Expression of opinion that the provincial Governments should be compelled to purchase country articles more largely than they have hitherto done 8
Treasure trove at Broach: Finding of a— 18
Vernacular papers: Expression of opinion that Government should furnish — with copies of resolutions and reports which are made public 18

Part II.—Legislation—

Bengal Rent Bill: A support to the— 19

Part III.—Education—

Kánarese school No. 5 in the Dhárwár District: Bad condition of the—. 19

Part IV.—Railways—

Amalgamation of the B. B. & C. I. Railway with the Rájputána-Málwa Railway: Expression of opinion that Mr. Duxbury should not be removed from the management of the B. B. & C. I. Railway on the—. 20
G. I. P. Railway: Expression of opinion that a third class carriage should be set apart on the — for passengers who are accompanied by the ladies of their families 20
Rájputána-Málwa Railway: Inconveniences suffered by the passengers on the— 20
Select Committee on Indian railways: Recommendation that some Native gentlemen should be sent to give evidence before the— ... 20

Part V.—Municipalities—

Poona: Statement that certain Government officers on the managing committee of the — Municipality do not attend the meetings of that committee 20
Surat: Disapproval of the alleged intention of the — Municipality to purchase the electric light engine which hitherto supplied light ... 21

Part VI.—Berár Affairs—

Rules regarding the employment of pleaders and authorised agents in revenue cases: Criticism on the— 21

BOMBAY: PRINTED AT THE GOVERNMENT CENTRAL PRESS.

[CONFIDENTIAL.]

REPORT
ON
NATIVE PAPERS
PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY AND BERA'R

For the Week ending 14th June 1884.

List of Newspapers and Periodicals.

No	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	ENGLISH.
1	The Indian Spectator	Bombay	Weekly	450
2	„ Mahrátta	Poona	Do.	475
3	„ Morning Star	Ahmedabad	Monthly	450
*4	„ Quarterly Journal of the Poona Sárvajanik Sabha	Poona	Quarterly	200
5	„ Sind Times	Karáchi	Bi-weekly	250
	ANGLO-MARA'THI.
6	The Din Bandhu	Bombay	Weekly	1,400
7	„ Dnyán Chakshu	Poona	Do.	1,000
8	„ Dnyánodayă	Bombay	Do.	409
9	„ Dnyán Prakásh	Poona	Bi-weekly	484
10	„ Indu Prakásh	Bombay	Weekly	1,038
11	„ Native Opinion	Do.	Do.	575
12	„ Prabhákar	Do.	Daily	350
13	„ Pramod Sindhu	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Weekly	200
14	„ Shetakaryáncha Kaivári	Bombay	Fortnightly	950
15	„ Subodh Patrika	Do.	Weekly	600
16	„ Varhád (Berár) Samáchár	Akola	Do.	250
	MARA'THI.
17	The Arunodayă	Thána	Weekly	555
18	„ A'ryávart	Dhulia	Do.	100
19	„ Bakul	Ratnágiri	Do.	450
20	„ Belgaum Samáchár	Belgaum	Do.	260
21	„ Bhála	Sholápur	Do.	240
22	„ Bodh Sudhákar[1]	Sátára	Do.	275
*23	„ Chháva	Dhárwár	Do.	200
*24	„ Chikitsak	Sholápur	Do.	200
25	„ Daivadnyă Samáchár	Bombay	Fortnightly	500
*26	„ Dakshin Vritt	Kolhápur	Weekly	200
27	„ Dhárwár Vritt	Dhárwár	Do.	425
28	„ Dnyán Bodhak	Belgaum	Do.	140
29	„ Dnyán Ságar	Kolhápur	Do.	116
30	„ Ganga Lahari	Násik	Do.	100
31	„ Hindu Punch	Thána	Do.	285
32	„ Hitechchhu	Kaládgi	Do.	85
33	„ Israel[1]	Bombay	Fortnightly	400
34	„ Jagadádarsh	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
35	„ Jagan Mitră	Ratnágiri	Do.	145
36	„ Kalpataru	Sholápur	Do.	130
*37	„ Karnátak Mitră[2]	Belgaum	Do.	200
*38	„ Katáksh	Poona	Do.	200
39	„ Kesari	Do.	Do.	4,200
40	„ Khándesh Vaibhav	Dhulia	Do.	125
41	„ Lamp of Judaism	Bombay	Fortnightly	300
42	„ Lokahitavádi	Poona	Monthly	220
*43	„ Mádhavi	Dhárwár	Weekly	200
44	„ Mahárásthtră Hitechchhu	Bombay	Do.	1,000
45	„ Mahárásthtră Mitră	Sátára	Do.	250
46	„ Nagar Samáchár	Ahmednagar	Do.	150
47	„ Násik Vritt	Násik	Do.	100
*48	„ Nibandh Chandrika	Poona	Monthly	200
49	„ Nyáyă Sindhu	Ahmednagar	Weekly	185
50	„ Panchánan	Málvan	Do.	800
51	„ Pandhari Vaibhav	Pandharpur	Do.	103
*52	„ Pisháchanáth	Bombay	Fortnightly	200
53	„ Poona Vaibhav	Poona	Weekly	250
*54	„ Prabodh Chandrika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
*55	„ Pratod	Islámpur	Do.	200
*56	„ Pune Sárvajanik Sabheche Másik Pustak	Poona	Monthly	200
*57	„ Rámdás	Bijápur	Weekly	200
58	„ Saddharm Dip	Alibág	Monthly	600
59	„ Sanmárgă Dipika	Bombay	Fortnightly	150
60	„ Satyă Prakásh	Do.	Weekly	243
61	„ Satyă Sadan	Alibág	Do.	400
62	„ Satyă Shodhak	Ratnágiri	Do.	140
*63	„ Sharabh	Alibág	Do.	200
64	„ Shetakari	Umráwati (Amráoti)	Monthly	400
*65	„ Shivájí[1]	Poona	Weekly	200
66	„ Shubh Suchak	Sátára	Do.	90
67	„ Suryakánt	Ellichpur	Do.	150
68	„ Suryodayă	Thána	Do.	240

---

[1] Frequently admits English articles.

[2] Contains articles in Kánarese also.

CON 185

No.	Names of Newspapers.	Place of publication.	Edition.	Number of Copies issued.
	Mara'thi—continued.
*69	The Svadesh Hitechchhu	Bombay	Weekly	150
70	„ Telagu Mitră	Do.	Do.	400
71	„ Vártáhar	Do.	Do.	200
72	„ Vasai (Bassein) Samáchár	Bassein	Do.	175
73	„ Vengurla Vritt	Vengurla	Do.	200
*74	„ Vetál	Bombay	Do.	200
75	„ Vichárshil	Málvan	Do.	300
*76	„ Vinod	Poona	Do.	200
*77	„ Vinod Mallika	Jalgaon	Do.	200
78	„ Vividh Dnyán Vistár	Bombay	Monthly	400
	Anglo-Gujara'ti.
79	The Bombay Chronicle	Bombay	Weekly	200
80	„ Gujarát Mitră	Surat	Do.	400
81	„ Hitechchhu	Ahmedabad	Do.	349
82	„ Surat Akhbár	Surat	Do.	600
83	„ Suryă Prakásh	Do.	Do.	137
	Gujara'ti.
84	The Ahmedabad Samáchár	Ahmedabad	Weekly	25
85	„ Akhbáre Sodágar	Bombay	Daily	750
86	„ A'ryă Dharm Prakásh	Do.	Monthly	304
87	„ A'ryă Dnyán Vardhak	Do.	Do.	500
*88	„ A'ryă Subodhak	Surat	Do.	200
89	„ Bombay Samáchár	Bombay	Daily	1,090
90	„ Broach Samáchár	Broach	Weekly	700
91	„ Broach Vartmán	Do.	Do.	60
92	„ Buddhi Prakásh	Ahmedabad	Monthly	600
93	„ Dátardun	Bombay	Weekly	525
94	„ Deshi Mitră	Surat	Do.	1,000
95	„ Dharmă Sadbodh Ratnă	Do.	Monthly	200
96	„ Dnyánodayă	Broach	Do.	475
97	„ Dnyán Vardhak	Bombay	Do.	400
98	„ Fursad	Do.	Do.	100
99	„ Gujaráti	Do.	Weekly	1,000
*100	„ Gujarát Monthly Journal	Do.	Monthly	200
101	„ Gul Afshán	Do.	Do.	659
*102	„ Hitopadeshak Ratnă	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
103	„ Jáme Jamshed	Bombay	Daily	525
104	„ Kaira Khetiwádi Patră	Nadiád	Monthly	1,400
105	„ Kaira Vartamán	Kaira	Weekly	115
*106	„ Kaiser-i-Hind	Bombay	Do.	200
*107	„ Kapol-hita-wardhak	Do.	Monthly	200
108	„ Káside Mumbai	Do.	Tri-weekly	700
109	„ Nágar Udayă	Ahmedabad	Monthly	300
110	„ Niti Prakásh	Kaira	Weekly	200
111	„ Nure Elam	Bombay	Monthly	381
112	„ Pársi Punch	Do.	Weekly	225
113	„ Rást Goftár	Do.	Do.	1,814
114	„ Samsher Báhádur	Ahmedabad	Do.	200
115	„ Satyă Mitră	Bombay	Do.	400
*116	„ Sauráshtră Darpan	Junágad	Monthly	200
117	„ Shrimáli Shubhechchhak	Jámnagar	Do.	375
118	„ Stri Bodh	Bombay	Do.	533
*119	„ Subodh Prakásh	Nadiád	Do.	200
120	„ Svadesh Vatsal	Bombay	Do.	408
*121	„ Trimásik Tikákár	Limbdi	Quarterly	200
122	„ Udichya Hitechchhu Patra	Ahmedabad	Monthly	200
123	„ Umreth Samáchár	Umreth	Weekly	50
124	„ Vidnyán Vilás	Rájkot	Monthly	738
125	„ Vidya Mitră	Bombay	Do.	300
126	„ Yajdán Parast	Do.	Weekly	500
	Ka'narese.
127	The Chandrodayă	Dhárwár	Weekly	150
*128	„ Karnátă Vritt	Belgaum	Do.	200
129	„ Karnátak Patră	Dhárwár	Do.	225
130	„ Kannadă Suvarte	Bombay	Do.	768
*131	„ Rasik Ranjani	Belgaum	Do.	100
	Sanskrit.
*132	The Girwán Tarangini	Dhárwár	Fortnightly	100
	Urdu.
*133	The Armagán	Bombay	Weekly	200
134	„ Kushful Akhbár	Do.	Do.	160
	Persian.
135	The Mufarrehul Kulub	Karáchi	Weekly	300
	English, Mara'thi and Urdu.
*136	The Military Instructor	Poona	Weekly	200
	Sindi.
*137	The Sind Sudhár	Karáchi	Weekly	200

Notes.—A. The notices from the different Newspapers have been collected in the Report under different heads, which are printed in italics.

B. The names of Newspapers are printed in the body of the Report in italics, and the number of the Newspaper in the above list is printed in brackets after the name.

C. The proprietors of the Newspapers marked * have not given information as to the number of copies issued. In these cases an estimate has been made by the Reporter.

D. The system of spelling vernacular words followed by the Reporter is the same as that adopted in the Official Spelling List of the Bombay Presidency. One peculiar feature of this system is that when the long a (आ or á) is the last letter of a word, the accent is left out, and the short a (अ = u in gun) is, to prevent confusion, never placed at the end of a word. This rule has been strictly followed, except that when the short a appears to be absolutely necessary to complete the pronunciation of a word, as in Arunodaya or the well known Mitra, it is printed with a mark over it to indicate that it is short, thus—ă.

E. Berár papers are received in this office for report under the Resolution of the Government of Bombay in the General Department, No. 1795, dated 8th June 1881.

Politics and the Public Administration.

Misrepresentation of the opinions of the Native press by Anglo-Indian newspapers.

In an article headed "A deplorable phase of Anglo-Indian journalism," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 8th June says:—It must be a matter for profound regret to all lovers of truth and to all friends of British rule in India to observe a certain class of Anglo-Indian journalists systematically traducing the Native press, and that, too, on a set purpose. To persistently misinterpret the candid criticisms made by Native writers on topics under discussion, to distort the plain inference deducible from the arguments urged, to ascribe motives having no foundation in fact—these seem to be the highest aim of the said journalists. Their object is, no doubt, to prove the Native press, daily rising in influence and power, a political volcano seething in disloyalty and sedition and on the point of eruption on the remotest contingency. But it must be evident to the impartial observers of Native political thought at leading centres how far the Indian press from being the hotbed of sedition is the main pillar of the empire,—a real power in the land, addressing itself to the solution of those large problems which the rulers of British India ought to consider well with the view to further increase the material and political welfare of the ruled and strengthen the bonds of sympathy and affection on which alone will rest the foundation of the magnificent empire which is so often called "the brightest jewel in the diadem" of England's Queen. The Native press has now attained to lusty youth. Its articulate stage has been arrived at—the stage when its youthful but sufficiently loud voice is being heard and respected. That it will by-and-bye grow into vigorous manhood and realise all that the far-sighted Metcalfe and the sagacious Macaulay anticipated nearly fifty years ago is quite certain. We admit that in its present stage it has now and then shown signs of impatience and even indiscretion, but these are after all inseparable from a state of pupilage. Every nascent institution exhibits failings during its growth to maturity. And so far there is nothing to apprehend from the indiscreet but perfectly harmless, because candid, utterances of some of the more impetuous and impulsive writers on the Vernacular press. But it is this very fact—the fact of the growth of the Indian press—that has excited now the sullen, now again the open and bitter, if not wantonly perverse, resentment of the majority of Anglo-Indian papers. Some of these so-called English writers leave no stone unturned, whether there be occasion or no occasion, to run down and traduce Native journalists. The privilege of being the true exponents of public opinion is now intelligently shared with them by Native writers. And because with the growth of education and spread of intelligence, with the better appreciation of the immense political forces at work over the civilized world, with greater knowledge and information afforded by periodicals of all sorts and degrees, with better encouragement held out by disinterested Englishmen few and far between as they still are both here and in England, and lastly with greater sympathy from a righteous administration that in a measure beats in unison with their national aspirations—with all these opportunities and resources at their command Native journalists are sure to revolutionise Indian thought and prove their right to influence the deliberations and actions of their rulers as years roll on. But in proportion to the power they may be able to wield must the power of the writers on the Anglo-Indian press diminish. Now we suspect that it is the apprehension of such diminution of influence, of which they have had almost the monopoly, that is sorely exercising the minds of Anglo-Indian organs. The strong expressions of dislike and even something worse, however unfounded, which are now and again to be discerned in the columns of the class of journalists we have referred to owe their origin to the same political dynamics. They are in a measure the spokesmen of that powerful bureaucracy which has held the people of India under its grip for the last hundred years. Its despotism has resulted in endless mischief. And if in the future that mischief is to be minimised, and in that proportion its influence to be curtailed for good, it must be done by the Native press. The oracles are fully aware of the coming change. They know too well that even now their responses meet with but scant attention. In short, that they are being discredited. Is it a wonder under the circumstances if these journalists militant and dominant—the powerful spokesmen of the party in power—the party under whose baneful influence for nearly a century our national aspirations have been chilled and repressed,—if these spokesmen, we say, run down the leaders of thought in the country? It is because the Native press is manfully striving to do its duty by the country and its alien Government, namely, that of an honest interpreter, that it provokes the wrath of conscienceless interlopers and their hired adherents. But their vituperations, based on misrepresentations, will be taken at their worth. We are sanguine that the loudest and angriest blasts from the trumpets of these Joshuas of the hour will fail to awaken the slightest response in the quarters to which these blasts are directed. Having no hope of success from artificial agitation they vainly attempt to gratify their spleen by pouring spiteful calumny on their opponents. What better can be expected from men imbued with deep-rooted prejudices and living in an atmosphere of misrepresentation? The above observations have been suggested to us by the lengthy but very important correspondence for which, departing from our usual practice, we have found room to-day in other part of the paper at a heavy cost. The reader may perhaps not be unaware of the angry controversy that has been carried on for some weeks past between the Pioneer and the Amrit Bazar Patrika. That the two journalists are exponents of views diametrically opposed is well known. Whereas the former views all great questions affecting India's weal from the standpoint of the official optimist or official apologist or of the chief spokesman of the Indian bureaucracy, the latter views them from the vantage ground of the narrator of unpleasant truths as daily discerned by the Native of average intelligence. Each has had to say something on the consequences of Russia's advance nearer India. Each has had something to write on the result of British rule in India for a century. Now so far as opinions go it is not to be expected that these two journalists should agree. But then the majority of intelligent people anywhere must differ if only to agree in the end. Divergence of opinion there must always be, and so far as a writer expresses his opinion honestly or even criticises that of another candidly, nothing is to be said against it. Criticism is courted by enlightened rulers. Destructive criticism has its good and evil side as much as constructive criticism. And it should be the constant aim of all honest journalists who aspire to be faithful interpreters between the rulers and the ruled to state their opinions with perfect frankness but without rancour or the bitterness of party spirit. In India this point must be strongly insisted upon, inasmuch as the rulers of the country belong to one race, and that superior in civilization, and the ruled to another. Collision between the views of the two is inevitable, and those who can so steer the columns of their journals as to avoid collision must be considered as really helping the cause of law and order. Now, in one of our previous articles on the Anglo-Indian press we were constrained in the interest of truth to refer to certain deplorable defects in its conduct, especially in its attitude towards the Native press. We were also obliged to observe that the public opinion it professed to foist on the rulers was nothing more than a second edition of minutes, despatches and state resolutions proceeding from the bureaucracy in power. That so far such public opinion was tainted by the poison of self-interest, and must therefore be received with caution. Journalism, English and Native, has now reached in India such a stage that writers of both races have to put forth, like keen competitors in a race, their views before third parties or judges who, in the case of Indian politics, are no other than Parliament and the British nation. If the real defects in the administration of British India, if the real grievances of the Indian people, political and economical, if the real aspirations of our countrymen, if the real apprehensions they foresee in certain political eventualities that may occur on the north-western frontier of India—if for representing views on all these grave topics in their true colours the Native press must speak, is it a blunder, is it a political crime, is it sedition, to speak out freely and unreservedly? If the judges are to decide between the conflicting views, are they not expected to know the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth? Now, this is exactly what our Calcutta contemporary, conscious of the responsibility of his position, uniformly does. He blurts out the naked truth. It may be his fault that he disdains to coat his pill in sugar. The same truth is uttered by all independent Native journalists—each according to his own light. All exclaim thus with but one single object in view, namely, to apprise their rulers. Is there anything wrong in this? But that is just the thing resented. Now, as Mr. Hume has justly observed, the Amrit Bazar Patrika, like many other Native journalists, has only crystallised the general apprehension regarding Russian advance. In commenting on this fact, as bearing on the political destiny of British India, he says that owing to the mischievous consequences resulting from past economical policy the mass of the people are far from prosperous. That when people are not prosperous they are apt to be discontented. That discontentment leads to mischief to the State if not removed in time. Poverty and discontentment are elements of danger in any State and their rulers are bound to remove their causes. If they are blind it is necessary that those who suffer from the evil should do all in their power to make them see it. Here the natural leaders of the people must perform the duty. And now-a-days that duty is being efficiently performed by the press, which is therefore deservedly called the Fourth Estate. The Amrit has pointed out to its rulers the elements of danger and nothing more, and it asks the Government to take heed in time, otherwise the Muscovite may utilise these elements for his own sinister purposes. Is there anything disloyal or seditious in this advice? Unfortunately our Allahabad contemporary in a moment of angry passion has thought fit to fall foul of his brother journalist of Calcutta for his gloomy foreboding. Nay, more; in doing so he has misinterpreted the inference which the Amrit has endeavoured to draw. The Amrit is made to say that Indians, because they are discontented, should hail the nearer approach of the Muscovite on the Indian frontier. On this fallacious hypothesis a series of articles, as fallacious in their arguments as they are mischievous in their tendency, have been indited. And we consider it the duty of every honest Native journalist to contradict these utterances of the Pioneer, calculated as they are to mislead Parliament and the British nation, if not our rulers here. The most curious part of the controversy is that the Pioneer himself four years ago stated the same truth regarding the poverty of the peasantry and its consequent discontentment for which he now takes to task his outspoken Native contemporary. Is it honest? Does it add to the reputation of the Pioneer to refuse to publish in its columns that manly protest of Mr. Hume? That protest from the sturdy and sympathetic Englishman deserves to be read and rightly interpreted in every nook and corner of the United Kingdom. It deserves the utmost publicity, as no Native writer of the greatest ability could have put the issues in such a sober and at the same time striking light. If India's salvation is to be achieved by England, then we say it will be mainly through the advice of disinterested Englishmen, with a genuine love of truth, and possessing deep sympathy with the oppressed nationalities that form the 200 millions of the subject races of the Queen-Empress. And here it may be instructive to quote the sagacious observations of the writer on the government of the Indian Empire in the January number of the Edinburgh Review. He says: "In our own territories the ideas and axioms of a free nationality are percolating through the medium of the English language into the educated strata of Indian society; the notion of government as a device for making people comfortable and properly assessing the taxes is not enough for the present as it was for the past generation; and the logical order of political evolution is bringing forward a demand for political equality and for a larger share to Natives in the management of their own public affairs." Here is the very essence of truth which the Pioneer and other journalists sharing his views are slow to recognize. Situated as they are, the oracles through whom the tribe of bureaucrats in power endeavour to give out their complacent responses as the very embodiment of public opinion refuse to march with "the political evolution" that has set in. Let them remember that the seed has been sown. This acorn is going apace and will in time become a sturdy oak despite all the tempests that may be raised to uproot it. The reviewer's further observations are equally pertinent, and we need not apologise for quoting them even at the risk of tiring out the reader. "Here, then, we see the first signs of the coming constitutional difficulties of our Indian rule"—the same, we may observe, which the Native press has been pointing out as ready for solution, if India is to be saved from the coming struggle with the Colossus of the North. "Difficulties," goes on the writer, "which are peculiary awkward and distasteful to the English." Precisely so. But hard facts must be looked in the face. "The English in India find themselves in charge of an administration necessarily managed upon autocratic principles, which they themselves have outgrown and finally rejected as absolute in their own country, the desire to maintain good government, and to introduce self-government; they have set up a very high water-mark of public and private morality. They sow secular education broadcast among the most religious races of the world, and they invite all sorts of free criticism by classes totally unaccustomed to such privileges upon the acts of a bureaucratic Government. Free criticism is being offered in the most loyal spirit conceivable. The enlightened Native press is slowly performing its natural function of the opposition in a truly loyal spirit." But it suits certain Anglo-Indian journalists to misinterpret the freedom of speech as rank sedition! They fail to appreciate the true object of our criticism, and yet pretend to pose as political prophets forecasting that India will be ruined if the Native press is not gagged again for uttering truths which are so galling to bureaucracy! No doubt, as we said, the Native press is in its age of adolescence when youthful indiscretions must be expected. But as it grows older, it will, in the proportion of its strength, strengthen the hands of righteous rulers. All must therefore share the views of the Edinburgh reviewer when he further says that "we must be prepared to see the Native press increase and multiply, and acquire great influence over public opinion among the masses, which as yet it has not reached; we may also hope that the tone of the leading newspapers, some of which are already written with ability and moderation, may continue to improve." This is a consummation to be devoutly wished. But it is too much to expect moderation from all Native journalists with such an example set them by leading Anglo-Indian contemporaries credited with being in the confidence of the dominant class. Are the latter aware of the wise saying of Count Cavour on the policy of the State with regard to so-called seditious writings? Let them study and profit by it.

Says that the rulers of India should act towards their Native subjects with sincerity and justice.

The Indu Prakásh (10) of the 9th June, in alluding to Lord Lytton's letter to the London Times relating to the Indian Civil Service, observes that the statements made therein and in the despatch written by him in his capacity of Viceroy of India are utterly at variance with each other and they must tend to lower his character in public estimation. The natives of India know very well what value to attach to the declarations of English statesmen which affect the interests of the subject race. Everybody knows that when Lord Clive sent assurances of friendship to Suráj-Udowlah to allay his perturbed mind, he gave orders to his subordinates to attack that prince. Similar devices were said to have been practised when the Peshwa was dethroned and the Nágpur territory was annexed to the British dominions. The natives of India must not forget that British statesmen are frequently in the habit of saying one thing and meaning another. Those Englishmen who say that all human beings are the children of the same God do not act according to their professions. Lord Lytton's conduct in the matter of the admission of Natives into the Indian Civil Service confirms this view. The opinions which Englishmen hold regarding Natives were made public during the discussions on the Ilbert Bill. Natives have even begun to doubt the sincerity of a gentleman so high-minded as Lord Ripon. The Indu Prakásh considers that the English authorities should act towards Natives with perfect sincerity and treat them with justice.

Institutes a comparison between the conduct of the natives of India and the inhabitants of Ireland towards their English rulers.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 8th June compares the natives of India and the Irish people, and says that this comparison naturally suggests itself when one portion of the subject people gives trouble to the reigning power and the other is calm and loyal. Though the natives of India have more reasons to be dissatisfied with their rulers than the Irish, there is not the slightest falling off in their affection and loyalty. The comparison shows the natives of this country to be wise, humble and silent sufferers of wrongs, which comparison does them credit. Twenty-seven years ago a handful of foolish men revolted against the British Government, but the great bulk of the people remained thoroughly loyal. Their immediate punishment proved the absurdity of their misguided attempt. Since then all the people of India have been trying to vie with one another in showing their loyalty to the paramount power. It cannot however be inferred from this that the British have done and are doing full justice to the people of this country. The latter have many grievances which the former ought to redress. Natives do not enjoy those privileges and that liberty which a noble and just government ought to give to them. But notwithstanding the treatment to which they are subjected, not even the vilest of the vile portion of the people of India ever entertain the absurd idea of harassing its rulers after the manner of the Irish. Natives endure every kind of inconvenience and annoyance relying on the good sense of the ruling race, and instead of at once becoming disloyal or disaffected express their grievances with politeness and humility. By this means Natives have gradually acquired many advantages during the last thirty years and hope to acquire more. On the other hand the British, seeing the poverty, humility and loyalty of the Natives, should think it their duty to save India from being crushed beneath the one-sided policy of some selfish tyrants.

Describes how the want of patriotism and nationality among the natives of India has resulted in the loss of their liberty.

In an article headed "The Expansion of England" the Indu Prakásh (10) of the 9th June criticises the work of Professor Seeley on the subject, and says:—To us the labours of Professor Seeley are more interesting and valuable in that part of his book which relates to India. It represents the conquest of India by the British in a light which, if it does no credit to us, subtracts a great deal from the glory of the conquerors and accounts for our demoralization which made the conquest easy. It is full of observations and suggestions pregnant with meaning and of infinite moment to us. Altogether it is so good a book that we think it may be read by every educated Native with great profit, and even its translation into the vernaculars may turn out remunerative speculation. One important fact Professor Seeley impresses upon the reader is the absence of nationality among the natives of India. He attributes to this one defect, and with good reason, we think, the easy rapidity with which the British secured sovereign power in India. Writers of Lord Macaulay's school are never tired of expressing their admiration of how a handful of Englishmen conquered in a few years a territory equal in extent to the whole of Europe minus Russia. Professor Seeley unmasks this miracle by explaining the conquest to be really one of India by Indians. He points out how the boasted conquest is not a conquest at all in the proper sense of the term, the East India Company having acquired their dominion really under circumstances of an internal revolution to settle anarchy, obtaining the highest position as the strongest power on the spot among a number of competing powers most of them foreign; further that this acquisition of power would have been impossible for the Company if it had not been for the want of nationality and patriotism among Natives, who freely enlisted themselves and formed more than four-fifths and sometimes six-sevenths of the conquering army. It is the share of the Native sepoys in the work of conquest that is too often lost sight of by English writers in describing the exploits of their countrymen, which Professor Seeley particularly emphasizes. Our object in drawing attention to this feature in the British conquest of India is not so much to detract from the glory of our conquerors as to point out the great defect in ourselves which cost us our liberty. If Professor Seeley's account of the British conquest teaches one lesson more than another, it is that for any national undertaking to be possible in India the one thing most needful is nationality, patriotism, that genuine love for India which an Englishman feels for England, and a Frenchman feels for France, and which makes it impossible for an Englishman or a Frenchman to fight against England or France. We do not refer here to any chimerical visions of freeing ourselves from the foreign yoke, but we think a leavening of patriotism among our people is necessary for the accomplishment of every species of national elevation. The difficulties are many, and almost insuperable. There is an absence of a community of race, of language, of religion, and even of interest to a certain extent. But our first duty is obviously to surmount these difficulties, and bring about a feeling of unity and fellow-feeling which must bind every native of India to another. Such a state of things will be a source of strength as well to our English Government as to ourselvos, for to successfully protect themselves against a foreign invasion the best security of our Government lies in the loyalty and attachment of their subjects, and such a loyalty cannot be sufficiently effective until there grows with it a love for the country.

Approves of the demarcation of the frontier of Afghanistan beyond which the Russians should not be allowed to encroach.

In an article headed "Anglo-Russian Commission" the Subodh Patrika (15) of the 8th June says:—We have it on the authority of the Simla correspondent of the Times of India that an Anglo-Russian commission will proceed early next autumn to demarcate the northern frontier of Afghanistan. This is said to be the result of negotiations which have been going on between England and Russia for some time past. The northern boundary as thus settled will be the river Oxus as far as Khoja Saleh and thence go southward to a point south of Phul-i-Khatun on the Hari Rud river. If this commission comes off and a boundary is finally agreed upon by mutual consent, as we hope it will, all present anxiety will be allayed. But we are afraid it will only be so for a time. The day of struggle must come sooner or later. The hunger for territory and the intense desire for conquering India which reigns in Russia and animates her Emperors and her generals will not allow her to rest unless she tries her strength upon India and is driven back thence with a stunning blow from united England and India. Semi-barbarous nations understand best the logic of blows. All other considerations are wasted upon them. A conflict sooner or later is unavoidable unless better counsels prevail in Russia. The victory in such a conflict is certain and assured. Russia, which resists most the enlightenment and liberalism of Europe, whose despotism and restraints breed Nihilism which preys upon her vitals, will represent the cause of slavery of the intellect and of repressive despotism, while England will be fighting the cause of liberty of thought and action. In a conflict between the two the victory will be England's, for her allies and friends will be "exultations, agonies and love, and man's unconquerable mind." Yet whatever the issue of the conflict, it is satisfactory to find that peaceful measures are on the cards at present, which may at any rate put off a war for some time. Meanwhile there will be time for the British rule in India to enroot itself still deeper, while wise and liberal legislation and a sense of mutual interest cement the union between the rulers and the ruled harder and harder in course of time. [The Gujaráti (99) of the same date observes that as the Russians have now taken Serakhs it cannot be said with certainty when they will occupy Herat. They are advancing slowly but firmly in the direction of India, and will not fail to invade it, their success or defeat being a secondary question and a matter of luck. They should either be prevented from making advances, or sufficient measures should be taken against them. The Amir of Afghanistan should be, if possible, made to understand that it is advantageous to strengthen the defences of Herat. If he accepts the advice, well and good; if not, his refusal must be understood as showing want of attachment towards the British. Wiser measures than those adopted should then be resorted to. The love of the people of India for their rulers should be strengthened. The defences of India should be strengthened and the Russians should be made to feel that the British have not remained quiet as they suppose. The forts on the confines of Kandahar should be made stronger and more care should be observed in that quarter than at present. It is not advisable that the British should unnecessarily risk a war with the Russians, but when the latter persist in their object it is of primary importance that all necessary precautions should be taken.]

Reflections on the advance of Russia in Central Asia.

The Sind Times (5) of the 6th June says:—India is held in the tight grip of England, and that is better than Russia's. A heterogeneous congeries of nationalities and sects widely differing in temperament and dialect as the Indians are, they need a masterful levelling domination to bring about their union into one nation. English education is kneading India into a compact and consistent mass whose future career is unknown. The English bayonet has done its work, and now it is for the English intellect and the English civilization to work an unprecedented revolution amongst us. A mighty motion is agitating the country and infusing life and energy in her paralyzed limbs. For centuries India had groaned under a foreign yoke till life had almost departed her. The English came and under their sheltering wings India revived a little. She is now feeling spring on her wings and would soar into "spaceful" freedom. But alas! A cankerworm sits at her heart and threatens to eat into her very life. The Russians will be coming, and a deadly war between them and the English will be inevitable in the fulness of time. Woe to India when the two nations fight. Whether the English drive back the Russians or not, India will be a loser either way. Already they begin to talk of increasing the army, which means importing more soldiers from England. England perhaps can spare her sons, but India can no more bear the burden of foreign troops. The cup of India's endurance is full to the brim, and she can no longer hold even a drop of foreign levies. India is getting poor, extremely poor, whatever the interested optimists may say. The English have given to India the blessings of peace and bracing civilization, and India can never forget this debt of gratitude. But can she lie quiet when she is being phookooed, to employ an oriental metaphor, like a calfless cow, and her life-blood sucked out to regale her rulers. Prosper ye, the favoured of God! Ye have given India Christian civilization, and Christian knowledge, and Christian freedom. Ye have been the justest masters we Indians have had for generations past; ye have ever professed justice and equality; and though ye have not acted up to your standard we will not complain. But have mercy on bleeding India, and any sacrifice ye may make to heal her wounds will be amply rewarded by our thankfulness and our devotion.

Injustice of making India alone pay a portion of the expenses for the maintenance of the British naval armaments.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 12th June, in commenting on the question asked by the Truth newspaper that while India is made to pay ten lákhs of rupees every year as her share for the maintenance of the British naval armaments why are not other colonies made to contribute similarly, remarks that this is not the only advantage that is taken of India. Though the colonies had the same interest as India had in the wars that have taken place during the last decade in Europe and Africa, yet India had to bear a portion of the war expenditure while the former were exempted. It is not difficult to find out the reason for this treatment. As regards India orders have only to be issued for payment, for the Indian authorities enjoy perfect liberty and the public cannot interfere. But as the colonies have their own parliaments and act independently, it is difficult to prevail upon them to contribute their share of the expenses. As long as this distinction is observed, the question asked by the Truth is simply useless, since India has no remedy but to put up with such injustice as is done to her at present.

Expresses a hope that the cost of the expeditionary force about to be despatched to Egypt from India will not be thrown on India.

The Arunodayă (17) of the 8th June says that it seems pretty evident that an expedition will be sent to Africa from India. Although the heat in Egypt abates a little from July, yet it would not be safe on the score of climate to risk the lives of English soldiers in that country. The Native soldiers will have to suffer all the hardships of an expedition to Egypt. India however has no connection whatever with Soudan or Africa, and the natives of India are not in any way concerned with General Gordon's safety at Khartoun. The present complications are the result of the policy of the English Cabinet. These being the facts, it will not be right to throw on India the cost of this expedition. The Arunodayă trusts that Government will deeply consider what they are about before determining to throw on India the expense of an expeditionary force to Egypt.

Points out the difference in treatment accorded by the Home Government to the inhabitants of India and those of Ceylon in the matter of the disestablishment of the Anglican church in India and of the Civil Service.

In an article headed "The age of candidates for the Civil Service in India and in Ceylon," the Indian Spectator (1) of the 8th June says:—What glaring inconsistency the Home Government shows in dealing with two such near dependencies as India and Ceylon? Take the question of the disestablishment of the Anglican church in the Crown colony. It was formally announced in 1881 that the ecclesiastical subsidies would cease in 1886. Now every reasonable person will admit that situated as Ceylon is, the Secretary of State for the Colonies did a wise thing when he ordered that the expenses of the ecclesiastical department of the Government of that island should cease to be paid out of its revenues at the end of 1886. The absurdity of the idea of a State church, paid out of the taxes of the general community for the benefit of the smallest portion of the population, and that too well able to see to its own spiritual wants, was so palpable that Lord Kimberley had no hesitation in putting an end to so iniquitous an arrangement. Curiously enough his Lordship, when transferred to the India Office, seems to have become oblivious of his own Ceylon despatch of 1881. Another measure has been meted out for India. Disposing of the question first raised by Lord Hartington, his predecessor in office, at Westminster, the Whig Earl observes that as the matter is somewhat in an uncertain state he would leave it where it is! Had he gone into the question of figures he would have been compelled to put an end to the anomaly. This anomaly the Honourable Mr. Hope has very ingeniously tried in his minute of dissent to explain away by an array of figures the ordinary arithmetic of which the Statesman has vigorously utilised to disprove his own deductions. So much for one inconsistency of the Home Government in its dealings with India and Ceylon. We may now take up the other and more glaring inconsistency, namely, the limit of age of Indian Civil Service candidates. The fallacy of the reply accorded to the deputation of Indian gentlemen in England that waited on Lord Kimberley has already been shown to demonstration by almost the whole of the Native press. Even the most anti-Native Anglo-Indian journals have expressed themselves unreservedly as to the fallacy of his Lordship's reasoning. Now it may be worth while to know what is the rule at the present moment regarding the age of candidates for the Ceylon Civil Service? We give it in the words of the leading journal of that Crown colony. Says the Ceylon Observer: "From the regulations regarding Ceylon cadetships which appeared in last Gazette it will be seen that competition for the Ceylon Civil Service, equally with that of the Straits Settlements and Hongkong, is open to all natural-born subjects of Her Majesty who can give satisfactory evidence of good character and health, who are not under 21 or over 24 years of age." Can the Home Government explain why Lord Kimberley should fix the age of candidates for the Civil Service in India at 19? If University education is considered so necessary in a passed candidate for the Indian Civil Service at 19, why is it not considered similarly necessary in a passed candidate for the Ceylon Civil Service at 24? Is this not, on the face of it, a glaring inconsistency? What solid reasons can Lord Kimberley urge for not disturbing the present standard of age?

Says that the recommendations of Lord Lytton regarding the admission of Natives into the Civil Service are the only true solutions of that question.

In an article headed "Analysis of Lord Lytton's Despatch" the Mahrátta (2) of the 8th June says:—Curiously enough this State document is condemned for no other reason but that it emanated from a Governor-General who was unpopular. It is a pity that the public mind should be so warped. It is a misfortune that the Indian nation should not be able to discriminate truth from falsehood, light from darkness, outspokenness from statesmanly design. We reviewed the despatch in our last and we regret to find that we have been found fault with by persons who ought to know better for taking that charitable view of the despatch. We are not wedded to any particular doctrine, nor are we sworn to defend the followers of one or the other party in English politics. We are advocates of Native rights and interests, and as such we are always ready to support that which is good or to cry down that which is prejudicial to our interests. In this article it is our object to analyse the despatch and to point out that neither Lord Lytton nor Sir Ashley Eden was wrong in taking that "novel" view of the question. We have already said that Lord Lytton showed himself very weak not in subscribing to the despatch but in putting forth his defence in the columns of the Times and trying to shirk responsibilities by showing that he had not the courage of his convictions. For this weakness Lord Lytton can fairly be blamed. Extended employment of Natives in the different branches of service is admittedly a political necessity, and it is therefore in the interests of the State itself that those responsible for the good administration of this country should always be on the look out for the best means for putting in more Natives in the civil administration. The Civil Service was thrown open to Natives, but it was found that though by legislation the appointments to this service were thrown open to public competition, yet the difficulties necessarily arising from the competitive examinations being held in England have however practically debarred the natives of India, save in few instances, from availing themselves of "the right to compete." When the subject, therefore, next came up for discussion it was resolved to try the principle of selection as well as competition. In making this provision it was expressly provided that the benefit of this clause was to be given to Natives of proved merit and ability. It is urged that the nominations have been bad and that persons who have been appointed generally lack merit and ability. On this point we too hold the same opinion; and we therefore urge that something should be done to get qualified men. This, we urge, can be done by holding examinations in India and by requiring candidates to pass test examinations. This, we think, is different from condemning the system. What we want is reform in the system, and that we can never get by wholesale condemnation. To urge for reform in a certain system and to condemn it are two different things. So far about selection. So far as we can make out anything from the despatch, we think the idea was to divide the service into two branches, one to be reserved for Europeans and the other for Natives. The number of appointments reserved for Europeans was to be reduced by a few posts, which were to go to the Native branch of it. The pay was to be a little lower, but the status and position of the nominees was in all respects to be equal to that of competitionwálás. Thus it was not the Covenanted Civil Service that was to be closed to Natives but it was the competitive examinations; but so was the Indian branch to be closed to Europeans. Europeans were to be examined in England and the merit and ability of the Natives were to be tried in India. Where was then the difference? The difference was in the pay and the grade. The despatch most clearly states that the higher and more important appointments in the executive branch were to be reserved for the heaven-gifted race. The best course then that we ought to have taken was not to condemn what was offered to us, but to ask Government to grant what was refused. If this course had been adopted we would have been safe and secure at the stage in the journey and the only up-hill fight would have been for a shorter length. At present the agitation is raging strong, and we hear of public meetings held and memorials adopted asking the Secretary of State to raise the standard of age. But we regret to find that sight is lost of the more important point. We are as sure as anybody can be that the number of candidates for the competitive Civil Service examinations will not materially increase by raising the standard of age only. This reform should be accompanied by the re-opening of a sufficiently large number of scholarships. But even if both these reforms are carried out, the progress would not be as great as it would be if the examinations were held in India. Even if that is done the evil will not be got rid of; for evidently we cannot with justice ask that competitive examinations in England ought to be stopped altogether. We will thus have Native and European Civilians and the complaint will always remain that Natives are lost sight of in filling up vacancies. The solution will thus ultimately come to the proposal of Lord Lytton. There then remains only one point: whether it is or it is not just that superior executive appointments should be reserved for Englishmen. Of this we will speak hereafter, but in justice to ourselves we must state that it is unjust and unfair that a slur should be cast on the character of the Natives by holding that Europeans alone should hold certain appointments and that Natives cannot be trusted in the most important offices.

Reflections on the question of the limit of age of the candidates for the Indian Civil Service.

In an article headed "The Civil Service Question," the Sind Times (5) of the 6th June says:—Constitutional agitation is neither unlawful nor disloyal. It has been resorted to by the best English statesmen, and we are not afraid that it will be proscribed in India, especially as the interests of the Natives in this new agitation are to a great extent identical with those of British-born subjects. It may appear paradoxical that an apparently unimportant limit of age prescribed for a certain examination should be the pivot of the whole agitation. But, as a matter of fact, the limit involves consequences of the highest moment to India. It is not denied that the financial burdens of India are increasing every year. It is not denied that the welfare of India, which is bound up with the stability of British dominion in India, depends upon her financial prosperity. It is not denied that the continuous drain of the home charges, of the military charges, and of the effective and non-effective charges necessitated by the employment of a very large number of European officers is a most important element in the financial problem which is now puzzling Indian statesmen. If these charges can in any way be reduced, a proportionate relief to the finances will be secured. The advantage of the Mogul rule was that what was exacted from the people, often by a high hand, was spent among the people. The disadvantage of British rule is that a great portion of the revenues of India is spent in England. Any measure, therefore, which can reduce this expenditure in England is a measure which self-interest as well as policy should commend to our rulers for adoption. These surely are axiomatic truths, but unfortunately when we come to discuss their application we meet with insuperable obstacles in securing their due recognition. There is no doubt that a more extensive employment of Native agency in the administration will reduce the expenditure of Indian money in England and diminish the financial drain to an appreciable extent. There is no doubt again that numerous pledges have been given in Royal charters as well as in Acts of Parliament for an equal, free and impartial admission of qualified Natives to all offices in the service of their country. Who are qualified Natives, however, is a question which is left to the authorities to determine. Up to 1870 it was determined by prescribing a competitive test, the passing of which was held to entitle any subject of Her Majesty to a berth in the Indian Civil Service. The age of candidates first prescribed was twenty-three, then it was reduced to twenty-two, and then to twenty-one. In 1878 it was further reduced to nineteen, but even when it was twenty-one it was found that the number of Native competitors was infinitesimal. In fact up to 1870 only sixteen Native candidates presented themselves for the examination, and out of these sixteen only one passed. This was felt to be a crying evil, and the Duke of Argyll, who was the Secretary of State, brought forward a Bill in Parliament to remedy it. This Bill finally became Statute 33 Vict., cap. 3, which is the statute sanctioning the formation of what is now called the Statutory Civil Service. Section 6 of this statute in the most unequivocal words declared that it was "expedient that additional facilities should be given for the employment of Natives of India of proved merit and ability in the Civil Service of Her Majesty in India." But notwithstanding this express and emphatic legislative declaration of the Imperial Parliament the section remained a dead-letter for nearly nine years, and it was not before the old limit of age was reduced to nineteen that any rules were framed under the statute for the selection of Natives of proved merit and ability for the Civil Service. The effect was to virtually close the open gate of competition to Natives, and to leave them to avail themselves as best they could of the back door of selection, which meant, in the majority of cases, favouritism. We understand that the Viceroy has recommended certain alterations to be made in the rules framed under Statute 33 Vic., cap. 3, but we are afraid that unless competition is substituted for selection the evil of favouritism will not die out, and the nominations will continue to be as unsatisfactory as before. To secure a more extensive employment of Natives, therefore, the Native press and all Native associations should unite in laying stress upon two reforms: reform in the Statutory Civil Service rules by the substitution of a competitive test for selection, and reform in the competitive Civil Service rules by substituting the present limit of age by a much higher limit. Unless these two reforms are accomplished we are afraid the financial outlook will continue to be as gloomy as it is now, and the majority of the educated natives of India will continue to live without any aims or objects, and without any common ties of interest with their rulers.

Urges the abolition of the Statutory Civil Service and the holding of the Civil Service Examination simultaneously in England and India.

The Dnyán Prakásh (9) of the 9th June, in an article headed "The Indian Civil Service," alludes to the reply given by Lord Kimberley to an influential deputation from the Indian Reform Association in London, and says:—His Lordship's reply was most discouraging, because he refused to interfere with the existing state of things. Since then up to the present time public meetings are being held in every considerable town in this vast country to protest against the great injustice of the existing regulations so far as the natives of India are concerned, and to urge upon the attention of the authorities both in India and in England the simple justice of restoring the old maximum limit of age. We for our own part think that it is a great mistake to urge the mere restoration of the old maximum limit of age. We think, along with that desired change we ought to urge two more changes: firstly, that the examination should be simultaneously held in India, and that the Statutory Civil Service, which is founded upon the system of nomination or favouritism, should be abolished. We object to the Statutory Civil Service, firstly because it encourages favouritism and consequent demoralization, and secondly because it brings into existence a distinctly inferior class of officers who are looked down upon by that higher class to whom they are fondly supposed to belong. We believe that if the intentions of the British Parliament, when it sanctioned the reform of throwing the Indian Civil Service open to unrestricted public competition, are rightly understood, and if the declarations then made on both sides of the House of Commons are taken into due consideration, they will be found to support our foregoing contention. After quoting the opinions of Sir Charles Wood and Lord Macaulay delivered on the renewal of the charter of the East India Company in 1853 on the subject of Civil Service appointments, the Dnyán Prakásh proceeds:—Now if the system of nomination is undesirable in the case of Englishmen, in the case of even the English aristocracy, why should it be considered a desirable and appropriate measure in the case of the natives of India? Is there anything in the character of the natives of India which renders the system of nomination eminently desirable in their case? Let the Indian Civil Service be thrown open to the natives of India and all artificial barriers in their way removed, and if through such a door the scions of the Indian aristocracy can force their entrance into the ranks of that service we shall welcome them with great pleasure. But the present system of nomination, apparently introduced in the interests of the Indian aristocracy whether hallowed by old and honourable traditions or whether of recent creation, is in our opinion extremely demoralizing to all the parties concerned. Merit and not patronage should be the door to the ranks of the Civil Service of India. The opinion of Lord Macaulay is condemnatory of the nomination system. And yet that very system has been applied to the natives of India. [The Ahmedabad Samáchár (84) of the 11th and the Bombay Samáchár (89) and the Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 12th June advise the people of India to continue the agitation and to memorialize Parliament for increasing the present limit of age.]

Remarks in connection with the annual visits of the Viceroys and provincial Governors to the hills.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 14th June refers to the cry raised in Madras against the annual visit of the local Governor and his suite to the hills, points out the necessity and advantages of these annual visits of the Viceroy and provincial Governors, and remarks that a feeling similar to that prevailing in Madras is spreading in

Calcutta and some of the Anglo-Indian papers of Calcutta advise the local Defence Association to take up the matter and enter its protest against it. The feelings of the Madras public deserve respect, but the "disinterestedness" of the Calcutta papers is questionable. It is the result of their wrath against Lord Ripon. The Viceroy and the provincial Governors pay the same attention to political matters and do their work on the hills as they do while in their respective cities, and it would be cruel to prevent them from visiting the hills. If the annual sojourn to the hills is prohibited, able and well-to-do gentlemen would hesitate to accept the high posts of Viceroy and Governors of presidencies and needy noblemen would be sent to India. Of course the Lieutenant-Governors should not enjoy this privilege, for they are old Civilians who have passed the greatest portion of their life in the plains and are inured to their excessive heat. The Viceroy and the provincial Governors should not, however, be allowed to carry large establishments with them. Much work can be easily done without the help of the persons composing the retinue by the use of the telegraphic wires. The people of Madras are complaining not of the annual sojourn of their Governor, but of the migration to the hills of military and other public departments for the convenience of their heads, which cause an increase in the public charges. The Jáme fully sympathises with the people of Madras in this matter, but adds that they will be committing a great mistake if they think that they will lessen the burden on the Government treasury by preventing the sojourn of their Governors to the hills. If they succeed in the present agitation they will certainly profit in one respect, but they will get instead of clever statesmen third-rate, needy politicians as their Governors. They will thus verify the adage that the change from King Log to King Stork made no improvement. [The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the same date would like to see the present system of the annual migration to the hills discontinued or greatly altered. It however disapproves of the suggestion made by some of the Anglo-Indian papers of Calcutta to the local Defence Association to convene a public meeting and enter a protest against the migration to the hills. The Association was started with a view to defend the interests of Europeans residing in India at the time of the recent Ilbert Bill controversy. Looking to the work that the Association has done, which is opposed to the interests of Natives and which disparages the noble policy of the administration of Lord Ripon, the Natives should have nothing whatever to do with it. The Association should only act in this agitation in the name of Europeans. Natives cannot and should not join it. When Natives hold aloof from it, it cannot act in the name of the public and its representations will not carry weight.]

Disapproves of the amended rules for giving State grants to charitable dispensaries and hospitals.

The Rást Goftár (113) of the 8th June refers to the publication of the amended rules for giving State grants to charitable dispensaries, and observes that the rules, though improved, will not give much encouragement to private charity. The grant promised is very trifling. It cannot be understood why Government should not defray half the cost of constructing charitable dispensaries and hospitals as it did formerly. There would not have been so many charitable institutions in existence now had not Government borne half their cost. It is the duty of the rich to build dispensaries and hospitals, but is it not also the duty of Government to provide these comforts for the suffering public? If this duty be shared between the benevolent public and the Government, there will be an increase in the number of persons disposed to practise charity.

Expresses satisfaction with the nomination of Mr. Forbes Adam as an additional member of the Bombay Legislative Council.

The Bombay Chronicle (79) of 8th June says:—The appointment of Mr. Forbes Adam to represent the mercantile community in the local Legislative Council is very wise on the part of the Governor. Mr. Adam's presence in the Council will be an element of strength to Government and a source of satisfaction to the non-official public. It is needless to say that Mr. Adam has already shown himself worthy to be the representative of the natives of this city and presidency quite as much as of his own countrymen. His talents and moderation promise to make him a success in the important sphere in which he is called upon by the representative of the Crown to act. [The Rást Goftár (113) of the same date says that the Governor could not have made a better choice to represent the mercantile public of Bombay. Mr. Adam promises to be a successful councillor, because in addition to the influence which he possesses among the European community he enjoys the confidence of the Natives. The Goftár congratulates him for the honour done to him and the opportunity afforded for proving useful to the public. The Gujaráti (99) of the same date says that the appointment is pronounced satisfactory from all quarters. It praises the services rendered by the Honourable Mr. Macaulay and regrets that he cannot be re-appointed. It hopes that Mr. Adam will prove as independent as his predecessor and supply the want felt in the Native public by the retirement of Mr. Macaulay. He will thereby earn their gratitude. The Yajdán Parast (126) of the same date would prefer to wait before pronouncing any opinion, for Mr. Adam's conduct in connection with the Ilbert Bill has displeased many Natives. It remains to be seen whether he will be led away by the pride of caste or caste distinctions, or act with independence when questions relating to the interests of Europeans and Natives come before the Council. The figure he has cut as Chairman of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce gives a high opinion of his ability and activity.]

Strongly disapproves of the free grant of a plot of Government ground for building a new church in place of the Trinity Church situate at Sonápur, Bombay, and requests Sir James Fergusson to abstain from so doing.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 12th June refers to the statement that Sir James Fergusson has promised to make a free gift of a plot of Government ground for building a new church in place of the Trinity Church situated at Sonápur and of Rs. 16,000 from the public treasury for building a church at Parel, and remarks that Sir James has, during his career as Governor of Bombay, liberally given away plots of Government ground and thousands of rupees from the Government treasury for erecting Christian churches. If the statement regarding the grant of land for the Trinity Church be true, the Native public of Bombay ought to make a strong protest against the unjust appropriation of public money. It does not matter if those who at present resort to the Trinity Church for worship wish to pass themselves off as Europeans, but when the church has a large fund of its own why should Government ground be given away? If Sir James is very much devoted to his religion he can build out of his own large income many churches; but it is his sacred duty as the guardian of the public purse that public funds and property should not be given away for the benefit of a handful of people. Why should he not make a similar grant for either Pársi, Hindu, or Mahomedan places of worship? Is Sir James going to encourage those who pass themselves off as "white sáhebs" in their hatred against the Natives? Natives ought not to put up with this injustice for a moment. Sir James' religious zeal has now so much gone beyond bounds that endeavours should be made to check it. It is the duty of the Bombay Branch of the East India Association to memorialize the Secretary of State for India on the subject. The memorial will have some effect now, when the feeling in England is excited against the extravagant expenditure incurred from the Indian treasury for the Christian church establishment in this country through the exertions of Mr. Baxter. Sir James Fergusson's devotion to his religion is honourable to him, but where justice is concerned the Jáme is obliged to speak out fearlessly. It is to be hoped that Sir James Fergusson will keep in mind the interests of the people committed to his charge and think well before making a free gift of public ground and public funds.

Disapproves of the extension of the Factory Act to small factories in Bombay and suggests its extension to the traffic department of railways.

The Rást Goftár (113) of the 8th June, in an article headed "Over-worked Mill-hands," says that it appears from the local Times that Government propose to appoint a commission to consider the advisability of extending the provisions of the Factory Act to the several small factories which are at present not included under the Act. There is no necessity whatever for bringing small factories under the operation of this Act. The small factories have been purposely not included under the Act, for the industries carried on in them are in an infant state. The harm resulting from the exclusion of these factories from the operation of the Act must be little, if any; but if it is worked with severity there is a risk of the rising industries being nipped in the bud. It is feared that the Act as it stands affords very little protection to children. Government should enforce it strictly in the case of large factories. The Act is unable to afford relief to labourers in large factories from the oppression exercised on them in the shape of exacting work from them from 12 to 14 hours a day. It should be made applicable to grown-up labourers. Now that Mr. Cotton, the Vice-president of the Bombay Mill-owners' Association, has admitted the exaction of overwork from the mill hands, Government should interfere on behalf of these poor men. The same paper in another article complains of the exaction of overwork from railway servants, and observes that the Factory Act ought to be extended to the traffic department of railways, where it is much needed. The Act ought to be made applicable to men working on railways and docks. Clerks, guards and other railway officials are made to work very hard daily from morning to evening without rest in the week. This work is harder when compared with that which is exacted from prisoners in jails. The condition of guards especially is fearful. It is necessary that the strong hand of the law should intervene and prevent this unbearable oppression. It is not only a question of the comfort of the poor but also that of the safety of the travelling public, for it is no wonder that accidents should increase through the negligence of guards caused by overwork. [The Hitechchhu (81) of Ahmedabad of the 12th June regrets to observe that the Factory Act is not properly enforced in the mofussil as it is in Bombay. It seems to be a general complaint at Ahmedabad that the young boys employed in the local mills are beaten by those who exercise supervision over them. Recently one Ganpat, a supervisor of labourers in the Gujarát Spinning Mill, was fined Rs. 51-8 by the Second Class Magistrate of Daskroi for severely beating one Gulámrasul Lálábhái, a labourer of about 12 or 13 years of age. It is said that a case of assault which took place some time ago in the same spinning mill was compromised. Such cases seldom come to light, for the labourers dare not prosecute those from whom they derive their livelihood. The authorities should take strong measures and should send at least one officer to inspect the mills every eight or ten days with a view to prevent the oppression exercised on helpless mill hands. It is to be hoped that the authorities concerned will speedily attend to this suggestion.]

Strongly disapproves of the A'bkári policy of the Bombay Government.

The Kaiser-i-Hind (106) of the 8th June condemns the notice given to some sellers of country liquor in Bombay that they should cease selling country liquor from August next and that they should instead take out licenses for the sale of European liquor, and says that this is exercising tyranny on the liquor shopkeepers and their Native customers. By this arbitrary act the industry of manufacturing country liquor will suffer greatly. The merchants of Manchester have done injury to the customs revenue by having the duties levied on cotton goods imported into India abolished. In the matter of liquor traffic selfish men are devising plans for the increased consumption of European liquor on the pretext of preventing intoxication among the people of India. This is quite opposed to the policy of the Liberal Ministry and of Lord Ripon. There is no objection to the legitimate increase of Government ábkári revenue. But it is necessary that a cry should be raised against it when an opportunity is taken under the pretext of increasing the revenue of serving other ends or exercising cruelty on the people under the pretext of doing good to them. When such severity is exercised at the close of the career of Sir James Fergusson the people think that it greatly detracts from the merit of his other good acts. The brandy imported into India from England for the use of the poor is proved to be adulterated. To devise plans for compelling the people to use it at a higher price than country liquor is not only throwing an obstacle in the way of an indigenous industry but interfering with the comfort and convenience of the people. It is to be regretted that this should happen during the administration of Sir James Fergusson.

Complains of the severity of the A'bkári Act and of the monopoly enjoyed by maktedárs.

The same newspaper, in an article headed "Tyranny of the A'bkári Act—monopoly to Maktedárs," says that while persons high in office try to earn credit for their reports and recommendations by rigorously working the A'bkári Act, their subordinates get up cases either to win the favour of their superiors, to increase their illegal gains, or to take vengeance on those who may have incurred their displeasure. The maktedár (contractor) is the chief helper in this kind of oppression, for it is his interest to do so. The benefits which the maktedár indirectly gets by securing power and influence in his táluka are much more than those derived from the sale of liquor. He relies on the help of the A'bkári Act and becomes a tyrant over the inhabitants of the district in which he has contracted to sell liquor. He resorts to trivial or false excuses to gain his ends under the cloak of preventing surreptitious manufacture or import of liquor. The British Government strongly opposes and even threatens to make war when the Mahárája of Kashmere or the king of Burma does not abolish monopolies in his State. While here in India the same officials have monopolized the trade in opium and salt, and encouraged monopoly in liquor. What sort of policy is this? The ábkári farmer practises dishonesty and oppression, relying for aid on the authorities and the A'bkári Act. The ábkári officers and the Government also are responsible for the ruin of hundreds of families, the maintenance of which rested on the liquor trade.

Requests the authorities concerned to grant the site at Máhble for erecting buildings to the people of Sangameshvar whose houses were burnt down in the recent fire.

The Bakul (19) of 8th June hopes that the site at Máhble will be granted for erecting buildings to the inhabitants of Sangameshvar whose houses were burnt some time ago. The people are willing to undertake the responsibility of bringing water into Máhble at a cost of Rs. 2,000 if Government should grant this sum to them. The surveyor's estimate for the same project is Rs. 8,000. By accepting the offer of the people a saving of Rs. 6,000 will be made. If Government is not willing to spend the above sum, the inhabitants are ready to sink wells at their own expense provided they are given the spot at Máhble for erecting houses.

Suggests the creation of the post of Honorary Assistant Coroner for the city of Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 13th June suggests the creation of the post of Honorary Assistant Coroner, and remarks that the appointment of young medical men to this office will supply a great want felt in Bombay. The Jáme refers to the delay at present occurring in the holding of inquests, the hasty way in which verdicts are returned by Coroner's juries, the increasing number of accidents from the increase in the number of factories in the city, and advises Government to nominate an Honorary Assistant Coroner for each of the Colába, Fort, Dhobi Taláv, Malabár Hill, Byculla, Parel, Máhim and other wards in the city. Many young doctors will gladly accept these appointments, and thus the present cry against the delay in the holding of inquests and the hasty decisions of juries will be removed. The experiment of having Honorary Assistant Coroners under the superintendence of Dr. Blaney will prove more useful than that of Honorary Assistant Surgeons in hospitals. It is to be hoped that the authorities will pay sufficient attention to this suggestion, for it will prove advantageous to the Government and the public.

Want of a bank at Surat.

The Suryă Prakásh (83) of the 7th June says:—It is very strange that in such a city as Surat there should be no bank. We have often heard people complain that there is a great want of a bank here. There are three spinning mills here and some ginning factories. The people of this place trade very largely in shares and Government promissory notes. The savings' bank only accepts deposits up to the amount of Rs. 500 a year. In such a large city a bank is a necessity, and this want should be supplied. We think that a branch of the Bombay Bank should be established here. The Bombay Bank has branches at Broach, Ahmedabad and several other places and agencies in almost all the most important towns and cities in the Bombay Presidency. If a branch bank is opened here we think it will be remunerative, and will at the same time give every facility to the local mercantile community. We hope the Directors of the Bank of Bombay will give this suggestion their best attention and open a branch here as an experimental measure for a period of three years, and if within this period the branch pays its expenses and earns profit it may be permanently kept here. We are strongly of opinion that it will be a source of profit to the Bank and of convenience to the public.

Complains of the arbitrary conduct of the Bombay police at the Márwádi Bazár.

A correspondent of the Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 10th June says that the police annoy without any cause the Márwádi merchants, shroffs and brokers having their place of business in the Márwádi Bazár at Bombay. On the 4th instant some of the persons passing by the public road in that locality, and some Márwádi and Bania merchants standing on the road for some slight business were arrested by the police, placed before the magistrate and fined. Sir Frank Souter had some time ago on the request of the Márwádi merchants inspected the compound of the new Satta Bazár and ordered that the police had no right to enter the place. Notwithstanding this order, several respectable and rich merchants, shroffs, brokers and passers-by were arrested on the above-mentioned date. Will not Mr. Brewin, the Police Superintendent of the division, do justice to the people residing in his division?

Education.

Suggests the appointment of a technical education commission for India.

The Rást Goftár (113) of the 8th June refers to the report of the Technical Education Commission appointed in England, and says that now that the labours of the Indian Education Commission have ended, a technical education commission similar to the one that has just completed its labours in England should be appointed in India. The rise of India chiefly depends on the development of her arts and industries. It is of primary importance that the children of the soil should receive technical education in preference to the instruction in logic, languages and history. Unfortunately the educational department of this country is quite backward in the discharge of this its most important duty, and with a view to showing the way it is highly necessary that a technical education commission be appointed in this country.

Railways.

Disapproves of the proposal for the utilization of the local funds for the construction of railways in India.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 11th June disapproves of the rapid extension of railways in India, refers to the proposal made in the Times of India for the utilization of local funds for the construction of branch railways, and remarks that it is easy to think that the inhabitants of every village will be benefited by the construction of railways. It is possible on paper that railways may be so constructed as to be at the most six miles distant from every village, but when regard is had to the condition and distance of these villages the project appears to be difficult of attainment. The villages have not been built at certain fixed distances, and hence cannot all be connected by rail. Moreover there would be so many lines of railway, if the project were carried out, that the local funds would be merely swallowed up in the payment of interest for the money spent on their construction. The lines are not likely to prove remunerative. It is also not possible that the district sowkárs will be satisfied with the interest of 4 per cent. The necessity of making cart roads will not entirely cease, notwithstanding the construction of any number of railway lines. When the entire local funds are to be used for constructing railways, how can the legitimate functions of the fund be carried out? The district people will then request to be freed from railways. At present complaints are rife regarding the use of the local funds for purposes foreign to those for which the cess is levied. It is of primary importance that the local funds should be used for their legitimate purposes, that their management should be entrusted in the hands of the public with the necessary independence in accordance with the scheme of local self-government, and that roads, &c., should be first made. If this is done, the public will be greatly benefited and there will be no necessity for resorting to such an objectionable measure as the one now proposed.

Municipalities.

Want of commodious and airy dwellings for the labouring poor of Bombay.

The Jáme Jamshed (103) of the 14th June refers to the suggestions the Committee appointed by the Bombay Municipal Corporation for enquiring into the means of providing airy and comfortable dwellings for the labouring poor of the city intend making to the Corporation, and remarks that the suggestions of the Committee will not make the least improvement in the present wretched condition. It is a work which is out of the sphere of the Corporation. It is the duty of the public, and as long as the public does not undertake it there will not be the least gain. It is the duty of the sethias of Bombay to do their best for improving the miserable condition of the dwellings of the poor. It is the duty of the mill-owners in Bombay to construct spacious and airy chawls in the vicinity of the mill premises for the benefit of their mill hands and to let them at such rates as would not realize any profit. The mill-owners would also benefit themselves thereby. The owners of mills on the Mahálakshmi Flats should specially avail themselves of the advantages that lie before them. But above all, a Poor Men's Dwelling-house Improvement Association ought to be formed for effectively carrying out the much-needed reform. [The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the same date says that the action of the local municipality in this matter will prove satisfactory to all. The municipality should attend more to the convenience and comfort of the poor than the durability and magnificence of the chawls which it intends to build. The chawls should be at the most one storey high and should not be imposing in appearance. Government ought to give free of charge or at a very moderate price the plots of ground required for constructing these chawls. It is necessary that Government should also aid in this good work, which it can well do by giving plots of ground on the above-mentioned terms. If they are thus built with due regard to economy, the labouring poor will not find it difficult to pay the rent of the rooms and the desired noble object will be satisfactorily realized.]

Approves of the resolution of the Bombay Government on the subject of the electric lights at Surat and Broach, and advises Government to decide the question of putting a stop to the electric lights at Surat.

The Bombay Samáchár (89) of the 10th June is glad that the Bombay Government, in a resolution dated 26th April last, have expressed their regret at the municipalities of Broach and Surat having spent a large amount of money on the introduction of electric lights as an experimental measure in these two cities instead of supplying other things which were necessary. But it would have been better if Government had expressed their views more strongly than they have done. The objectionable step regarding the introduction of electric lights was, it is true, taken by these municipalities; but it was owing to the Collector-presidents and the whims and obstinacy of the commissioners who supported them. Many of the elected commissioners had strongly opposed the measure and they should therefore be considered free from blame. When Government hold the same views on this subject as those held by the people living in the districts, the former ought not to have merely expressed their regret, but should have issued strict instructions to the municipalities, or properly speaking their Collector-presidents, that as long as other works of primary importance were not carried out or the financial position of the municipalities improved, such works of luxury as electric lights should not be undertaken. Though the Electric Light Company have closed its business at Surat, it is astonishing that the Collector-president and his supporters should think of purchasing the plant of the company and of continuing the lights. This contemplated action of the Surat officials in spite of the continued objection and disapproval of the public and their representatives in the municipal board is lamentable. The elected members of the Surat Municipal Board have sent a petition to the Bombay Government in connection with the high-handedness of the Collector-president towards them. It would be better if the Bombay Government were to decide the question of putting a stop to electric lighting along with the subject-matter of the petition, which has also arisen out of the same question. [The Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 8th June expresses similar sentiments.]

Native States.

Complains of Major Nutt having advanced his favourites in the service of the Gondal State without due cause.

The Gujarát Mitrá (80) of the 8th June, in an article headed "Gondal matters for the attention of the Government," alludes to the khatpat carried on in the Gondal State by some intriguers during the career of Major Nutt and reported from its issue of the 11th May last at pages 15-16 of the Report on Native Papers for the week ending 17th May 1884, and says that the decision given by Major

Nutt in the case of Chanduri Ughalávdar was signed "under protest" by Mr. Jayáshankar, the late Native Joint Administrator of Gondal. As the decision could not be registered, some of the intriguers had either the last portion of the document altered and then got it signed by Major Nutt and Mr. Jayáshankar, or forged their signatures to it. The decision was then registered. The Mitră hears that not only was the Gujaráti minute against the decision of Major Nutt penned on one occasion by Mr. Jayáshankar rejected, but the entire correspondence connected with it has disappeared. This is a great injury to the interests of the Gondal State. The Mitră thinks that this fact will be proved by the inspection of the outward and inward correspondence files of the various departments of the Gondal State. Such an impartial Political Agent as Colonel West will not, it is hoped, fail to enquire into the matter. It is also to be hoped that the Bombay Government will not allow to pass unnoticed such a flagrant deed perpetrated during the minority of the Thákor, but speedily enquire into it. The Mitră disapproves of the appointment of Mr. Jayáshankar to the new post of treasury officer to the State on the large salary of Rs. 600 per month, of the compulsory resignation of Mr. Manohar Sakhárám, the Revenue Commissioner of the State, who had rendered valuable services for a period of 14 years, publishes the correspondence regarding the resignation, and remarks that it will show how novel is the conduct of Major Nutt, how some of the subordinate officers succeed in misleading him, how flattering and selfish Native officials achieve triumph over frank-hearted British officers, and how able and well-known officers are treated. Will Colonel West and Sir James Fergusson connive at such iniquity? The Mitră keeps over some important instances for a future issue, waiting in the meantime to see what action Government takes in the case of Chanduri and that of the Revenue Commissioner.

Berár Affairs.

Says that the municipalities and the district officers in Berár should take special steps for the destruction of venomous serpents and other animals.

With reference to the annual statement showing the results of the measures adopted in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts for the destruction of wild animals and venomous snakes during the year 1883, together with a memorandum by the Commissioner of the province and a resolution thereon by the Resident, the Pramod Sindhu (13) of the 9th June remarks:—If the wolves are more destructive than other wild animals, we think Government should adopt some stringent measures to extirpate them. The Commissioner consulted the Deputy Commissioners on this point, and from their reports he is inclined to believe that the complete extermination of these animals is quite within the range of possibility. What means the Deputy Commissioners suggested we are not told. However, from the Resident's review, we learn that Government wish to utilise the services of Phánsi Párdis or such other roaming tribes for this purpose. In the Resident's opinion they will not be useful only in destroying wolves but also venomous snakes. The Amráoti District is notorious for the abundance of snakes. We cannot assign any particular reason for this. The Commissioner is also unable to account for this. The number of cattle killed in the Buldana District is strikingly small. The accuracy of the returns is doubtful. We hope the Berár Government will do their best to adopt some special means to destroy these wicked reptiles. Some system was introduced in the North-West Provinces and Oudh for the destruction of venomous snakes, upon which the Government of India passed a resolution in the Home Department and communicated it to this Government with a view that similar measures might be adopted for the destruction of snakes. But we learn from the report that some of our municipalities took no action in the matter. The authorities should make the municipalities and district officers take special measures for the systematic destruction of snakes. Unless this is done we believe there will be no considerable reduction in their number. In connection with this matter we humbly recommend that Government should be more liberal than it has been of late in granting the public licenses for the possession of arms, as they would greatly, and we believe more effectually than any other measures, contribute to the destruction of wild animals and venomous reptiles. We are aware that at the suggestion of the Government of India the authorities here have recently freely granted licenses for arms to those who asked for them. Yet we think if the wishes of the Government be made known generally in villages and towns more applications for arms will be forthcoming from those who at present hold back and hesitate to apply for arms because they fear their requests may not be granted, although such people would be in a position to contribute for the destruction of wild animals if they possessed arms.

Concession of the right of municipal franchise to the municipalities of Akola and Umráwati.

With reference to the concession of the right of electing municipal commissioners by the rate-payers, the same newspaper observes that in answer to the petitions of the inhabitants of Akola and Umráwati the Resident expressed his willingness to concede the privilege, but there the question has rested and unfortunately no further action has as yet been taken in the matter. The Pramod Sindhu trusts that the Resident will before long order the preparation of the rules and regulations for giving effect to the policy of the Government of India regarding local self-government, and after causing them to be translated in the vernacular languages invite an expression of the opinions of the people on them before finally passing them.

G. W. KURKARAY,
Reporter on the Native Press.

New Secretariat, Bombay,
Office of the Reporter on the Native Press,
18*th June* 1884.

INDEX.

Page.

PART I.—Politics and the Public Administration—

A'bkári:
  Complaint regarding the severity of the — Act and of the monopoly enjoyed by maktedárs 16
  Disapproval of the — policy of the Bombay Government ... 16
Administration of India: Expression of opinion that the rulers of India should act towards their Native subjects with sincerity and justice... 6
Advance of Russia in Central Asia:
  Approval of the demarcation of the frontier of Afghanistan beyond which the Russians should not be allowed to encroach ... 8
  Reflections on the— 9
Annual visits of the Viceroys and Provincial Governors to the hills: Remarks in connection with the—... 13
Bank at Surat: Want of a— 17
Bombay Legislative Council: Expression of satisfaction with the nomination of Mr. Forbes Adam as an additional member of the— ... 14
British naval armaments: Injustice of making India only pay a portion of the expenses for the maintenance of the— 9
Civil Service of India:
  Difference in treatment accorded by the Home Government to the inhabitants of India and those of Ceylon in the matter of the disestablishment of the Anglican church in India and of the— ... 10
  Expression of opinion that the recommendations of Lord Lytton regarding the admission of Natives into the — are the only true solutions of that question 10
  Prayer for the abolition of the Statutory Civil Service and for the holding of the examination for the — simultaneously in England and India 13
  Reflections on the question of the limit of age of the candidates for the— 12
Factory Act: Disapproval of the extension of the — to small factories in Bombay and suggestion for its extension to the traffic department of railways... 15
Fire at Sangameshvar: Request to the authorities concerned to grant the site at Máhble for erecting buildings to the people of Sangameshvar whose houses were burnt down in the recent— ... 17
